It will be a part of the business and the job of this Congress to answer that question and to answer it right; to determine what is an adequate old-age pension, and then to have courage enough to write that kind of a pension into the bill. It will be a part of the task of this Congress to determine what is the best method of financing that old-age pension, and then to have courage enough to write that method of financing into the bill.

Mr. Chairman, we have before us the most tremendous, the most far-reaching, the most important task that I believe has ever been before this Congress. I hope that all Members will enter into it with a serious, a studious, and an open mind; that they will put aside all partisan consideration; that they will allow the procedure on this bill to be just as open and free as possible, all to the end that before this Congress adjourns we may give to the old people of this country a just and an adequate old-age pension that will permit them to retire for the remainder of their lives in decency and in comfort and in happiness, and which will allow the real work of modern industry to be carried on by those who are young enough to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill is not the result of any activity on the part of a Dr. Townsend or a Dr. Pope or an advocate from down in Kansas who has been letting us hear from him for several years, or the activity of any one individual. It is the result of a wide-spread conviction on the part of most of the Members of Congress that there should be such relief granted to the aged men and women of America. It has been growing in the Congress of the United States for many years.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that 85 percent of the Membership of this House are strongly and sincerely in favor of an old-age pension. It would have been passed several years ago if we could have led our administrations to believe that it would be financed. This bill, in my judgment, would be passed by this Congress if there had never lived a man by the name of Townsend.

In the last Congress we had this question actively before us on the floor, in the cloakrooms, and in our offices. The President of the United States last year, before the Congress adjourned in June, told the Congress that while at that time he could not approve such a bill, he would expect us to pass a proper old-age pension and a proper unemployment-insurance bill in this session, when the Government would be ready to finance it, and he said he would approve it.

That was one of the first messages he sent to this Congress after we met, and he is going to sign a proper bill. And he will sign this bill, if we do not wreck it with amendments.

The great Ways and Means Committee of this House deserves the commendation of the people of the United States for the fair and impartial manner in which they have conducted hearings, the sympathetic view from which they have approached this bill, and the efforts they have put forth in bringing a proper bill before this House, a bill that can be financed.

I wish to say to my colleagues in all earnestness I believe that every friend of old-age pensions on the floor of this House, if he desires a bill passed in this session and become a law so that relief will be granted the aged people, should get behind this committee bill and pass it without a single amendment. We know it will be approved and signed by the President. We know that it will become law.

There are 435 Members of this House when every district is represented. All of us are different—different in every way; different in our viewpoints and our physiognomies and our constituencies. We cannot expect all of us to think alike on a proposition. Naturally you will have many amendments offered from the floor, embracing every angle of thought. What are you going to do with them all?

There are some Members here who would pass the original Townsend plan to pay $200 per month to all persons over 60 years of age, which would cost the Government $24,000,000,000 annually, or $20,300,000,000 more than our entire revenues our Government received last year from all sources of taxation. Then there are some who prefer the revised and amended Townsend plan, which they say would pay only $50 per month.

Then there are some Members who would make the age limit 55 years, and even some, possibly, who would like to see the pensionable age limit begin at 50 years. None of us can have our own way. We must find out what a majority of the Membership want and are willing to do and then all get together on that, for only such a plan can pass, for it takes a majority of those voting in this House to pass any measure.

It is quite amusing now to remember the history of the mutations through which the Townsend plan has undergone. At first a mailed-fist demand was made on this Congress that all Members would be defeated for office and crucified in the next election if we did not pass it just as it was proposed, to pay $200 per month to every person in the United States who was 60 years of age or over.

I was the first Member of this House to take the floor, which I did on January 21, 1935, to explain that such a proposal was financially impossible, and that if passed it would bankrupt and wreck the Government. You will remember that I was deluged with threats from all parts of the United States, because I refused to deceive the aged men and women into believing that such a plan was possible.

Since then, Mr. Chairman, Dr. Townsend himself has realized and admitted that his plan was unsound, because he has now changed it, and it was amusing to hear the gentleman from Oregon explaining that under the revised and amended Townsend plan, it is now expected that not over $50 per month will be paid, which is only one-fourth of what he originally proposed.

It is not a question of how much we would all like to see aged men and women receive for their support, but it is a question of how much this Government is financially able to pay without bankrupting it, and how much is a wise and salutary sum to pay, considering the matter from the standpoint and best interests of the American people as a whole.

From the minstrel show exhibited for 40 minutes this morning from across the aisle, with the seasoned interlocutor propounding his prepared questions to the hilarious end men, it is very evident that we are not going to have any constructive help from the minority. All we could get out of our friend from New Jersey was that if the Republicans were in power they would balance the Budget. Has he forgotten that during the 4 years of Herbert Hoover there was a deficit of $4,000,000,000 or an annual average deficit of $1,000,000,000 per year for each of those wasteful 4 years?

We Democrats have across the aisle among our Republican colleagues some delightful companions and splendid gentlemen. The great, able, distinguished minority leader of this House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], is doing the best he can with what he has got. [Laughter.]

It does not behoove any of the few Republican colleagues who sit across the aisle here to condemn our House administration for bringing in a rule that gives the Membership 20 hours' debate, when in the whole history of their party they have never brought a bill to the floor of this House yet which gave as much as 20 hours' debate on any subject. Plenty of time for debate is an unusual thing with the Republicans. This rule gives every Member of this House, new Members and old Members alike, an opportunity to get on this floor and express themselves on this measure, something to which they are entitled. The Republicans here ought not to complain.

I was amused this morning at the Old Guard—and they were all here. There was the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from New York; there was the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], acting as the specially prepared interlocutor; there were the end men, the witty gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] and our other good friend from Massachusetts.

They had active helpers in the shape of our good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]; our good friends from Michigan [Mr. MAPES and Mr. MICHENER], and our distinguished friend from New York [Mr. TABER]—oh, we had the Old Guard all here, 27 of them in number. What were they doing? I am sorry our friend from Massachusetts forced that division here on his motion to rise, and showed just how few Republicans were on the floor when a bill of such tremendous importance was before the country. He forced a division, and it disclosed there were just 27 Republicans on the floor.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield in a minute.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will not the gentleman yield right now?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, I cannot do it now. Twenty-seven of them! It went into the RECORD; he forced it. They were all loyal; every Republican here was loyal; they got up and voted with our good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], their straw-boss leader. They all voted with him that the Committee rise. It was a solid Republican vote.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. BLANTON. In a minute. I am sorry I cannot yield now. Mr. Chairman, especially the assistant minority leader ought to conform to the rules, particularly when he comes from so great a Commonwealth as Massachusetts.

Of the 75 years following 1860 the gentleman's party, the Republican Party, was in absolute control of the United States Government for 57 years, when it could have passed any legislation it wanted, yet not once did it propose an old-age pension.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a point of order; what is the subject before the House?

Mr. BLANTON. Do not take this Republican interference out of my time, Mr. Chairman. I do not yield for inquiries.

The CHAIRMAN. The subject before the House is the social-security bill, on which the gentleman from Texas has been recognized.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that the gentleman is supposed to confine himself to the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not stating a point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman should proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am proceeding in order. I know the rules. I will conform to the rules, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman cannot teach me anything about the rules.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The gentleman is discussing the same thing the gentleman from New Jersey discussed.

Mr. BLANTON. I am discussing the old-age-pension bill, and the attitude of Republican colleagues toward it.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The same subject the gentleman from New Jersey discussed.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's Republican Party for 57 long years was in complete control of the United States Government, but they had no sympathy for the subject of old-age pensions; they had no time for it; they did not want it discussed. They never brought in a bill to grant old-age pensions during the 57 years they had the United States Senate, the House of Representatives, and the White House under their control and domination.

When did the gentleman's Republican Party during that 57 years bring in a bill here for old-age pensions? When did they ever propose such a bill? When did they ever speak for such a bill? Why, about 10 years ago our good Democratic colleague from New York [Mr. SIROVICH], made an hour's speech from this floor advocating old-age pensions, and the movement has been growing ever since.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, I have only 2 minutes. When have the Republicans been interested in unemployment insurance? When have they been interested in social-security legislation?

They cannot stand it; they cannot take it when we propose these things. They do not like it. Our good friends over there across the aisle remind me of a little incident that happened out in Arizona many years ago when our former colleague and the now distinguished United States Senator

[CARL HAYDEN], used to be sheriff out there in Arizona. There was a high-toned forger who went from New York to Arizona and got to operating out there and Carl arrested him and put him in jail. Carl had a Chinaman who used to feed the prisoners. This high-toned forger was used to having his meals served in his room by special waiters in the Waldorf-Astoria, and was used to being paid special attention. This Chinaman took him his dinner one day. He had a great big hunk of corn bread on a tin plate, and another hunk of sow belly, and a big tin cup full of black coffee. The Chinaman handed it in to him but this high-toned forger pushed it away and said, "Take it away; I do not want it." The Chinaman looked at him grinning and smiling and said: "You no likee? Alle light, me takee away, but by-and-by maybe so you likee."

Now, by-and-by when you get [laughter]—by-and-by when you Republicans get used to the present Democratic Party with Franklin D. Roosevelt in the White House passing social-security legislation, unemployment-insurance legislation, and old-age pensions, by-and-by maybe so you likee. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL].

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a letter I received from President Green of the American Federation of Labor and a letter from the secretary of the Technotax Society.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman and Members, in the ancient days the barbarians descended on the civilized races, constantly adding to their harrassment and in some instances conquering the existing governments. In our civilized age the barbarians of monopoly have descended upon the people and, through the use of the machine, have virtually enslaved the workers of the principal civilized nations of the world.

Our Nation was prostrate in 1932 and in the ardent hope that the new deal would bring surcease in these distressing conditions we were given power and are now charged with a solemn responsibility to those who thus expressed their confidence in our President and in our party. While I admit that from the standpoint of academics I may not be equal to the least among us, yet, from the standpoint of practical experience, I yield to no one in my observation and understanding of the problems which beset us.

In the game of the new deal, it is my opinion that our leadership has been drawing to too many deuces, and in several instances jacks, and that we have actually discarded ace legislation which would have solved our economic problems long ago, had it been adopted. I doubt if there is any individual in the Congress who is so partisan that he would like to see the new deal fail, even though many of us do differ on the modus operandi of attaining recovery.

The "technotax" is the ace in the new deal. We must tax the machines according to the number of workers they displace.

I will mention only a few of the thousands of instances which prove conclusively that the machine is adding to our unemployment situation, a situation which can never be satisfactorily and permanently corrected under the present new-deal procedure.

For instance, we have the steam shovel, which displaces the labor of from 25 to 50 men. We have the glass-manufacturing machine, which displaces hundreds of men. We have the vitaphone, which displaces thousands of musicians. We have television, which, ere long, may displace even the movies. We have modern machinery in the steel industry whereby one machine will do the work of numbers of men. We have a machine which cleans poultry, and which displaces at least 50 percent of the men and women formerly engaged in such industry. We have, in process of manufacture, a mechanical cotton picker, and one of these machines will displace a hundred workers. We have, in process of development, a machine which will revolutionize the manufacture of shoes, and a telegraphic linotype machine, which will not only displace telegraph operators but linotype operators as well. To be more specific, a message may be transmitted here in the city of Washington by the members of the press, and the same message may be reproduced simultaneously on hundreds of linotype machines throughout the country.

These are only a few of the many instances where labor is being displaced by machinery—but they are enough to prove that the solution of the machine problem is of paramount importance if we are to have permanent recovery and abolish unemployment.

I will mention further only two specific illustrations of machine displacement of man power, which I wish particularly to call to the attention of the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means with the hope that he will carefully consider them. In one instance known to me a machine was installed at Torrence, Calif., in the steel mill. With this machine 1 man was enabled to perform the same amount of work as was formerly done by 4 men. In other words, the installation of this machine put 3 men on the unemployment list who were formerly earning $16 per day and the purchasing power of these 3 workers was thus reduced a total of $48 per day. It should be borne in mind that the price of steel was not reduced to the consumer because of the installation of this machine.

In another instance, in a poultry plant, 50 percent of the employees were released when a machine was installed which cleaned the chickens, ducks, geese, and so forth. The price of poultry, however, was not reduced to the consumer. At this particular plant to which I refer fully 50 men and women were released and thrown into the ranks of the unemployed.

These situations can be multiplied throughout the United States for every type of labor-displacing machine.

Now, what happens? The workers who are displaced by these machines walk the streets, seeking other employment in a field which, because of the machine, is increasingly restricted. Even in the days of the most prosperous era of our Government the displacement of human labor by the machine was taking place, so that in the period from 1917 to 1929, although we were in the heyday of prosperity, the number of the unemployed increased by approximately 1,000,000 persons, thus evidencing the fact that mass production and the modern machine are responsible for our unemployment situation.

Production in the United States, as we all know, is highly specialized and is a testimonial to American efficiency. Distribution, however, has fallen down and it is with distribution that we are most concerned. Unless we solve this problem of distribution, all our efforts in the new deal will fail.

The difficulty today is that the machine has taken profits to itself in the production of commodities to an alarming extent. These profits are centralized in the hands of a few; they are not used for consumption purposes but for investment, either at home or abroad. It is self-evident that the individuals who control the financial structure of America also control the machine and its profits, with the unfortunate result that the plight of the unemployed, and even those employed, becomes increasingly desperate because of the fact that they do not have an adequate means for consumption—that is, purchasing power.

If this situation were the only one with which we had to contend, it could be more easily remedied, but we have in addition another condition which operates in the interest of the financier, who is the machine owner. It is obvious that those who are thrown into enforced unemployment, as are the millions today, cannot be permitted to starve. Some means of sustenance must be provided for them, and lo and behold, what do we find? We find that the financiers and machine owners, who have built up their wealth through mass and machine production, are now called upon by the Government to invest in tax-exempt securities, which they freely do, so that the necessary funds may be obtained to enable the Government to extend the crumb of relief to the unfortunate unemployed who are victims of the octopus owned and controlled by these very financiers.

As I explained a moment ago, the steel manufacturer who installs a machine which displaces three men profits to the extent of $48 per day in wages, and is thus in a position to use these accumulated savings to lend to the Government, through the medium of tax-exempt securities, so that the Government may extend work relief to the unfortunate individuals who lost their jobs because the steel manufacturer put in a labor-saving machine.

To be more specific, the steel manufacturer profits, going and coming. While the number of our unemployed continues to increase and those who are employed have their living standards reduced, the steel manufacturer gains $48 per day profit for each machine, and then lends this money to the Government, exempting his wealth from taxation and at the same time receiving substantial interest payments. How long can we, as a people, permit the candle to burn at both ends, with all the benefits and profits going to the owner or controller of the financial and machine structure?

Of course, it is recognized that we must have the machine. It is also recognized that the inventor of the machine is entitled to compensation and also that the owner of the machine is entitled to a return on his investment; but surely no one will contend that when a machine owner installs a machine which displaces three men and thus saves himself $48 per day he is entitled to this entire profit.

I have introduced House Joint Resolution 45, which has for its objective a thorough study and analysis of man-displacement by machines, with a view to imposing a graduated tax on mass production, machines, and equipment, based on the number of workers thus displaced. Funds derived from this taxation are to be applied exclusively to public improvements in order to give employment to those who have been displaced by the mass-production machine. If this were done, industry itself would bear the burden of the unemployment situation, as it should, and the taxpayer would be spared taxation for this purpose.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. LUCKEY. If the labor-saving devices used in the manufacturing of automobiles were taxed, what effect would it have on the price of the automobile to the average person on the street?

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman apparently did not understand my statement, that I have introduced a resolution asking that an investigation be made of the displacement of man power by machinery and the social and economic consequences thereof, with a view to formulating such legislation as may be shown to be necessary to combat the situation. The gentleman's question would come in for thorough consideration and study in connection with the presentation of specific tax legislation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOEPPEL. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have a tractor on my farm. Would the gentleman tax this tractor because I can do more work with it?

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman must understand that the details of the technotax have not been worked out, and cannot be until the necessary information called for in my resolution is available. I am merely presenting the idea for consideration, study, and eventual enactment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it practical, I mean? Does the gentleman's idea go so far that he would tax the tractor used by the farmer?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Although, as I have stated, the information necessary to the formulation of a definite plan of taxation on the principle of the technotax is not available, it appears to me that the tax should first be applied on the products of manufacture which enter into interstate commerce. I would get the big boys first.

Mr. HOFFMAN. First the gentleman would tax the manufacturer of the machine and then he would tax the tractor.

Mr. HOEPPEL. I am not discussing the details of the tax feature now. I have introduced a resolution which would authorize a study of the question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thought the gentleman had some concrete plan worked out.

Mr. HOEPPEL. My first objective, as indicated in my resolution, to which I invite the gentleman's attention, is to secure a study of this question.

The technotax, as I have explained, would distribute the benefits of the machine to the inventor, to the owner, and to the unemployed, and would positively prevent the rapid accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few. In my opinion, it is the fairest and squarest means of distributing the profits of labor to those who are engaged in labor, or who are displaced because of the labor-saving machine. We cannot continue to bury our heads, like the ostrich, and refuse to recognize the fact that the machine is a Frankenstein monster which has all but devoured us. In this connection, I ask your consideration of a letter received from the executive secretary of the American Technotax Society, Mr. Samuel Bristol. This society recognizes that the menace of mass-production machinery, privately owned, is the crux of our present economic maladjustment.

The letter is as follows:

AMERICAN TECHNOTAX SOCIETY,
Whittier, Calif., April 2, 1935.

HON. JOHN H. HOEPPEL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In behalf of the American Technotax Society I wish to assure you of our hearty approval of your efforts to secure the unemployment survey, as contained in your resolution introduced in Congress on January 3 last. It is our hope that you will be able to win for it the support of every Member of the Seventy-fourth Congress, without regard to party affiliation.

In further explanation of the Technotax plan of graduated taxes upon labor-saving machinery, permit me to add a few thoughts that may shed further light upon the problems involved.

It is apparent that an uncontrolled force is at work in America nullifying the recovery efforts of the Government and defeating the reemployment program. The testimony comes from two authoritative sources, namely, Gen. Hugh Johnson, recently resigned N. R. A. Administrator, and William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

Writing in the Saturday Evening Post on January 19, General Johnson declared that the industrial codes in 1933 secured reemployment for 2,785,000 workers in industry. Yet Mr. Green in his booklet The Thirty Hour Week, published in January 1935, reveals figures showing that unemployment has actually increased by 429,000 men during the past year.

It, therefore, appears that in spite of favorable trade indexes throughout the country we are slipping backward in the matter of employment, which all agree is the real measure of recovery. When the employment curve falls at the same time that production rises, the situation calls for a different type of economic thinking—and possibly the discarding of certain outworn theories.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics admits that comparatively little is known about the extent or duration of technological unemployment. Similar testimony comes from Brookings Institution and other research agencies. Is it possible that the Federal administration does not deem this a factor worth considering?

The Technotax Society maintains that the uncontrollable factor which is disrupting America's economic life is mass-production machinery privately owned and regulated only by the profit motive. We believe that until the Federal Government attempts an analysis of the forces that are creating wholesale unemployment, no progress can be made along the difficult pathway toward economic recovery.

We urge that graduated taxes be levied upon the output of labor-saving machinery to raise revenues with which to carry on the burdens of unemployment relief and to extend the program of needed public works. Taxes upon the production of machines will lift the relief burdens off the shoulders of general-property taxpayers and enable us to balance the budget by paying as we go. Technotax rates, graduated according to the workers displaced by each machine, will save the Government from financial collapse, and stabilize business by putting reasonable controls upon the present uncontrolled and dangerous displacement of workers by machinery. Machine taxation will not stop progress, but will enable our people to enjoy a fairer share of the benefits which machine production have made possible.

If the Federal administration desires new light upon the critical unemployment problem, it seems to me that the survey of machine-created unemployment which your resolution provides is indispensable. The time for experimentation is past. If recovery is to be accomplished, the Government will have to proceed with assurance along paths definitely charted by incontrovertible facts. For these reasons I am convinced that your proposed survey is the most effective step yet offered as a solution for unemployment and its resultant ills.

The Technotax Society is grateful to you for your efforts in this matter and we again pledge you our support in this great, constructive program. With kindest regards and best wishes for your success in these endeavors, I am,

Sincerely yours,

SAMUEL BRISTOL,
Executive Secretary.

The American Federation of Labor, which is seeking to establish a 30-hour week, is fully conscious of the significance of the displacement of labor by the machine. I ask your attention to a letter received on this subject from the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. William Green, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1935.

Hon. J. H. HOEPPEL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Thank you for your interest in the unemployment problem and in the development of mechanical equipment in industry, as indicated in your letter of December 28.

We are conscious of the fact that constant displacement is going on and wholesale additions are being made to the army of the unemployed. This has been caused by reason of the fact that various men are doing the work which a greater number of men were formerly employed to do. As workers become more efficient through the use of machinery and power, displacement of those now employed goes constantly on. That increases the serious problem of unemployment, which at the moment, either directly or indirectly, affects 40,000,000 people.

Reciprocating your good wishes, I am,

Sincerely Yours,

WM. GREEN, President.

ECONOMIC HEIRLOOMS

In further exposition of the ideas of the technotax, I submit examples of the quaint half-truths and misconceptions of the machine age that are current among economists, newspaper men, legislators, business men, and others, as presented in a pamphlet issued by the American Technotax Society, of Whittier, Calif.:

PROSPERITY IS JUST AROUND THE CORNER

This naive theory has been circulating at intervals since the collapse of December 1929. Its authors have made the wish father to the thought, "Leave business alone and all will be O. K." They overlook the significant fact that mounting unemployment was a feature of the business boom of 1921–29. The curve of production went up, while the curve of employment dropped. Yet the theory lingers on.

PROSPERITY DEMANDS INCREASED WORLD TRADE

One of the many devices by which the economists of big business would restore business and relieve unemployment. They forget that world trade is done with bills of exchange. For each dollar's worth of exports we receive a dollar's worth in imports. But the imported dollar's worth contains two to five times as much labor as the exported one, and American laborers get the worst of the deal. Anything beyond a minimum volume of world trade is a threat to the job of every factory worker and brings him nearer to the wage and living standards of the coolie. America's best market is her employed wage earners.

THIS GLORIOUS MACHINE AGE

The economists of big business with their journalistic hirelings have made a fetish of machine progress. In the name of progress they develop more labor-savers, cut down pay rolls, and try to squeeze dividends out of a surfeited market. This gigantic conspiracy against American labor has brought our unemployed total to 11,000,000. Yet one still finds men with run-down heels and a high polish on the seat of their best trousers repeating with gravity and assurance the philosophy of machine efficiency.

INDUSTRIAL CODES

A well-meaning but ill-advised attempt to force American industrialists to reemploy the workers whom their efficiency experts had eliminated with labor-saving machines. The codes were based upon the unwarranted assumption that the proper way to get men back into industry is to raise wages and shorten hours. The result was new varieties of chiseling, together with increased development of labor-saving machinery and speeding.

AMERICA'S HIGH LIVING STANDARDS

One of the most popular fallacies. Statistics reveal that a large part of the labor force subsists on much less than the income required to maintain a minimum American standard of living.

LEISURE OF THE MACHINE AGE

The production per unit of American workers has increased more than 100 percent in the past 30 years. Yet there are millions still working long hours at starvation wages, while other millions are unemployable. Is it leisure or unemployment?

MACHINES DO NOT DESTROY JOBS, BUT MAKE MORE WORK

One example will show the absurdity of this claim. A steam shovel can be built with 1,000 man-hours of labor. It will replace 25 to 50 men, and in 5 years a total of 250,000 man-hours. The ratio of labor investment to return is 250 to 1—not bad guessing for curbstone economists.

DISCHARGED FACTORY WORKERS FIND OTHER INDUSTRIAL JOBS

Another fallacy. One group of 750 industrial workers displaced by machines was investigated by the labor bureau. Only 55 percent had found steady work in 6 months. Other researches show the same trend.

PROGRESS IN THE MACHINE AGE

A race of dwarfed, tuberculous Lancaster mill workers gives an adequate picture of machine progress in England. America, with half the gold of the world and great mechanical advance, leads the world in crimes, divorces, and suicides. We have no competitors in the stupid inadequancy of our economic distribution. We are breeding a race of cowed, neurotic job-hunters.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF ABUNDANCE

Dreamers picture a world in which power and machines would create abundance for all, with a working day of 2 or 3 hours. What are the facts? Our fuel and mineral resources are being squandered at an unheard-of rate. Natural gas is nearly gone, the last reserves of petroleum are being tapped, anthracite coal is scarce and expensive. Our last great lumber area is rapidly being exhausted, and our consumption of lumber is three times the replacement. Electricity we have—but because of profligate deforestation, dwindling streams supply less than 30 percent of electrical energy, the other 70 percent being obtained from a lessening fuel supply. With the passing of Theodore Roosevelt, conservation has been forgotten. Coming generations can look out for themselves.

THE SELF-SUFFICIENCY OF CAPITALISM

American industry, the pride of our age, is rapidly going the way predicted by Marx and Engels in the Communist Manifesto. Since 1920 labor displacement by machines has been an uncontrollable factor. Efficiency is eliminating the mass of the workers, but it has destroyed their buying power at the same time. Capitalism is proving to be a self-destructive enterprise.

WHAT IS THE ANSWER?

Though conditions are admittedly bad, the Technotax Society believes there is a way out of our economic difficulties. We urge you to lay aside prejudice or bias while you study this plan.

Technotax proposes graduated taxes on the products of labor-saving machinery—graduated by units corresponding in number to the workers displaced by each machine. Thus a 10-man machine would pay 10 units of unemployment relief funds.

Technotax is essentially a revenue measure. From our total of more than $40,000,000,000 worth of manufactures it would raise funds sufficient to take care of the entire public-works program, and extend that program to the point where private industry could take up the unemployment slack.

Technotax will solve our financial woes and create circulation of money by giving buying power to the greatest consumer in the world—the American workingman. It would lift the burden of unemployment relief off the shoulders of general property taxpayers and save the Federal Government from financial collapse. It would enable us to balance the Budget by the simple expedient of paying as we go.

Technotax would gear technological development into time with the needs of the people. It would put free-wheeling and four-wheel brakes on the crazy industrial juggernaut that is threatening ruin to the Nation.

Technotax proposes a nonpartisan commission of the ablest business men and economists to set rates that will reduce unemployment and stabilize business. It does not seek to destroy machinery, but only to make secure for mankind the wonderful contribution which machine production is capable of giving us. It is the alternative to technocracy or communism.

Technotax has been endorsed by Congressmen, leading economists and business leaders as a workable recovery measure. It is in accord with the principles of the new deal. It is based upon proven economic experience.

In my opinion our leading economists appear to have frozen, atrophied, or one-track minds, and cling too closely to established custom and precedent. Many of them seem to think that a mechanized, mass-production industry is an absolute symbol of progress when, in reality, unless properly controlled in the interest of all the people, it personifies greed and stupidity, and adds to the concentration of wealth and to the impoverishment of those who have lost their jobs because of the machine. True it is that, in some instances, the machine has removed the burden of toil from the backs of the workers, but it is equally true that it has contributed more to relieve the laborer of his pocketbook and his family of the necessary food and clothing than any other fetish venerated by our capitalistic class.

In conclusion, may I state that we all recognize that we are in a most serious depression and that the suffering of our people because of this depression is greater than that ever endured in our history during a period of war. If we were confronted with war, the resources of our entire country would be called upon and willingly sacrificed, without stint or favor, in our battle against the enemy. If the health or happiness of our citizens were menaced through pestilence, plague, or other calamity, every facility at hand would be employed to alleviate the distress of our people. Yet here we have in our very midst the octopus of the modern machine which has enslaved our entire Nation and which continues to make millionaires on the one hand and paupers on the other, and notwithstanding the havoc which it has wrought, we as yet have not risen to our responsibilities in the handling of this question.

The machine must be made the servant of all men and not the special servant and wealth builder for the owners alone. The profits of industry must be more equitably distributed among all the people, as they would be under the technotax principle of taxation, and once and for all, we must abolish a system which would bind our people in economic serfdom in the name of progress, and thus destroy the very foundations of our democratic form of government. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I was rather surprised today when I came in here and found the gentleman from Oregon speaking on the bill and admitting that the rule passed the other day, which he had characterized as a gag rule, would permit amendments whereby the various plans that are being offered in the House, particularly the McGroarty-Townsend plan, might be offered as substitute amendments to this bill. It was largely on the philosophy that he developed in opposing that rule that a great many Members voted "no" on the most liberal rule that has ever been presented to this House for the consideration of any bill coming before the House.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad that an open rule permitting amendments was adopted on this bill. I voted for this open rule in order that the new McGroarty bill may be offered as an amendment to section 1 of the bill and be given an opportunity to be discussed on the floor of the House. I shall vote for this amendment when it is offered.

For many years I have been an advocate of an adequate old-age pension. I have always felt, as I do now, that it is a disgrace to send old people to the poorhouse. And it is likewise a disgrace to keep them starving in their homes on an inadequate pension.

I have been hoping, and am still hoping, that this Congress will pass a generous old-age-pension bill at this session, and I believe it will. The bill before us, with its proposal of a Federal contribution limited to $15 per month per person, to be matched by the States is disappointing. The Federal contribution is too small and the age limit of 65 is too high.

When a man or woman of 60 faces the world with no income and no chance of employment, there is, indeed, a tragic situation. Such a person must either become a dependent upon the bounty of relatives or he must accept public relief, and thus become a pauper, suffering all the shame and sense of dishonor that goes with such a state, and that regardless of the fact he may have intelligently and with good advice laid up for his old age; but when this terrible debacle came along in 1929, followed by the depression, literally hundreds of thousands of prudent and saving elderly people in the United States were deprived of the means that they had laid aside and had worked hard for in order to protect them in their old age. I do not hesitate to say that this is due to the economic system that we have permitted to exist, and that it is nothing short of diabolical.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman may mention this later in his statement, but I wonder if he will be good enough to refer to the other provisions of the new McGroarty bill, explaining its broadened tax base and its various administrative features?

Mr. FORD of California. I do not care to go into that phase of it at this time. The broadening of the base is because they have added a tax on gifts and inheritances, together with the levying of additional income tax.

Mr. BUCK. Those taxes will not raise any great amount of additional money. But the old bill laid no tax on personal services. Is it not true that they have also added a tax on the wages of every laboring man in the new bill?

Mr. FORD of California. Any sales tax is a tax on the wages or earnings of the consumer.

Mr. BUCK. I mean a direct tax which the employer has to deduct from the wages of the various employees.

The new bill, in section 1, attempts to define a "transaction" as "including the rendering or performance of any service for monetary or other valuable consideration, including all personal service." That is a broader wage tax than we propose in title II. However, I will be glad to develop that in my own time.

Mr. FORD of California. I will be glad to have the gentleman do that.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I am interested in the statement as to how far the rule may extend. Has the gentleman clearly in mind that the so-called "McGroarty bill" is germane as an amendment?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes; but I do not care to discuss that phase of it at this time.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Does the gentleman understand that bill?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. And the gentleman would vote for it?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. If it was finally adopted?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes. I would not state on the floor of this House or anywhere else that I would do something and not do it.

Why leave needy men and women between 60 and 65 in such a plight? Why not face the facts, realize that the problem is one that must be met, and that the obligation is ours?

Whatever else is done in regard to this bill, I hope and pray that the age limit of those eligible to old-age pensions will be fixed at 60. If this is not done, I shall feel that we have failed to face the facts, to meet our obligations, to do our duty.

I think we all feel that something much more drastic than this bill is necessary.

We have done much experimenting in the past 2 years. We have tried, and I think wisely, new measures and new methods. Some have proved disappointing, but most have been in the public interest and have helped to advance recovery.

We have today the opportunity to try another experiment, and a daring one. This is to substitute the revised McGroarty bill for section 1 of the so-called "security bill."

The objection to the Townsend plan, as embodied in the earlier bill, was that it obligated the Federal Treasury to pay out in old-age pensions approximately $24,000,000,000 a year, without any assurance that the money would be available.

However enthusiastic a responsible Member of Congress might be over the thought of the old people of this country being provided with a generous income, to be spent each month, sound reason made him pause. For to vote payments, with grave doubt as to the possibility of being able to make the payments, is unsound. This has been realized by the friends of the new plan and a new bill substituted for the old.

The new McGroarty bill does not obligate the Treasury for one dollar in excess of the funds that shall be collected under its taxing provisions. Should the tax collections provided under it prove to be sufficient to pay to persons over 60 who are eligible under it the sum of $200 a month each, the payments will be made. And I am certain that under these conditions this would be a happier world.

Should, however, the revenues under the bill be less than the amount needed to pay the $200 a month each, then those eligible under the bill would receive a pro rata share of the entire sum collected, less the cost of administration. The Federal Treasury would not be obligated to make up the deficiency. Thus the charge that the wild inflation feared by many Members under the plan would be entirely refuted.

While a transaction tax is a sales tax, even those opposed to such a tax on principle, as a means of raising regular revenue, can accept it as a special tax for a highly social and eminently worthy object.

That the tax money distributed as pensions to be spent each month will put purchasing power in the hands of many consumers, and will thus stimulate business recovery, is a phase of this plan that has been much discussed. It is certainly worth trying.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I wish to compliment the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] on his courageous and correct statement in regard to what the new McGroarty plan does not do.

Old-age security is the problem to which many Congressmen have devoted much thought and research. The facts are that years ago I made speeches in Ohio in favor of old-age pensions. That was back in the early days when the stones were sharp in the path and the brambles thick for those few of us who advocated social legislation such as unemployment insurance and old-age security.

I served during 1930 and 1931 as a member of the Ohio Commission on Unemployment Insurance. As a member of that commission I studied unemployment and unemployment insurance. We recommended unemployment insurance. I signed the majority report making this recommendation and helped draft the model unemployment-insurance bill which was introduced in the General Assembly of Ohio. This "Ohio plan" has now been recognized as a national model.

My purpose today is to speak on the old-age pension phase of the social-security program. Later on I shall speak on unemployment insurance.

President Roosevelt favors old-age pensions. His present program calls for $15 per month to citizens over 65 with the States participating at least on an equal basis. In Congress I have supported President Roosevelt and upheld his leadership. His plan is a step forward. I would go farther. It is not adequate. Furthermore, it does not provide for social security. I want old-age pensions to commence at 60 and from the time the citizen becomes 65 the amount should be increased. Let us commence this social-security program now. Let us provide more adequate old-age security payments than this bill provides in its present form.

The depression brought forth a brood of fantastic plans, schemes, and panaceas to promote recovery, contentment, steady employment, and prosperity. The best known was Dr. F. E. Townsend's first revolving old-age pension plan of $200 a month for each individual of 60 and more. Liberals, like myself, were publicly advocating old-age pensions years before Dr. Townsend announced his plan. Dr. Townsend asserted his plan pointed out the royal road to recovery.

I refer to his first plan, because that is fundamentally different from the plan as now contained in the new McGroarty bill. When these agitators go into Ohio and other States and tell the worthy people we represent, particularly the elderly people, that only slight changes have been made in the new McGroarty bill, they are stating what is not the fact and they know it is not the fact.

Within a year selling Townsend-plan booklets and literature became a leading industry of Long Beach, Calif., and a profitable business for those who sold Townsend-plan booklets at 25 cents each which cost but a fraction of that sum. Then on April 1, 1935, he publicly abandoned his original plan. The original Townsend plan providing $200 per month for all over 60, amounting to about six times the annual revenue of our Government from all taxation, is abandoned by its author and sponsors. H. R. 7154, Mr. MCGROARTY, now supported by Dr. F. E. Townsend and the Townsend leaders, differs fundamentally from the originally announced and much-exploited Townsend plan.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BUCK. Did not the original and first plan call for a 10-percent retail tax?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. BUCK. Then that plan should really be called the first plan, the first McGroarty bill the second plan, and the new McGroarty bill the third plan.

Mr. YOUNG. That is correct.

Mr. BUCK. Has the gentleman any knowledge of how many other revised plans will be introduced?

Mr. YOUNG. This latest plan, as the gentleman from California and I agree, is fundamentally different in character from what these people in our States have been given to understand.

Mr. BUCK. And those of us who stated we disagreed with the second plan, or whatever you may call it, and believed it to be unworkable, have been proven to be correct in our position by the introduction of this new bill.

Mr. YOUNG. That is true. The $200 per month feature has been altogether eliminated from this recently introduced McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154.

This measure provides for the raising of the revenue by increasing inheritance taxes to a small extent, by increasing income taxes and, in addition, by the imposition of a 2-percent sales transaction tax. The size of the monthly payment to elderly individuals depends, under the new McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, which is to be offered as a substitute, I understand, on the amount of money said taxes produce after the cost of administration has been deducted. Of course, this may be very fine for the bureaucrats and the administrators of the plan, but it may not be so good for the elderly people who are dependent. How can we say to the people we represent that we are providing old-age security for them unless we definitely write into the statute laws some minimum as a certain amount that every worthy elderly person of this country will receive?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I have only 10 minutes, but I shall yield once more.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There is not a guaranty in that plan as to the amount they will receive.

Mr. YOUNG. There is no guaranty. Under the recently introduced McGroarty bill, which is the latest Townsend plan, the annuity payment to the elderly people that we represent may go from nothing up. Of course, as a sop and because they have been talking so much about $200 per month, the bill states that in no event shall the payment exceed $200 per month, but everyone knows that after the cost of administration has been deducted, the payment will be but a part of that amount.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I must refuse to yield further, Mr. Chairman.

I urge that a substantial minimum amount be fixed so that there may be real old-age security. Also I urge that the inheritance tax be increased. I have prepared amendments providing these changes. I would strengthen and liberalize the bill.

Every worthy individual 60 years of age or older, who is in needy circumstances, is to receive the pro rata share of the amount obtained. If such person is in receipt of a small income, this is deducted from the annuity paid.

This latest Townsend-plan measure represents a real step forward. It has meritorious features. The original McGroarty bill, H. R. 3977, advocated by many who had not carefully studied its provisions, was loosely drawn and was not practical. It has been definitely discarded by Dr. Townsend. It is unfortunate that overzealous agitators deceived worthy old people and caused them to believe that our Government could readily pay every elderly individual $200 each month. This was cruel and uncalled for.

Present poor-relief systems for the indigent aged are inadequate. In addition they are costly and give no assurance of security. China and India are about the only nations which do not have old-age-security laws. No problem before us is of greater importance than to provide real old-age security for all individuals 60 and older who are citizens of our country.

About 350 years ago, while Elizabeth was Queen, somebody thought of the poorhouse. Since then we have found better ways of doing everything. We have exchanged the quill pen for the fountain pen and printing press; the candle for the electric light; the horse for the railroad, automobile, and airplane. Stage coaches, tallow dips, flintlock muskets are gone never to return. Nevertheless, we still tolerate the poorhouse. We care for our needy aged by methods in vogue in 1588.

After years of depression this problem is particularly acute. Savings of thousands of aged people have been wiped out despite the fact that they providently and thriftily saved for their future. They are destitute. Their sons and daughters, lacking jobs in many instances, cannot help. Younger people and the middle-aged may never be able to accumulate sufficient for their own old age. Certainly they are not able to adequately provide for their aged and infirm parents. This depression, like war, leaves its toll for future generations to pay. The question is, Shall we provide for our aged extravagantly and cruelly in poorhouses, or humanely, economically, and scientifically by old-age pensions?

As Congressman at Large I represent a constituency of 7,000,000 of the finest people living anywhere. Far too many of my people are unemployed and in need. In November 1933 the citizens of Ohio, by an overwhelming vote at a State-wide initiative election, decreed that in Ohio there should be old-age security. This by the largest majority ever recorded on any issue submitted to Ohio voters. The old-age-pension law enacted in Ohio is unjust, unfair, and inadequate. We do not have old-age security. By old-age security I mean adequate pensions payable to all worthy citizens 60 and older who are in need. By "adequate" I mean at least $50 per month for each individual, and I would increase that to $75 per month for all over 65.

Old-age pensions provide an open road for happiness and contentment for men and women who have, through no fault of their own, beheld the savings of a lifetime swept away as a result of ill-founded trust and abiding faith in big city bankers, in manipulated insurance companies, in exploiting building and loan associations, or have been swindled in any manner through the connivance of others, or who have by reason of economic conditions, been unable to lay aside sufficient for the "rainy day" that awaits us all. Local communities now overburdened, relatives now overtaxed caring for the less fortunate, and county poorhouses, will be displaced. A new era is at hand. The aged and infirm will face security and contentment instead of uncertainty, humiliation, and misery.

In 29 States old-age pensions have been provided. Many States, like Ohio, have provided for old-age-security laws because of a direct mandate of the people expressed at the polls. Ours is, in fact, the only civilized country in the world that does not have a national old-age-pension law. The cost of a few battleships will go a long way toward adequately pensioning for 1 year every needy individual in this country. Unfortunately the average State pension is less than $25 per month. The average cost of maintaining inmates in poorhouses is $40 per month. Justice and ordinary business prudence call for more adequate old-age-security legislation.

The need for old-age-security legislation is largely due to the congestion and intensity of modern industrial processes. Either aged people, in honorable poverty, must be supported by private charity or by society. I favor old-age-security legislation because it is the duty of the Government and also because the reliance upon private charity is an unequal and insecure dependence for men and women who have earned the right to live their few remaining years in modest independence, and enjoy a little repose.

The hope we all cherish is an old age free from care and want. To that end people toil patiently and live closely, seeking to save something for the day when they can earn no more. And yet the same fate awaits the majority. In the life of the worker there are weeks, often months, of enforced idleness, weeks of unavoidable sickness, losses from swindling, and then, as age creeps on there is a constantly declining capacity to earn, until at 60, many find themselves destitute. There is no more pitiful tragedy than the lot of the worker who has struggled all his life to gain a competence and who, at 60, faces the poorhouse. The black slave knew no such tragedy as this. It is a tragedy reserved for the free worker in the greatest Nation on earth.

There is nothing radical about the old-age-pension idea, though, personally, I do not fear being termed a "radical." The word "radical" is derived from the Latin word meaning "root." We ought to go to the roots of our social and economic troubles. As a matter of fact, payment of old-age pensions by the State or National Government involves no new policy nor any innovation of principle. In 1913, as a member of the General Assembly of Ohio, I participated in the enactment of Ohio's first mothers' pension law. Before that time the State had dealt in haphazard fashion with children of destitute widows. Children were sent to children's homes and the mother to work. This blighted the lives of children and brought misery to the mother. Instead of cruel separations of mothers and children, we now have the enlightened system of mothers' pensions, with regular payments to mothers to take care of their children. The family is kept together. Furthermore, the cost to the State is less. No State that has adopted mothers' pensions has returned to the old inhuman methods. I urge the same principle for the needy aged who, after a lifetime of industry, effort, and struggle at 60 become in need of assistance from the Government or from public or private charities. It is time to free white hair and wrinkled brows from dread and anxiety. Instead of "over the hill to the poorhouse", the Government should lend a helping hand in a scientific and adequate manner to our deserving and needy aged as they go down the sunset side of life.

Mr. Chairman, private charities, bread lines, and soup kitchens must not be the only answers of American intelligence and sense of justice to the problem of unemployment and indigent old age. Out of the hardships of this depression, when millions of people sought work which they could not find, let us hope that a better future may come for aged men and women whose condition is desperate even in the best of times, and through no fault of their own.

In Ohio we have a sales tax. This is the most atrocious and obnoxious form of taxation. A sales tax or a sales-transaction tax most heavily burdens people in moderate circumstances and the poor. It is the tax of last resort. Increased inheritance and estate taxes against large inheritances and increased income taxes in the higher brackets, which I advocate, will not burden people in moderate circumstances nor the poor. Taxes should be assessed according to ability to pay. Lest someone from California say that the tax proposed by Dr. Townsend is not a sales tax but a transaction tax, I refer to Dr. Townsend's testimony before the Senate Finance Committee, Saturday, February 16, 1935:

Senator BARKLEY. So it is really a sales tax?

Dr. TOWNSEND. There is a distinction, but there is very little difference. A sales tax has to necessarily be a tax on a transaction. All taxes on transactions of a financial nature are sales taxes.

Senator BARKLEY. So it is a distinction without a difference?

Dr. TOWNSEND. Well, the public conception of a sales tax is a limited transaction tax. That is the only difference.

Senator BARKLEY. The transactions tax would be unlimited; it would apply to all transactions involving sales?

Dr. TOWNSEND. That is what we propose to do.

Senator BARKLEY. The name is changed in order to get away from the term "sales tax"?

Dr. TOWNSEND. That is all.

For the purpose of providing revenue for old-age security I am willing to support a small transaction-sales tax. I will not support such a tax for the general operation expense of Government.

The entire combined revenues of the Federal Government from all sources of taxation in 1934 amounted to $3,700,000,000. To obtain this we resorted to almost every conceivable form of taxation—we taxed incomes, inheritances, gasoline, tobacco, liquor, beer, imposed nuisance taxes of all kinds, excise taxes, taxed bank checks, added extra postage rates.

Mr. Chairman, I conclude by urging enactment of the most liberal old-age-security law that is practical. I know this will not be $200 per month per individual, but I hope it will be $50 or $75 per month per individual. I, for one, will not be a party to deceiving or holding forth false hopes to elderly people I represent. Dr. Townsend did this for a time. That was cruel and unconscionable. I will continue to fight for the most liberal old-age-security law that is practical. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have before remarked that I am ranking man on the Committee on Expenditures, seemingly a perfectly useless committee. We are supposed to delve into the manner and amount of the expenditures, but we should apparently not investigate expenditures of this administration. So it seems futile to suggest that anything be done by the committee. But if I have any conscience or any courage whatever, I must make use of this forum to voice a protest against some of these immense expenditures made or contemplated.

The gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], in the RECORD of yesterday, painted a word picture of the cities of the dead, which I would like to have you read. Then consider the fact that we are faced with a monstrosity of this sort, to be paid for by industry that is dead or dying. Perhaps it is expected that someone who holds a ranking position on this committee should voice a protest in behalf of that industry.

We cannot discuss this bill without comparing it with other huge expenditures. That is probably why our able chairman from North Carolina favors it. With what utter despair and discouragement he must have voted for the tremendous expenditures already made, and how hopeful he perhaps may be that we now have a plan that will take the place of these enormously wasteful expenditures that have been made. He knows he must not criticize them. Harry Hopkins would call him "too damned dumb to understand." I think that I know how that splendid gentleman feels in his own heart regarding those futile experiments which have cost so much. We on this side sympathize with the Senators from Virginia, especially the senior Senator from Virginia, who had to carry through the Senate that bill for $5,000,000,000 when he did not believe in it at all. A strange situation, was it not?

But you elected a President; and you think he had a mandate from the people to be practically a dictator, and that you are simply to obey his will. Word has come to you, sir, that no matter whether constructive suggestions are made, or not, with respect to certain portions of this bill, you are to pass it just as it is; and you probably feel that you must obey that command.

Some of you on that side think that you embarrass us when you ask us what program we may have.

We most certainly now do have a program. We expect to adopt the Democratic platform of 1932, which you abandoned for these foolish new-deal experiments. Think of what you perpetrated on the people of the United States through the promises in that platform, which you have now willfully abandoned. Because of what you have done it is now necessary for the Republicans to adopt that 1932 program, which so won over the voting populace.

I hope the Democratic Party are enjoying their slide down hill. They are carrying the country down hill to the tune of probably $50,000,000,000. I presume you will let us have the sled to drag back up the hill, later on.

Some have stated that the Republicans would not get into power until 1970. With that campaign chest—$5,000,000,000—I am inclined to believe that the Democratic Party may perhaps extend its power another 4 years, but let me make the prophecy that the Democratic Party will not be heard of for half a century thereafter, when the poor, suffering people are obliged through taxation to pay the bills.

I want to call attention—and I think that a large portion of the public saw it—to the last edition of the Saturday Evening Post. Perhaps some of you dislike those editorials so much that you will not buy that publication anymore. The last issue contained such a caricature that I am certain no words spoken to the American people could be as effectual in arousing them as those portrayed in that picture by Herbert Johnson.

Look at that satisfied, ridiculous—I do not know how to express it—smile of Jim Farley's, sucking at the rich mixture of billions of dollars for distribution, and the other infants in their delight in the pop handed to them for largess. Are they our great engineers? No. Great financiers? No. Lew Douglas has gone, Johnson has gone; practically all the practical men have gone, except Harry Hopkins, the great spender of all time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield? Surely the gentleman does not object to the expenditure of $250,000 in preparing a relief map showing the movements of the people in the Mediterranean and Euphrates during the second millennium between the years 2000 and 1150 B. C., something that the human family has been thirsting for for centuries? [Laughter.]

Mr. GIFFORD. I am not given much to ridicule. Of course, the rhythmic dancers might not receive our entire approval, but we are informed that we are all "too damned dumb to understand it." [Laughter.]

Then we have the great Tugwell. Is he really a master engineer who can judiciously spend $900,000,000 for soil erosion, reclamation, and all those things that require the services of a great engineer? No. Before we pass on these things we should like to know—as TOM BLANTON formerly desired to know—the personality and ability of those who are to spend the money. As a saving declaration, in view of the storms of protests, the President has stated that he himself will expend it. Marvelous, indeed, is his capacity in all things. There is only one man for friend BLANTON to follow now, and that is the President of the United States. He says, "I follow my President." But he did not follow him in the matter of the $2,300,000,000 for the veterans' bonus. The great BLANTON—and I am looking at him and can now criticize him, since he has just been deriding us—the great man who has stood here for so many years and filled the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with statements that he had saved the country millions of dollars! He has boasted greatly of saving great sums in the Private Calendar alone. Behold the great BLANTON, straining at gnats and swallowing camels!

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. None of my colleagues over here are able to understand anything that the gentleman has said.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, the gentleman does not want to understand what I have said. But I think that the gentleman's colleagues fully understand. They know the record of the great BLANTON for more than 15 years. He has claimed to be the great watchdog of the Treasury, but now he is "following his President." Seemingly, no matter where he may be led.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will allow me, I would rather follow him than Mr. Hoover——

Mr. GIFFORD. Do not take that out of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Who during the 4 years of his administration left us with a $4,000,000,000 deficit.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman has referred to the extravagant expenditures on the part of the President. Is not the President liable to change his mind and be economical and balance the Budget?

Mr. GIFFORD. I wonder if the gentleman wants me to read again the President's pre-election speech on balancing the Budget, wherein he said that it was dangerous for the banks to loan the Government any more money? He said that in 1932. Do you want that dose of medicine again?

Mr. TREADWAY. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in this morning's paper in a press story there is an alleged interview—I take it to be official—with the President of the United States yesterday wherein he called attention to the fact that this legislation now pending before us would be a means to balancing the Budget. That statement is definitely made. I want to know of the gentleman whether he does not think the President is just human in wanting to change his mind sometimes, for it will be remembered that under date of February 16 the New York Herald Tribune carried the statement that the President would not further comment to the press on pending bills?

Possibly the President is not aware that this so-called "social security bill" is a pending measure, but in February he would not answer any questions about pending bills. He did yesterday, evidently, because he told how to balance the Budget by spending these billions of dollars in old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. Why did he change his mind?

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to give the President credit and I want to give our splendid chairman, Mr. DOUGHTON, credit for thinking that, if they can get rid of this vast expenditure in the way in which it is being made, this program will take the place of it and will hasten the balancing of the Budget. But in further reply, the gentleman well knows that yesterday when those New England Governors called at the White House to see the President and told him the exact conditions in New England—told him in no uncertain language, because I heard their statement read—it was easier for the President afterward to tell the press than to face those New England Governors and tell them that he must refuse to grant them relief.

Mr. TREADWAY. Did not the press account say that he waved them into the next room so that he might interview members of the Cabinet, and then he gave out the press statement?

Mr. GIFFORD. Exactly. The President is in a peculiar position. He does not want to face Senators and Members of the House and New England Governors, even though they are largely Democratic. It is highly amusing to have all those Democrats, elected in New England, now pleading for Republican policies. They are the only policies that will save New England. They pinned their faith on Mr. Roosevelt in 1932 and 1934, but if the election were to take place in these New England States tomorrow can you not imagine the result?

Mr. TREADWAY. In reference to the policies they represent, and the President, and the criticisms of our Governors of New England, all of them, I think, but one Democratic, they are pleading, as I understand it, for higher tariffs, for repeal of the processing tax, and doing away with the reciprocal treaties. Is not that the program of the Democratic Governors?

Mr. GIFFORD. True. I ought to take this opportunity still further to impress on this House the situation in the textile industry, the second largest in the country, which is one great industry that must bear the burden of this bill. You are killing this industry; it is practically dead; and the President refuses to come to its relief. We have delegated practically all of our power to him. He is the only one who can give us help.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I think I have finished that.

However, I sympathize with the President and with the party that elected him, because they must insist on Democratic policies. The repeal of the processing tax might not do so much, perhaps, as the textile industry hopes it would, but it would help and lend encouragement. And Japan, at present our largest customer for raw cotton, says to us, "We send you only one-half of 1 percent of the amount you consume in your country; and, as we are your customer for raw cotton, you do not dare do anything about it." However, that one-half of 1 percent is sold so cheaply that it acts like the surplus of any other commodity. Our manufacturers, our mills, our retailers, cannot sell an article for a fair price when purchasers declare, "I bought the same thing for half that money last week somewhere else."

It is the surplus, however small, that very largely establishes the price. Everybody acknowledges that to be a fact. That has been your plea on that side of the House for many years. Let us recognize it. But let us place this sick, suffering, despairing industry back on its feet. Let us now begin to assist all legitimate industry without waiting for all the social aims of the administration to be achieved!

Mr. Chairman, I want to vote for much in this bill. I welcome the old-age pension plan. Massachusetts has its old-age pensions. It costs Massachusetts $4,500,000 a year. We pay $24.50, on the average, to our aged and needy people. I presume that I should welcome the Federal Government coming in and helping us out, although the result will be that a large amount paid to other sections will come from my State. New York will also pay a huge amount for the benefit of other States. But when the Federal Government sets up machinery and is morally bound thereby, whether it be a home-loan bank, a farm-credit bank, or anything of that sort, and the States cannot or will not meet their share of the costs, the individual involved will assert his rights and the Federal Government in no time at all will have to assume the whole burden. Well did the chairman, in his opening address, stress the point that the States should be made to pay their share. He is trying hard in this bill to preserve State rights and State responsibilities, but he has already been forced to listen to some very strong speeches in the last 3 days in favor of the Federal Government paying it all. Many States cannot meet the cost; many States will not do so.

It is argued that it is not fair that old people in Arizona or New Mexico should be treated any differently than those in New York or Massachusetts. Our prediction is that in 1 or 2 years, perhaps, the Federal Government will have to assume the entire burden. It will be a Federal old-age pension long before 1940 or 1942, when the second title of this bill really goes into effect. We fully understand the doctrine that has taken possession of our Congress for many years, since the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted. Then you learned that six States principally paid the bills. It is very fine to distribute largesses over the many States of the Union whose constituents seldom look into the hard, cold face of an income-tax blank, but who feel that they should be supported by those six States of the Union. The half flimsy excuse that perhaps some of the people residing in those States made their money in some of the other States is often presented. Just as if that money that was invested in those other States did not pay its full share for labor, for taxes, and in other ways to benefit the States where the business is located. The cry is, "Abandon State responsibility! Take it from those six States! Let them pay the bill." Mr. Chairman, we are building a ceiling of debt over our Federal Government. The other day I spoke of forty billion. "Andy" has now raised his estimate to fifty billion. Forty billion, forty-two billion, and so on until fifty billion is reached in 1940.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. In circumstances like that, I wonder what the gentleman thinks George Washington or Alexander Hamilton might have done, when money is so sorely needed and so scarce for worthy purposes?

Mr. GIFFORD. They would go back to the days of Thomas Jefferson and Jeffersonian doctrine. We read that Secretary Wallace is not welcome down in Georgia today to make a Jeffersonian speech. Those great men would not have embraced spendthrift measures. We can well imagine them saying to us, "Return to the old anchorage and stop extravagances."

I hope you will feel I am really sincere in my criticisms. However, may I now indulge in a little pleasantry? We should look with great care as to who is to spend the $5,000,000,000. I wonder what this "new" set-up will be—another alphabetical organization? But the greatest of all alphabetical organizations ever set up by any party is, as you know, that great "I O U" organization, which you are setting up. Now, who will carry on? Tugwell, Hopkins, Farley, and Wallace? Have their past performances appealed to you? I do not want history to record—just a few years from now—that their carrying out of these things was a dismal failure. Have you gentlemen recently seen Haskins' new book on Government? Have you seen to it that your schools all have it? It is a most valuable treatise on our governmental activities. Haskins wrote an excellent book on the same subject some years ago. I well remember one of the interesting illustrations on the subject of experimentations of the Weather Bureau. The Weather Bureau generally gave out the report "probably fair", "probably cold", and soon it was being known as "Old Probability."

The weather people in Washington were worried because a farmer in Maryland foretold the weather more accurately than they did in Washington, so they sent an investigator and the farmer explained his success in the matter thus: "See that donkey out there? When it is good weather he grazes contentedly. When it is to be bad weather he is uneasy. I can tell by the degrees of uneasiness what the weather is going to be." The inspector went back and reported to Washington, and in consequence they put a jackass at the head of every weather bureau in the country. [Laughter.] I mean no offense to any particular individual, but I hope that history will not make the same comment regarding the present. Probably those mentioned are doing the best they can; but they are not engineers, and the public now has scant faith in them. Yet when certain of them are criticized they reply that we are too damned dumb to understand.

The President has let Lew Douglas go and supplanted him by a new Director. I do not know who he is; do you? Is he simply another "yes" man?

Advisers to the President come and go, and, while expressing the greatest affection for him, many of them cannot agree with his philosophy. He now has a Secretary of the Treasury, I presume, who will do anything the President wants him to. I am sure I read Mr. Morgenthau's statement to the effect that he would certainly do so when he took the office.

And now Governor Eccles comes with a banking bill that will assure the Government that the banks will have to cooperate. No wonder business men do not come before your committee; no wonder banking men do not come before the Committee on Banking and Currency. No; indeed. They realize that they are faced with a virtual dictatorship. To demur, will bring punishment, swift and sure. Governor Eccles said:

> If the banks do not lend the Government money or do not conform, it will be "just too bad" for those banks.

This is the man who does not worry about a $40,000,000,000 debt or the balancing of the Budget for several years to come, like TOM BLANTON.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Massachusetts forgets that the rules prevent him from referring to his colleagues by their personal names.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further; the gentleman himself taught me to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order in referring to his colleagues by their given names and not in the way the rules provide; and I base my point of order on the second ground that the gentleman is not talking to the bill. The gentleman has not told us what he thinks about the unemployment-insurance feature in this old-age-pension bill.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to save time I withdraw my point of order; perhaps the gentleman will get to the bill after a while.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman finally understands me. I learned this first-name business largely from him, and I want to call to the attention of these new Democrats that they should enjoy the speeches of Blanton, our old friend Jack Garner, and other Democrats here in the House during which they so glibly talked about Uncle Andy and Cal. Yet the Republicans have referred to your Democratic President only in the very remotest way, if they criticize him at all.

You remember how the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON], speaking from the well of the House, recited that poem about "Cal and the rocking horse." Oh, we Republicans are then supposed to take, and like, criticism, ridicule, and even insult; yet the gentleman from Texas cannot refrain from criticizing me because I spoke of him as Tom. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts tell the House whether or not he is in favor of or against old-age pensions?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, am I really so difficult to understand? [Laughter.] I raised my voice so that you could not avoid hearing me. I said I was greatly in favor of old-age pensions. Does the gentleman now hear me? Massachusetts is proud of her old-age pension system. I will vote for that title in the bill; but will I vote for the unemployment-security title—that experimental thing for which a suffering industry will have to pay? No; not now. Does the gentleman understand that?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from Kentucky just came in the room. He did not hear the gentleman's remark.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hardly think he would fully sympathize with me if he had.

Mr. Chairman, there are other matters to be discussed in view of the presentation of this bill, but I refrain from further remarks at this time. As the ranking man on the minority side of the committee to watch expenditures of the Government, I have felt constrained to make these comments; and if I do say something that may be regarded as political, I say again, look up those speeches of Blanton, Garner, and other leading men on your side and you will understand what tremendous blasts we Republicans had to endure all those years. Then marvel that we Republicans are so considerate of you during these days when you offer so much which deserves criticism. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts laid emphasis upon the fact that industry was dead. He stated that dead industry could not pay the money that would be necessary in order to carry out certain provisions of this bill. In order that the readers of the RECORD may know how dead industry really is, I ask unanimous consent that at this point I may be permitted to insert in the RECORD the figures showing how the chief executives of big business have voted themselves thousands of dollars increases in salary since President Roosevelt has been in office.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman let me make answer so it also will appear in the RECORD?

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman will have the privilege of putting in the RECORD anything he desires. I asked unanimous consent that I may be permitted to insert these figures in the RECORD.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I am allowed 2 minutes. I would like to answer the gentleman, because he is a good friend of mine. I notice the income-tax payments have increased; we upped the rates last year. Your N. R. A., to my knowledge and to the gentleman's knowledge, has made many firms and manufacturing plants earn more money last year on less turn-over and fewer employees.

I want to read a short excerpt of a few days ago from a New York financial journal for the benefit of the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman is taking up all my time.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman's time has expired. I have been granted 2 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. This article is as follows:

Not since the dark days of the banking crisis early in 1933 have the feeling of despondency and unwillingness to embark upon new business commitments been so wide-spread as during the past few weeks. This has been noted in all walks of business. The pessimism is most profound in New York, doubtless, but presentiments of further disaster are spreading into other areas. The consequence of this deep depression in business sentiment is a contraction in the volume of new orders entering trade channels, retail sales volume turning downward, and commodity and financial markets have reacted sharply.

We should refer to the financial papers of the last 3 weeks and the above statement will be fully verified. Pick out a spot somewhere that is prosperous and put in the RECORD if you want to, but prosperity is found only in "spots."

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman please put in his scrapbook and read to the House the story appearing in the Washington Post this morning where Dun tells what has been going on in the country and what is expected in the country? The gentleman is fair. Let him do that.

Mr. GIFFORD. I have not that article in my scrapbook.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is on the first page of the Washington Post.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman may do that if he wishes. I am putting in my own excerpts. In heaven's name, defend conditions if you can. Place in the RECORD all possible to encourage our business men and the country.

Mr. COCHRAN. Anything that refers to the Democratic administration in a good way the gentleman does not carry in his scrapbook.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I say that I greatly desire to go along with my President and your party when I think you are right. He is the only President I have. I do not want to put anything in his way, but it is a real duty to warn of unhappy conditions and to call attention to the driver when we are certain he is going in the wrong direction.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks, I insert the following list taken from the St. Louis Post Dispatch, as well as a news story from the same paper, that shows the salaries of leading business men, which is a clear indication that business is not quite as dead as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] would have the House believe. Surely if business was dead it would not be able to pay such salaries.

AMERICAN CHICLE CHAIRMAN GETS $75,000 A YEAR—T. H. BLODGETT, NEW YORK, AMONG DOZEN HIGHEST PAID REPORTED TO SECURITIES COMMISSION

WASHINGTON, April 8.—T. H. Blodgett, New York, chairman of the American Chicle Co., reported a salary of $75,000 to the Securities Commission today. This figure placed him among the dozen highest-paid business officials so far listed at the Commission.

Michael Gallagher, Cleveland (Ohio) coal operator, president of the Pittston Co., received $51,080.

Edwin C. McCullough, New York, president, held 52.9 percent or 71,050 shares of the common stock of the American Beverage Corporation. McCullough's salary was reported at $30,020.

Samuel Bayuk, Wyncote, Pa., chairman of the Bayuk Cigars, Inc., held 14 percent or 13,552 shares of the company's common. Bayuk's salary was $25,080. Harry S. Rothschild, Philadelphia, president of the company, received $36,120.

OTHER SALARIES

The following list shows first, persons or corporation, if any, holding 10 percent or more of the reporting company's stock; then, the salaries, if reported, for major officers, and then the stock holdings of directors and officers:

The Schiff Co.: Robert W. Schiff, president, Columbus, Ohio, held 16,436⅛ shares of common stock. Salaries: Schiff, $63,504; Al Schiff, second vice president, Columbus, $36,542; William Schiff, fourth vice president, Columbus, $15,044; Saul Schiff, director, Columbus, $18,285. Principal stockholders: Robert Schiff, 16,433⅛ common; Al Schiff, 6,121⅝ common; Morris Schiff, 2,000 shares common and 500 shares preferred; William Schiff, 3,000⅝ shares common; Saul Schiff, 2,482 shares common; all of Columbus.

Independence Lead Mines Co.: Salaries: H. B. Kingery, Wallace, Idaho, president-manager, $3,000; Herman Marquardt, Wallace, secretary-treasurer, $900. Principal stockholders: Mines, Finance Co., Spokane, Wash., 1,000,000 shares common class A; H. B. Kingsbury, 22,100 shares common; Marquardt, 2,901; F. C. Keane, Wallace, 1,000 shares.

Cream of Wheat Co.: Major salaries: Daniel F. Bull, Minneapolis, Minn., vice president, $36,000; George V. Thompson, Minneapolis, secretary, $27,000; George B. Clifford, Jr., secretary of subsidiary, $13,500.

Deere & Co.: Trustees under the will of Charles H. Deere, deceased, Moline, Ill., held 133,179 shares of the common and 133,570 shares of preferred. Two of the trustees also held the major blocks of stock among officers: William Butterworth, Moline, Ill., board chairman, 28,636 shares of common and 21,265 shares of preferred; Charles Deere Wiman, Moline, Ill., vice president, 16,654 shares of common and 12,150 shares of preferred; Charles G. Webber, Minneapolis, Minn., vice president, held 29,798 shares of common and 37,740 shares of preferred.

Kroger Grocery & Baking Co.: Individual salaries were not reported, but the company said the aggregate for the three highest paid officers was $130,961. Major stock holdings were: Otto Armleder, Cincinnati, Ohio, director, 30,198 shares of common; C. O.

Sherrill, Cincinnati, Ohio, vice president, 2,745 shares of common; Fred Lazarus, Jr., Columbus, Ohio, director, 2,481 shares of common.

MANY SALARIES INCREASED

How the pay of many big corporation executives rose last year is shown by their reports to the Federal Trade and Securities Commissions.

Francis B. Davis, chairman of the United States Rubber Co., for example, got $125,000 last year, compared with $107,550 in 1932. J. D. A. Morrow, president of the Pittsburgh Coal Co., received $74,440 last year and $30,780 2 years before.

The figures were too limited to give a definite indication of the trend throughout the thousands of American corporations, officials said, adding that in some cases changes in official capacity—promotions, demotions, or resignations—probably accounted for changes.

Most salaries and other compensation reported to the commission were maintained in 1934 at the 1932–33 rate, although in a few cases there were declines.

J. H. RAND, JR., GETS $94,120

James H. Rand, Jr., president of Remington-Rand, Inc., received a boost in compensation from $76,128 in 1932 to $94,120 in 1934, but George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, got $100,000 in 1934 against $118,750 in 1932. The earnings of William E. Levis, Alton, Ill., president of Owens-Illinois Glass Co., increased from $59,166 in 1932 to $100,000 in 1934.

The figures cover officers who so far this year have reported 1934 salaries of more than $50,000 to the Securities Commission.

The comparisons showed that few salaries have attained their 1929 proportions.

In the table published in an adjoining column the figures from 1928 to 1933 inclusive are from the Trade Commission report, and the 1934 figures are from corporation reports to the Securities Commission.

Another sign of how dead business is, are the messages from Chicago and New York found in this morning's Washington Post that I referred to, "Wheat hit a dollar on the exchange", and the statement from New York is one from Dun & Bradstreet, in which they see the sharpest boom in business in 25 years.

The Associated Press reports follow:

[From the Washington Post of Apr. 13, 1935]

CHICAGO, April 12.—Dollar wheat came home like the prodigal son today and the board of trade welcomed it with a sudden flare of bullish enthusiasm that added nearly $11,000,000 to value of winter wheat still in the ground.

Traders wandered out of the pit to read a Dun & Bradstreet prophecy that the sharpest business advance in 25 years was on the horizon.

They came back to the pit for a speculator flurry of buying that lifted May and September wheat contracts above the dollar level for the first time since early January, added 2⅜ to 2½ cents a bushel to yesterday's closing prices and, on the basis of Wednesday's Government estimate of a 435,000,000-bushel harvest of winter wheat, enhanced that crop's value on the futures market by $10,875,000.

NEW YORK, April 12.—The most pronounced business rise in 25 years was forecast for the immediate future in the weekly business review by Dun & Bradstreet today.

"More convincing proof has come forward that the passing of March left behind the lows for the year," the review says.

"During the week there was a complete transformation of sentiment, as the hopes for a rather far-removed improvement were replaced by a realization that the immediate future is to bring the sharpest rise that has been witnessed in business in the past quarter of a century.

"Industries in most parts of the country now are advancing at the most orderly pace in the last 2 months, as all of the strikes have been settled and threats of walk-outs have been dissipated."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss section 531 of this bill, which relates to vocational rehabilitation. Because I desire to include the results of some surveys, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, early in this session of Congress, January 7, I introduced a bill, H. R. 3050, providing for the continuation of the program of vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry or otherwise and to aid them in returning to civil employment.

The President's Committee on Economic Security took cognizance of the results that have been achieved in the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons during the past 14 years and put its stamp of approval on the program.

The bill I introduced providing for vocational rehabilitation was referred to the Committee on Education.

It was the original intention to ask for hearings before the Education Committee and request that committee to report the bill.

But since the purpose of the bill before the Education Committee coincides with the President's program on economic security, it was decided that to avoid duplication it would be more practical to include vocational-rehabilitation legislation in the Economic Security Act which is now before us.

As a result of my study of this program and its accomplishments in the States, I desire to bring to the attention of this House certain data regarding the problem of the disabled and the social and economic significance of the rehabilitation service.

Forty-five States and the District of Columbia are now engaged in vocationally rehabilitating their disabled citizens. The total cost of training a disabled person and placing him in remunerative employment for life averages less than $300.

It costs from $300 to $500 per year to maintain such a person in idleness at public expense.

The average age of disabled persons rehabilitated by the State is 30 years, and their average work expectancy is at least 20 years. Frequently the increased earning capacity of a rehabilitated person in 1 year exceeds the total cost of his rehabilitation.

Through studies and investigations over a period of years, it is possible to state with reasonable accuracy that at any given time there are 6 disabled persons in each 1,000 of the general population. Of these, 3 are children and 3 are adults of employable age.

Applying the figure of 3 physically disabled adults in each 1,000 of population to the total population of the United States, there would be found at any given time 368,000 adult persons with some form of physical handicap.

Rehabilitation experience shows that there is 1 disabled person per 1,000 of the general population who is eligible for rehabilitation, in need of rehabilitation—not able to rehabilitate himself—and for whom it is feasible to attempt rehabilitation, a total of 122,700 at any one time.

While at any given time the ratio of the disabled population eligible and feasible for rehabilitation to the total population is 1 per 1,000, the ratio of the number of persons who annually become eligible and feasible for rehabilitation service to the total population is 1 per 5,000.

These last figures of annual increment are based on accident figures of the National Safety Council and experiences of State rehabilitation departments over a 12-year period.

Applying the rule that annually 1 physically handicapped adult out of each 5,000 of population becomes eligible and feasible for vocational rehabilitation, the rehabilitation load in the United States would be increased by 25,000 persons each year.

It is interesting to note to what extent the Federal-State rehabilitation service has been able to meet this problem to date. It goes without saying that with limited budgets and limited personnel, the problem has not been met anywhere near adequately. However, results have been gratifying.

In the fiscal year 1934 there were 8,062 persons reported rehabilitated, which is an increase of 25 percent over previous years, and within the same year there was a 20-percent increase in the number of persons being served.

At the close of the fiscal year there were 18,228 physically handicapped persons under advisement, 9,878 in training, and 4,729 awaiting employment after having received training or some other form of rehabilitation service.

In addition, there were 1,422 persons who had been placed in positions but not yet recorded as rehabilitated at the close of the year.

These figures show a gratifying performance of the program in spite of the adverse conditions under which the rehabilitation personnel was obliged to work during the depression years.

The development of the national program of vocational rehabilitation has been constantly accelerating as its purposes and effectiveness have been better understood.

During the past 3 years the number of persons applying for the service has greatly increased.

In recognition of the difficulties facing the States, by reason of limited appropriations, during the past 18 months the Federal Emergency Relief Administration has been supplementing the Federal allotment of $1,000,000 annually by an amount of $840,000 per year.

Even then the States have not been in a position to rehabilitate all the applicants they have for the service.

There is an immediate and urgent need for increased funds in order to take care of the increased needs of the program.

By establishing the national service the Congress recognized the vocational rehabilitation of the physically disabled as a vital part of our national program of conservation of human as well as natural resources.

The depression has emphasized the wisdom of having established it. The wisdom and justice of participation by the Federal Government have likewise been emphasized.

Participation by the Federal Government is based upon four fundamental principles:

First. That since rehabilitation of the disabled is essential to the national welfare, it is the function of the Government to encourage the States to undertake it.

Second. That for the same reason, the Government should assist in bearing the financial burdens of the work.

Third. That since the Government is vitally interested in the success of the program, it should participate in promoting its efficiency.

Fourth. That the surest way of developing standards of efficiency in rehabilitation is through the establishment of a partnership with the States.

The provisions in behalf of vocational rehabilitation and other social legislation included in this bill (H. R. 7260) are certain to meet with the enthusiastic approval of thinking people throughout the Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman who preceded me, I want to depart from the usual customs and confine myself to the bill before the House.

Mr. Chairman, every living man and woman ought to be interested in the question of old-age security. The specter of a destitute old age shadows every life. The removal of this fear would be the supreme achievement of our civilization.

Realizing this I hailed the President's last message to the Seventy-third Congress, foreshadowing a program for social security to be presented to this Congress, as the greatest message which the President had thus far sent to Congress, and in a speech made on the floor on June 15, 1934, in support of the Railway Pension Act I predicted the passage by this Congress of a general old-age-pension bill. We have now arrived at the first consideration of that program.

In my campaign for reelection to Congress I stressed both unemployment insurance and old-age pensions and pledged myself to the most liberal plan the Government and industry could finance.

Plans have been presented to us for both old-age pensions and unemployment insurance which in my judgment are beyond our reach to finance at this time and under existing conditions, and I have told my people so and have taken much criticism for it.

On the other hand, I have not believed since I first read its provisions that the pending bill is all the burden that the National Government can reasonably bear in a program of old-age security, to which phase of the bill I shall confine my remarks, and I shall point out as specifically as possible my reasons for this conclusion.

I want to say, first, that the bill reported by the committee is a distinct improvement over the original bill, and I shall point out later how, in my judgment, it has been improved.

I want to say further that my analysis of title 1 of the bill is coupled with no reflection of the committee which reported it or the able men who make up its membership. I know they labored long and earnestly to bring out a program of social security which carries many valuable features besides old-age pensions, all of which I shall heartily support.

As I say, the bill has been materially improved by the committee, but in the matter of the allowance for straight old-age pensions it is not an improvement over the original bill, and in my judgment it is not nearly adequate. Both bills carry, in round numbers, $50,000,000 for the first year of the plan. Now, the hearings at page 38 show that there are about 700,000 people over 65 years of age on Federal relief at a cost to the Government of $45,000,000 per year. There can be no question about the eligibility of these people for the pension, so that this number alone would absorb three times the amount of this appropriation. In addition the hearings on the same page show an additional number in receipt of public charity, who should also be eligible for pensions, which swells the total of such dependent old people to more than a million. Dividing $50,000,000 among 1,000,000 dependents would give them but little more than $4 per month.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will give me additional time, I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. KNUTSON. Listening to the gentleman, I take it he is opposed to this bill for two reasons: One, it is inadequate in the amount that it carries; and, secondly, the gentleman objects to the delay in putting it into operation?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; and I want to discuss these very questions.

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I thank the gentleman. I am going to point out specifically wherein this bill is wrong and suggest how it should be amended. I am not going to waste my time entertaining the House with political "hot air." We have been warned about giving the people stones when they ask for bread, but apparently some gentlemen I have heard here think that the people ought to be fed on political "hot air" instead of on pensions.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Of course, the gentleman, I know, has made a study of the different bills and recognizes the fact that the $50,000,000 for the first year is to take care of all pensioners who are eligible under State laws during the first year?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am coming to that feature and will discuss it in a very analytical way; then I will be glad to hear from the gentleman after that.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. After the first year, stronger language could not be used as to the amount to be appropriated, because this bill authorizes to be appropriated for each fiscal year thereafter a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of the title.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman I am afraid there are one or two provisions in this bill wherein you will not need anything for the first year. Those are the things I propose to point out.

Mr. KNUTSON. There are about 5,000,000 needy people up in their sixties, and we are going to give them $50,000,000. That is $10 apiece.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not think the gentleman has overstated the amount.

Mr. KNUTSON. I believe in being liberal.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. There are 1,000,000 people over 65 years of age on Federal relief and public charity.

It may be claimed that considerable time will be consumed in the work of registering the eligibles and the building up of the pension list, but I take it that very little time will be required to list the 1,000,000 people on Federal relief and public charity, and I dare say the whole number could be registered within 90 days after the passage of the act.

But the millions now on Federal relief and public charity by no means make up the total of those in need of old-age pensions. Still referring to the hearings, we find this statement on page 38:

> At this time a conservative estimate is that at least one-half of the approximately 7,500,000 over 65 years of age now living are dependent.

Dependency, in my opinion, is an even better test than age of the need of a pension. But when we combine dependency with 65 years, it ought to be conclusive as to the need of a pension. Adhering strictly to the conservative figures in the report, one-half of the 7,500,000 people over 65 years of age who are said to be dependent would give us 3,750,000 people who meet the combined test of age and dependency. These people should all be registered during the first year and in much less time.

By way of contrast with the amount carried in the bill, the hearings show that last year some 180,000 old people received State pensions which averaged $19.74 per month. This rate of pension to 1,000,000 people would cost $200,000,000 per year. To show how pensions run into money, if these 3,750,000 old people were granted a pension of $19.74 a month, it would cost $900,000,000 a year.

Now, let me make one more comparison from figures furnished by the hearings, and still on page 38. We have in this country some trades union and industrial old-age pensions. Last year about 150,000 aged people received from these sources pensions exceeding $100,000,000. Their pensions, therefore, averaged slightly in excess of $55 per month. To pay that amount of pension to the 3,750,000 dependent people over 65 years of age would cost in round numbers $2,475,000,000 per year.

And yet the whole story has not been told. I apprehend the number of people in this country over 65 years of age who need pensions will exceed 4,000,000. If you reduce the age limit to 60 years, it will probably go to 6,000,000, and at $55 per month the annual cost would go to $4,000,000,000. At $200 per month the yearly cost would be $16,000,000,000, which is just double the cost of all government in this country—national, State, and local.

I said to a man who was here in Washington advocating another plan, it is not a question of how big a pension I would give the people; my heart is as big as yours; it is a question of the amount of taxation I am able to stand up for to finance it; and I expressed the view that the people ought to be educated on the question of taxation, not merely on pensions, and that they ought to know before the bill was passed what it was going to cost and where the cost would fall.

Returning to the bill before the House, I shall now point out in what material respects I consider it improved:

First. The original bill virtually required a pauper condition. It furnished assistance which, when added to the income of the pensioner, but not exceeding $15 a month, would provide a subsistence compatible with decency and health. The bill as reported by the committee and now before us has no income or property conditions attached.

Second. In the original bill only the husband was pensionable, as indicated by the requirement that the income of the spouse must be taken into consideration, and the income of both had to be inadequate for subsistence compatible with decency and health. In the bill now before us there is no reference to the income of the spouse. Both husband and wife, if they otherwise qualify, are entitled to the pension.

Third. In the original bill the pension was made a lien on the estate of the pensioner, and upon his death the State was required to reduce the estate to cash and turn the proceeds over to the Federal Government as a credit on the Government's contribution to the pension fund. In the bill before us it is merely provided that "if" the State collects from the estate of a pensioner, one-half of the amount shall be paid to the Government. It is left to the State whether it will do this, and this, in my judgment, is entirely proper.

Fourth. Under the original bill, when the pensioner, being a married man, died, then, under the compulsory-lien provision which it carried against the real estate of the pensioner, the real estate could be taken from the widow if she was more than 15 years younger than the pensioner. That provision is omitted from the pending bill.

These are some of the changes made in title I of the bill striking my attention, and all of them, in my judgment, are changes for the better.

The two principal features of the bill as they affect straight old-age pensions are the limitation to $15 per month per person and the requirement of State participation. I shall note the last requirement first—that of State participation—and I approach it in the knowledge that this feature of the act is not favored by the advocates of other pension plans.

I have been aware for some years of the very wide-spread view that the States can do nothing, but the National Government can do everything. The States are broke; the counties are broke, the cities are broke; the people are broke; but the National Government is a fountain of inexhaustible wealth. I do not think I overstate it. It is an unhealthy view, it is an unsound view, that a State cannot pay any old-age pensions but the Federal Government can pay one of $200 a month. They both get their revenues from the same source. The taxes all come out of the same pocket. The National Government may divide the field of taxation, but this artificial division does not create two different sources of Government income.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. The States raise the bulk of their revenue by the imposition of the ad valorem property tax. The Federal Government uses no such system. The State undertakes to raise the bulk of its revenue out of property, whether the property earns money or not. Does the gentleman say those systems are the same and that they are available to both agencies of the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The gentleman understands what I mean. It all comes out of the pockets of all the people, either directly or indirectly. You cannot divide it up into two artificial divisions and not charge one against the other. They all come from the same source.

Mr. MOTT. The point I make is that the States at the present time have not the revenue-raising machinery to finance an adequate State old-age-pension law.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will give me some additional time I will give him my own ideas of this thing. I am coming to that.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. My time is running and I would prefer not to yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I will ask the Chairman to yield the gentleman a minute or two longer.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I would like to have at least 5 minutes more because I have analyzed this legislation very closely.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not entirely within the province of the States to provide income taxes as a source of revenue and many of them now levy excise taxes?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; and inheritance taxes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. They have the same source of taxation as the Federal Government.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me long enough to suggest to the gentleman from Washington that it is not possible for the States to raise very much revenue by the imposition of a State income tax, because most of them do not contain populations wealthy enough to pay a large income tax. There are a few large States that can do this, but with respect to my State, or Oregon, for example, there are many individuals in the United States who pay a greater income tax than all the citizens of my State combined. We cannot raise a great deal of revenue by an income tax and neither can the State of Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am clear in my view that it is for the health of the State as well as of the Nation and for the benefit of the people generally, as well as the Government, that the State should bear a just portion of the burden of old-age pensions and should administer the law.

The requirement that the State must contribute, else there will be no Federal contribution, presents a very different and very difficult question, and one rendered more difficult by the wide-spread hostility to any dependence on State aid. I have expressed myself as not favorable to such a condition.

I know from reading the hearings that the small appropriation carried in the bill for the first year is based in large part on the assumption that many States will get nothing the first year, because they either have no old-age-pension laws or are not able to pay all of the pension provided by their laws. This very consideration confirms my view that the Federal Government should make its contribution, at least for a definite period, regardless of State action. The backward States might be given a reasonable period of time in which to get their houses in order.

I shall offer an amendment, deferring for a reasonable period, say of 2 years, the time after which Federal contribution will be withheld from nonparticipating States. A future Congress can deal with the situation then prevailing.

Now I come to an even more important matter. Under section 2 as it now reads, perhaps three-fourths of the States would be disqualified for Federal aid for the next year or two, but there is another provision in the bill which, as I read it, would disqualify all of them, with possibly one exception, even those who would be able to match the Government dollar for dollar.

Section 2, subparagraph 2, page 4, of the bill carries a residence requirement of 5 years during the 9 years immediately preceding the filing of an application for pension and any residence requirement of a State law which excludes any resident of the State who has resided therein for 5 years of the 9-year period is disqualified and its plan will not be approved.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will yield, I do not think he is correct in that statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Let us see whether I am or not. I hope I am not.

Mr. MOTT. That 5 years is a limitation under the bill, and they must not provide any restriction that would deprive a person of the pension if he has lived there 5 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; but it is 5 years of the 9 years. Wait until I come to that in my remarks, and if I am wrong I will thank the gentleman for showing me that I am wrong.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the gentleman please, the bill is drawn so that it is susceptible of several interpretations.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the gentleman please, it is susceptible of but one construction and the gentleman from Colorado has it correct.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The following are the residence requirements of the 28 States having old-age-pension laws as I have been able to get them:

	Years
Arizona	35
California	15
Colorado	15
Delaware	5
Idaho	10
Indiana	15
Iowa	10
Kentucky	10
Maine	15
Maryland	10
Massachusetts	20
Michigan	10
Minnesota	15
Montana	15
Nebraska	15
Nevada	10
New Hampshire	15
New Jersey	15
New York	10
North Dakota	20
Ohio	15
Oregon	15
Pennsylvania	15
Utah	15
Washington	15
West Virginia	10
Wyoming	15

This table shows that only the State of Delaware could comply. In this connection I want to call attention to the fact that in the bill as originally introduced, the residential period was 10 years, and the reduction of the period to 9 years in this bill disqualified the following States which have 10-year periods: Idaho, Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Nevada, New York, and West Virginia.

In other words, the way I read the language of the bill, if a State law requires 10 years' residence, it is 1 year over the residence requirement in this law, and the State is disqualified because it does not furnish a plan that will comply with the Federal specifications.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Knowing the heart of the gentleman from Colorado as I do, does he not favor the lesser period of residence rather than a longer period? One State, as I recall, has a residence requirement of 35 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; I do. This is what I am getting at, and I may be wrong about it. This table shows that the State of Delaware only has a lesser period of residence than that named in the bill.

In this connection, I may say to the gentleman from Kentucky that if I am on the wrong foot I am coming to one of the things that put me off. In the bill as originally introduced the residential period was 10 years.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. As I recall, it was a residence of 5 years out of the last 10 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Five out of ten.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The first draft, H. R. 4120, was 5 years' residence out of 10. This would have permitted a pensioner to qualify in two States. He could have 5 years' residence in one State and 5 years' residence in another. This was changed to 5 years out of the last 9, which would make it definite from which State he would secure the benefits. Certainly the gentleman does not want to have a longer period of residence, because that would decrease the number of the aged who would benefit under the law.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; I do not want a longer period of residence; but I do not want my State disqualified under this bill because it requires a longer period.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No; they can come in and amend their law and permit hundreds and thousands of aged to qualify under the law that otherwise would be excluded.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. All right; that is just what I am getting at. You have not convinced me yet that I am wrong. In the original bill pending before the committee this language read 10 years instead of 9.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Ten years instead of nine.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I know the gentleman wants to be correct. On page 4 of the original bill, H. R. 4120, the language is "has resided in the State for 5 years or more within the 10 years immediately preceding application for assistance."

In the present bill, H. R. 6120, it is 5 out of 9 years with 1 year's continuous residence immediately preceding application in State of application.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Exactly.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. But in the original bill it was 5 years out of the last 10 years.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes. I saw that it provided 10 years in the original bill and then I saw the 9 years in this bill, and I began investigating and speculating at once as to why such a change was made, and when I looked up the State requirements and found that 8 large States, including New York, had a 10-year period, it just occurred to my mind that this change of 1 year would disqualify New York, because you had to live in New York 10 years and only 9 years under this bill. Now, the gentleman will admit that New York will have to change its requirement in that respect.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If it is more than 5 years, it would have to change its law so as to require only 5 years' residence.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Now, you have at last made it absolutely plain that this bill will disqualify every State in the Union except Delaware under its provisions. Every State in the Union except Delaware will have to call its legislature together. My legislature has adjourned until January 1937, and most of the legislatures of the other States have adjourned; and the upshot will be that, instead of $50,000,000 being too little to finance this bill the first year, it will not take anything to finance it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. What is there in this bill that will in any way exclude any resident of the gentleman's State who has qualified under your State law, provided he has lived in your State for 5 out of the last preceding 9 years?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Under the laws of my State, a person must have resided there for 15 years to be eligible for a State pension, therefore my State cannot qualify under a provision making people eligible for Federal pensions on 9 years' or 10 years' or 5 years' residence. It must be 15 years or we are out, and all the others are out except Delaware.

Mr. KNUTSON. I believe the State may prescribe the number of years a person shall live in it before he becomes eligible, and, if the law says 20 years, nobody will get any benefit for 20 years.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. You would have to change the law.

Mr. KNUTSON. You would have to change the law, but what assurance have you that the law will be changed?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. That is my judgment. The way the paragraph reads it will disqualify every State in the Union that is requiring longer than 9 years. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] admits that. That means that there is only one State in the Union qualified under the bill, according to the residential requirements of the bill, that can draw a pension under the law. Three-quarters are already disqualified because they have no old-age-pension law or are not complying with the law.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think for one moment that we can draft a bill that will conform to the law of every State in the Union, when they require all the way from 5 to 35 years' residence? How can we draft a law that will conform to the law of every State?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am going to offer an amendment that residential qualifications shall not deprive the State from receiving its quota until April 1, 1937. That will give the States time to get their houses in order.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I recollect that the gentleman a moment ago stated that he would offer an amendment which would provide that the Federal Government should pay the State for a certain period of years whether or not they have any law. I hope the gentleman will introduce such an amendment. If he will, I will vote for it.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I thank the gentleman; I will introduce it. There will be at least 1,000,000 people over 65 years of age who will get $180,000,000 the first year. I will also introduce an amendment providing that any State failing to submit a plan which complies with section 2 or any requirements therein, shall not be thereby disqualified to receive its quota of old-age assistance until April 1, 1937, so as to cure this residential requirement.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman's amendment is offered, it will be no guaranty that the legislatures will be called in session, because I think there are many reasons besides this why the legislatures in every State in the Union will have to be called into session, because there are so many regulations laid down.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. What we have endeavored to do is to liberalize the bill so that more aged people will get the benefits.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If we Members of Congress pass a bill in which the people assume that they are going to get a Federal contribution, even if it is only $15, and then we adjourn and go home and they find out afterward that they are not going to get any benefit, we better not have been here. I do not propose to take any chances on this proposition. [Laughter and applause.]

(The time of Mr. MARTIN of Colorado having expired he was given 2 minutes more.)

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want it distinctly understood that I am not condemning this bill. I think it is a great step in American history.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members of this House want to help a million old people who will not get anything under this bill for the next year or two, and which condition will be prevailing when they make their campaign for reelection, with their States disqualified, they will adopt these two amendments. It would only cost $180,000,000 to give these million old people the maximum rate carried in the bill. It would be a fine opportunity to show whether we are giving old people pensions or campaign speeches.

This brings me to the question of taxation, concerning which I have strong convictions. Pensions supported by a sales tax, and a transaction tax is a sales tax, a pyramided sales tax, meaning on the average six sales taxes going into a commodity from the stage of the raw material to the finished product handed over the counter to the customer. This burden, as I see it, would fall 0.9 upon the producing masses of the country. It is a tax on poverty; a tax on need to help the needy.

This burden should at least be equalized by the transfer of a greater share to income. If, as claimed, income from dividends has been maintained at $6,000,000,000 per annum or more throughout the 5 years of the depression, it would indicate that wealth could bear a greater share of the burden of a reasonable system of old-age pensions than has been proposed to finance the Townsend plan or any other plan which has come to my attention.

I know this is a sore point, and for the reason that it is a sore point I want to bear down upon it. If the people are not willing to tax wealth according to what it could bear, then let us forget big old-age pensions. In my home State the legislature had before it two tax measures, one levying a sales tax of 2 percent and the other levying an income tax. The sales tax passed readily; the income tax fell by the wayside. That tells the story, both at home and in Washington.

It has been repeatedly pointed out in the debates on revenue legislation during this administration and in prior Congresses that income and inheritance taxes in England and France are severalfold heavier than in this country, yet those countries appear to be in measurably better economic condition than this country, with much less unemployment and relief in proportion to population, indicating that their much heavier income and inheritance taxes have not overwhelmed their economic systems.

I am not in favor of punitive taxes. I base my views wholly upon the potentialities and the necessities of the situation. The world's greatest fortunes are in this country. We have in this country now fortunes 20 times larger, maybe 50 times larger, than the greatest fortunes of a century ago. And we have in this country many times more destitute and dependent people in proportion to population than we had a century ago, and this condition is permanent. A growingly mechanized economy fixes this. Millions will never return to employment. The machine not only permanently adds to the rolls of unemployment, but creates an artificial and premature old age. The Government itself will not employ men and women above middle age, and in many instances they must be well under middle age. Get them young is the rule in modern industry and government, and even when you get them young a new invention comes along and throws them into the discard.

Mr. Chairman, the maximum rate of the Federal contribution carried in this bill, $15 per month, has come in for much bitter and hostile criticism. It has been denounced over the land as an insult to old age. It has given me concern. I have felt that it is inadequate; that it should at least be doubled. But there is another question that concerns me as much as the pension rate carried in the bill. It is the question as to the number who are to be provided for under the bill.

I have pointed out that the appropriation for the first year would pay only 1,000,000 people a trifle over $4 per month. It would pay less than 300,000 people $15 per month. Even if only the million-and-odd who are now admitted to be on Federal relief and public charity were given $15 per month, it would require $180,000,000 the first year. You can readily figure for yourself what it would take to pay that amount to the nearly 4,000,000 people who, according to the report, are now over 65 years of age and dependent. Conceding that these 4,000,000 could not all be placed on a pensionable status during the first year, it is obvious that the appropriation falls far short of providing for those who will be able to qualify for pensions during the first year of the operation of the law. Provision should be made for 1,000,000 at the very minimum the first year. If the provision is not exhausted it can be carried over.

If you are beginning to gasp at the thought of the expenditure involved in making immediate provision for the 1,000,000 or more aged people who are now on relief and charity, let me remind you that their support is already coming out of the pockets of the people. The administration of relief is expensive, the administration of public charity is expensive, the administration of poorhouses is expensive. Surely these 1,000,000 people are not now being cared for at an expense of less than $20 per month, and more likely it is $30. I know personally people in the poorhouse who could go down town and live for $40 a month and would do so if they had the $40. I think we are having too much of a split-penny attitude toward this proposition, too much of the feeling that a substantial appropriation would be a new net outgo. It would not. Probably half of it is going out anyhow and the additional half would do a good job of it and give us a million independent people in this country, secured for life against penury and want. I would rather a little overdo than underdo this job. If I had my way about it, one of the major items in the $4,000,000,000 public-works bill would go toward the establishment of a decent old-age-pension system. It may be that many old people have been propagandized into a state of too much self-pity. Let us not go to the other extreme and hand out stones to those who are asking for bread under the fear that we will wreck the country. We are making a late start toward a system of social security, but we are able to start beyond the point where other countries have left off. That is the attitude I take toward this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, no discussion of old-age pensions is complete without consideration of the Townsend plan. We are all under obligations to the able Representative from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] for a clear and concise statement of the changes made in the Townsend plan by the second McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154.

Before taking up that plan I want to say that when Dr. Townsend came to Washington I was one of a dozen Members who signed the necessary request for his use of the House caucus room, in which he made his first explanation of his plan in Washington, and I attended the meeting. I agree with all those who say that he is a kindly, humane, and sincere man, and that these were the qualities which motivated his plan and not any idea of self-gain or self-aggrandizement. There is nothing in or about the man to suggest that he is moved by considerations other than the welfare of his countrymen.

I also signed the petition to have the first McGroarty bill placed on the calendar in order that it might be brought before the House and considered. I want to say here that the debate thus far on the bill before the House has given me a fresh idea of the value of consideration of a bill. Consideration is worth much to any new idea.

After making a study of the first McGroarty bill, I sent an open letter to every newspaper in my district, pointing out or rather raising questions about the practicability of that measure, and in answer I received hundreds of letters of criticism. The new Townsend-plan bill completely justifies my views of the original bill. I believe that a Member of Congress owes to the people some recognition of the responsibility which comes to him as their Representative. Whether I acted wisely or not from a political standpoint, I am sustained by the knowledge that I met that responsibility when I might have done as so many others have done and kept silent or dodged the issue.

Mr. Chairman, the new Townsend-plan bill is a great improvement over the original bill. It is clearly drafted. It is understandable. I do not see how a bill could be more clear and simple in its language. As pointed out by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], it does not require the payment by the Government of a pension of $200 per month to persons 60 years of age and over. It lays the taxes and provides that all qualified annuitants shall be paid from the funds accumulated an amount not exceeding $200 per month. As pointed out by the gentleman from Oregon, according to the figures of Dr. Doane, a very able economist and statistician who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee for the Townsend plan, these taxes would approximate the sum of $4,000,000,000 the first year, providing a pension of about $50 per month, a reasonable figure, to the 8,000,000 people said to be qualified to participate. If the amount collected were less, the pension would be less; if more, the pension would be more.

Another beneficial change is that persons with an income of more than $2,400 per year are barred from the pension and where there is an income of less than that amount, the amount is deducted from the pension, leaving a greater share of the fund for those who have no income. They are the people who need it.

There are other beneficial changes which I have not the time to go into. On the whole, this bill is well worth consideration. The Townsend movement is by no means love's labor lost. As a result of it, more old people are going to get better pensions. I have no apologies to make for voting against the rule under which this legislation is being considered, for fear it would deprive this bill of consideration or the opportunity to offer it or any of its provisions as an amendment to the pending bill. I am willing that any bill interesting so many people shall be brought before the House for consideration and action, whether I vote for it or not.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is the gentleman's thought that we should pass a bill that would take care of all of the needy in all parts of the country.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Exactly.

Mr. KNUTSON. And this bill does not do that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentlewoman from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY].

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how the rest of you feel, but ever since we were allowed all this freedom of discussion so graciously—and I am very sincere when I say that—I, for one, have had a great sense of relaxation and gratitude and comfort in knowing that I serve with colleagues who have authority and exercise it so wisely. I think the people of the country will appreciate that also. In 1932 as we, the Democratic Party, sought the power which we finally acquired, we stated our stand on old-age pensions.

In the Seventy-second Congress we were too engulfed with the emergency at hand to act. In the Seventy-third Congress we did not act. In this, the Seventy-fourth Congress, we are given an opportunity that will make this Congress famous through all the generations to come and I, for one, on account of the liberality and the extraordinary wisdom of the way in which this bill has come upon the floor of the House, am full of hope that within a week or 10 days or 2 weeks we will have passed legislation that we can be very proud of and that will be practical and effective at once in inaugurating an adequate pension system for the old people of our country. The gentleman from California [Mr. BURNHAM], the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] have said much that I subscribe to 100 percent, and, therefore, I can make my speech very short. Legislation that has to do with the last span of life should properly characterize the fulfillment of the American institution of government.

The harvest of life can be reaped but once, and this legislation has directly to do with that harvest. The conditions under which the old people of a country live is the answer to the success or failure of a nation. As we approach this bill we are faced with the problem of "self-reliance", and what has become of self-reliance? Self-reliance is the cornerstone upon which every nation must build, if it is to succeed. What do you feel self-reliance means? To my mind, self-reliance means the use of human capacity, coupled with natural resources, in such a manner as to insure the liberty of living for all people. If we were economically self-reliant, we would not be here today discussing ways and means to safeguard our old people from the anguish of helplessness in the face of want. The importance of this bill cannot be estimated.

I shall confine myself entirely to title I, with the exception of saying that I, for one, would feel safer in voting on the rest of the bill if the people who receive money through pay rolls in this country had had an opportunity to give us their opinion. I have had few indications by letter or otherwise as to how the people on pay rolls feel about this bill. There is one phase of what has gone on all these years that has not been touched on today, and I think it has great importance. I would like to defend the people who have agitated the matter of old-age pensions. I think we owe them a deep debt of gratitude. What have they done? They have set the people thinking, and the people are not only thinking but they are out to get results, and all power to them. They are focusing on the actual conditions in this country, and they are exposing them in no uncertain terms.

In addition to that, those agitating old-age pensions have focused the whole American Nation on the fact that we must have consumption to create employment. Since the discussion arose as to whether the people in the United States had been informed in full of the second McGroarty bill, I have learned that that bill was printed in the Townsend paper on April 8, with a full and sincere explanation of exactly what it means. It is so definitely a bill, saying what it means and giving its purposes and the way to accomplish them fairly, that I feel this House would do well to think profoundly on the merits of that bill when and if it is presented as an amendment to the present bill. The McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, proposes a definite program to take effect at once—covers a means of raising the money (incidentally some would like to see the bare necessities of life exempted)—and then covers the expense of administration before dividing the revenue amongst the eligible pensioners, while this bill we are considering (H. R. 7154) appropriates $49,000,000 to take care of the program through June 1936. If this sum were given to those actually on relief above the age of 65 at this time they would receive about $4 a month. After that it proposes a contributing condition of 50-50 between State and Federal Government that would preclude adeqate help in some of the less well off States.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the lady from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY].

Mrs. GREENWAY. I do not think there is anything further to say except that there is no political issue in this bill. This is a bill for the people of the United States. I do not think there is a person who sits in Congress who does not desire to take fair, just, and progressive action at this time. With that spirit prevailing I believe we can do something we will all be proud of, that the people will be satisfied with, because it meets the needs of the aged of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, by this social-security bill (1) we give aid to our elders—and deep down in his or her heart there is no Member of this House who has any real objection to that. We further (2) legislate for unemployment compensation. There is some difference of opinion as to how that should be worked out. There are those who oppose some of the provisions dealing with that feature. But job insurance of some kind is desirable. We also (3) strive to assure greater security for the needy children of this Nation; and (4) provide greater health protection. As to these, I have heard no objection at all during the course of the debate on the bill.

This measure does not come to the floor of the House as the product of the ingenuity of any legislator. It has come up from the people. It is true the way was paved for it by the message of President Roosevelt, but his humane message was prompted by the appeal of our people, to which he patriotically responded, quickly realizing the real necessity back of the voice of the country.

Now, it is our duty as Members of the Congress to do something for our aged; they need our action. When I am at home I keep open office, and there I meet the people of my district daily. It is saddening to see elderly men and women, 70 or 80 years of age, come in looking for employment. Many of them had means and were comfortably situated a few years ago, but after 5 years of depression their funds have become exhausted.

Some have contributed their last dollar to their friends, relatives, or to their immediate family with whom they lived. Others, formerly happily settled with sons and daughters, who provided them with the comforts of life and spending allowances, have found their children no longer able to furnish them with bare necessities. Their spending money has been cut off. They do not always think of themselves. They make their sacrifices submissively and nobly. Unfitted for the arduous work of the world, they seek it. Shall we, then, permit them to suffer in the evening of their lives without endeavoring to fulfill the obligation we owe to society?

Many eligible for a pension under this bill possessed sizable fortunes before the advent of the crash of all values. I know one in particular who was worth more than $1,000,000, and now has left only a small piece of property, from which he has insufficient income to pay its levied taxes. A pension made more liberal by Federal contribution will be for these a double blessing.

In my view there is scarcely a man in this country, or woman either, who has not made his contribution to the upbuilding and success of the Nation. A man or a woman who has lived 65 years and is a good citizen, and who has engaged in the pursuits of the various States, whether in the mart or in the home, lending his or her support steadfastly to the principles that give us our heritage, has added his or her share in a material way to the welfare of the Nation. We must lift them up from their plight, or we shall all go down with them.

We have an old-age-pension law in my State of New Jersey. It gives aged men and old women about $12 a month. I am hopeful that by this bill, New Jersey will be encouraged to match the limit $15 afforded by this Federal law, so that our old people will get the full benefit of about $30 a month. I wish it could be more. Perhaps later it will be feasible to increase the amount. I only hope so. But we have to be guided by our minds as well as by our hearts. Best judgment would seem to dictate that we make an auspicious start. Let us not begin something we cannot keep up. We are not by any manner of means jumping from cold to hot. Many of the States now have old-age pensions. We are but helping to make them more liberal, as we should. And as the years go on, with returning prosperity—and prosperity will return and is even now on its way—the benefits for our elders will be increased to meet their full needs. The people of New Jersey will be happier for the establishment of the Federal old-age-pension law, even though New Jersey pays into the Federal Treasury in taxes more than $96,000,000 a year and receives in return approximately $52,000,000, including emergency-relief moneys.

Job insurance looms up, too, as being economically sound. Our people are an active, vigorous people. They have had reason to be an optimistic people. In this country of opportunity it appeared that a job would never be wanting. Some never looked to the future, expecting always to earn a livelihood. Others, more prudent, invested according to the guide posts put up by our bankers, our industrialists, and even by the Federal Government. Besides, most of us have not known how to save. Probably 95 percent of our people are not the real saving kind, not the kind like our bankers and great industrialists and others who know how to cling to their money. The average American is a liberal man. He has suffered privation or want, and he is most ready to contribute to the needs of others. And he went along at the call of those who sought his surplus funds for deposit in their banks and investment in their enterprises, or enterprises in which they were interested, and for what he was given to understand would result in the development of great American institutions.

Among others, along came the National City Bank and said, "Buy Pennsylvania Railroad common at $117; it is a great investment", and that just before the crash. Then there was the Chase National Bank calling, "Buy Chase National Bank Stock", when the officers and directors of that bank were actually selling their stock. We had Raskob, leader of industry, who said to the average man of America, "If you have a dollar, go out and borrow another dollar and invest both of those dollars." The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States added, "This is a good time to buy bonds", when it was not a good time to buy bonds. Even the President of the United States gave encouragement by stating that the value of securities, including stocks, was not too high in this country. Banks and industries and even our Government were advising our people, and our people were taking that advice; and today many are without their deposits, their stocks and bonds and securities; and too many have their Raskobian debts and a keen sense of insecurity, anxiety, and worry. Worry is the worst disease known to mankind. It is worse than all the other diseases, no matter how malignant. The passage of this bill has for its purpose the lifting of worry and economic insecurity from the minds and backs of our people. Perchance the method employed by the bill is not the ideal way to accomplish our purpose. And to me there is a close constitutional question involved on the job-insurance provisions. But I shall vote for the bill as it is looking forward to the security of our employed, and that means the Nation.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEY. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman from New Jersey has said nothing yet about the application of this bill to his scheme for a national lottery. Does he not think it will apply here? [Laughter.]

Mr. KENNEY. My good friend knows with me that a great country, Norway, raises money for its old-age pensions by lottery. Of course, we could employ the lottery for our old-age pensions, and both of us know that in such case the aged would be sure of their pensions. Money is needed for many worthy purposes these days—money not available from ordinary sources—and lottery money would supply needed funds for pensions, veterans' payments, and other demands. Surely my friend was not impressed when the gentleman from Massachusetts this afternoon cried out that the money for job insurance must come from their "dead industries"? They know, if they will look back to see what their forefathers did in times of money scarcity, that the lottery has been a life-saving device for their State and institutions. If they would do as their patriots of old did, they would be the first to advccate a lottery, and they would not have to talk about the money for job insurance as coming from their "dead industries." These selfsame gentlemen and their colleagues in conjunction with industry, who shrink from a lottery, carried on the policies of this country which are responsible today for their "dead industries." When the country was tottering, they jammed through the Smoot-Hawley tariff to a collapse of everything, including their industries. But they can yet make some contribution to this Government by following the example of Alexander Hamilton, proclaimed by them as the greatest Secretary of the Treasury this country ever had, and in which we all agree in large measure. When Hamilton proposed New Jersey as the center of all industry in America after the War of the Revolution as part of his plan to establish the economic independence of the new Nation, he made sure to provide for the conduct of a lottery to insure that the funds available for the industrial enterprises would not be depleted. Of course, the Federal Government by this bill will only provide moneys for old-age pensions in cases where the States contribute an equal amount. The pension for the old is not assured by this bill. The lottery would make the pension absolutely secure; and, knowing the gentleman from New York as I do, I am sure the gentleman does favor a national lottery. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7260, the social-security bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, presented a conference report (Rept. No. 679) and statement for printing under the rules.

CALIFORNIA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, H. R. 5914, to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, to indicate the interest of the Government of the United States in the fulfillment of the ideals and purposes of the California-Pacific International Exposition, there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint silver 50-cent pieces to the number of not more than 250,000, of standard weight and fineness and of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models for master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. That the coins herein authorized shall be issued at par and only upon the request of the chairman of the board of the California-Pacific International Exposition.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by said exposition and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the California-Pacific International Exposition projects.

SEC. 4. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 4, strike out the words "chairman of the board of the"; and, in line 6, after the word "Exposition", add the following: "Company or its duly authorized agent."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address I delivered today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to extend my remarks, I include the following radio address made by me today:

Today is the one hundred and ninety-second anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. Thomas Jefferson was the foremost apostle of liberty—human liberty—the world has ever known. Other men, including many who were associated with him in creating this great Republic, were more interested in the forms of freedom, in liberty as an abstract idea, than in universal emancipation. Some sought to trammel liberty and keep it within narrow bounds Many of the founders proposed a system of government which should be little short of a republican monarchy. But Jefferson had an infinite faith in the people. In days of distrust of the populace, agitation, and revolution, and at a time when democracy was but a name, he stood firm for a government in which the power would be resident not in the men of intellect, of financial influence, or social standing, but in the artificers of the cities, the woodsmen of the frontier, the laborers on the farms and plantations, the seamen along the Atlantic coast. He was the plain people's only champion at a time when they were inarticulate.

If Jefferson were sitting in this Chamber today, or holding the office of Governor of any of our sovereign States, I can picture him as our leader in the struggle against sumptuary laws which restrict the decent freedom of the individual, against proposals to lodge control over our wide-spread educational system in the Federal Government, against domination of political groups by the great financial interests, against class discrimination, against bowing the knee to Europe, whether it takes the form of writing down their just and honest debts or accepting their decisions in international matters of vital interest to our western Republic. Nine years before Washington's Farewell Address, you may remember that Jefferson was writing from Paris to caution against "entangling alliances"—those were his very words—and as Washington's first Secretary of State he adhered to that great American policy.

Jefferson's birthday this year should be a day upon which we rededicate ourselves to the many great causes and the single great principle—human liberty—for which he fought over a period of 40 years. It may seem trite to recall his services to liberty, his struggling for the doctrine of universal emancipation, but it was not so in his day. His enemies, at home and abroad, sneered at his demands for the fullest form of freedom. They pointed to the excesses of the French Revolution and shuddered at the resulting wars which drenched Europe with blood from the North to the Red Sea.

"This", they retorted, "is what your liberty would give us in America."

But Jefferson never faltered; his vision was keener than theirs, his trust greater, his understanding deeper. Though a George the Third sat on the English throne, and a Napoleon strode across the European Continent like a Colossus, and a Metternich and a Talleyrand set the wicked pace for diplomats of the Old World, Jefferson labored to such avail that he created not only a nation but a party. It was only a few years afterward that Jefferson became President of a nation and a party which, largely through his own efforts, were builded on the doctrine that all men are equal in the eyes of nature and the law; that life, liberty, and happiness are inalienable rights; that the function of government is to safeguard and guarantee those rights; and that all authority and inspiration of government are drawn from the consent of the governed.

He was a leader who traveled life's common way "in cheerful godliness", yet assumed life's lowliest burdens and duties on behalf of those who could not do so themselves.

To those who head the forces of reaction in our time Jefferson would protest, as he did to George the Third, in tones of defiance and warning.

"Open your breast, sire, to liberal and expanded thought," thundered the great Virginian, then only 31 years old. "Let not the name of George the Third be a blot on the page of history. The whole art of government consists in the art of being honest. Only aim to do your duty and mankind will give you credit where you fail."

With equal justice he could say today to those who seem bent upon converting the Government into an instrument for improving the conditions of the powerful and wealthy that, "The whole art of government consists in the art of being honest."

Though we cannot emphasize too much Jefferson's service in framing the Declaration of Independence, which struck an entirely new and loftier note in the century-old struggle for human rights, and his accomplishments from 1776 until he returned to Monticello late in life, broken in health, and sadly in debt; it seems to me his earlier achievements were even more noteworthy. His later triumphs in the fields of politics and human development were merely an extension of the principles he eptiomized in Virginia. There he stood forth as the foe of mediaeval organization of society, politics, law, and education. You cannot know the true Jefferson—the father of a Nation and a party—unless you understand his services in destroying outworn social, political, legal, and religious forms in the Old Dominion.

Virginia, with Massachusetts, was the nursery of the Revolution, of the Declaration of Independence, and of the United States of America. But the seeds of democracy had been planted in the Bay State long before; it needed only provocation to bring them to their period of growth. In Virginia, George the Third and all he represented had stout defenders. It was Jefferson who made Virginia's soil fertile for the reception of democratic ideas in that grand old State, and it was Virginia which swept the rest of the South into the maelstrom of war and freedom out of which we emerged as a nation.

There, as later, by pen and uttered word, he betrayed a magic skill in crystallizing into sharp and distinct outlines the issues for which America fought. He gave voice to the wavering sentiment of human freedom. Time and again, when the colonists were swaying between complete independence and partial servitude to the British Crown, there came from Jefferson's lips or pen a statement, a letter, or draft of resolutions which banished doubt, inspired the faint-hearted, and nerved the isolated groups to the great efforts which culminated in both a warlike and peaceful vindication of the great principles set forth in the Declaration of Independence.

In Virginia, however, Jefferson revealed his instinctive hatred of all forms of oppression and tyranny, his faith in the people, and his realization that the tyrant may assume many shapes. In his day Virginia had an established church which was recognized and favored by the Government; it was a crime to join dissenting churches. He struggled for years against the established forces, incurring the lasting enmity of powerful groups; but in the end he brought complete religious freedom to that great Commonwealth. Virginia, because of Jefferson, was the first sovereign State in the history of the world to proclaim formally in its laws the absolute religious freedom of all its citizens.

So, too, he revised the judicial code which supported and bulwarked an institution of punishment and tyranny that went back to the Middle Ages. He forced the repeal of laws against witchcraft and heresy, of legislation which preserved great landed estates to the permanent disadvantage of the many, of statutes which restricted manufacturers, navigation, and development of a sound currency system. An aristocrat on his mother's side, with the blood of nobility in his veins, he struck a death blow at aristocracy insofar as it sought to determine and control what the people should think, how they should worship, how they should be governed, and how they should live. I firmly believe he would have struggled against any attempt to say what they should eat or drink.

It was in Virginia that Thomas Jefferson transplanted the seeds of democracy which, under his care and guarding, have flowered and grown into a sheltering tree whose beneficent shadow now stretches across the world.

Long before slavery became a problem dividing our Nation and requiring determination by the sword and gun, Jefferson urged its abolition. His original draft of the Declaration of Independence cited British fostering of the iniquitous slave trade as one of its crimes against America and humanity, but, unfortunately, it was stricken out by the more conservative of the patriots. In the Virginia Legislature he labored for eventual emancipation of the black men. In establishing a temporary form of government for the northwestern territory he inserted a clause banishing slavery after the year 1800. It lost by 1 vote. Many of his doctrines that have come down to us are being stricken out day by day and are losing by one or more votes. As he was ever on his guard, so we must be. Problems almost as serious as that of slavery, problems which threaten to divide a nation, are upon us now. It is not necessary to enumerate them.

Jefferson, as I have mentioned, was determined to keep us from imperialistic schemes abroad, but he was an ardent believer in a greater America. It was he who initiated and consummated the Louisiana Purchase; it was he who sponsored the Lewis and Clark expedition through western wilds to the Pacific coast; it was he who inspired the acquisition of Florida.

It was he who enhanced young America's prestige abroad by sweeping the Mediterranean clear of the Barbary pirates at a time when such world powers as Great Britain, France, and Spain were paying yearly tribute to the Sultan of Morocco. And before Monroe promulgated that great doctrine of America for the Americans, without interference from the Old World, he submitted it to his friend and adviser, then living in retirement at Monticello.

Thus "Jeffersonian democracy" is not a mere political catchword. It is a glowing ideal which should animate us regardless of party today, even in the face of triumphs by those who have abandoned his principles, who still manifest distrust in the people's right and ability to govern their own affairs. As against the theory that people were created for the Government, which is at the root of many of our evils today, he proclaimed the principle that the Government was established for the people. Liberty, to him, was not a privilege; it was a right, and government a mere responsibility delegated by the people. The first and only consideration was how much government was necessary to achieve human happiness and freedom—freedom in government, freedom in education, freedom in worship.

It is time to reexamine our Government in the light of these flashes of inspiration enjoyed by our great leader. It is time for us to make a pilgrimage, if only in fancy, to the grave of Thomas Jefferson, and draw renewed faith in the people from the following epitaph which he wrote himself:

"Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of American Independence, of the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia."

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend as part of my remarks certain information concerning the imports of silk and cotton textiles and raw products from Japan. Japan seems to be crying "Wolf!" "Wolf!" During the year 1934 we bought from Japan 15,857,258 square yards of finished silk fabrics besides $71,764,009 worth of raw silk.

The fallacy of the argument which pretends that the amount of cotton textiles imported from Japan into this country is negligible is easily refuted when it is considered that these importations are a concentrated competition in bleached goods made of print cloths.

Those who are familiar with this particular branch of the textile industry tell me that approximately 150,000,000 square yards represents our annual output of this product. During the first 2 months of this year Japan has exported to this country in the neighborhood of 7,000,000 square yards. Should this ratio be maintained for the remainder of 1935 it can be readily seen that it would mean a total of 42,000,000 square yards in this classification, or nearly 30 percent of last year's domestic production. However, if the geometrical rate of increase is maintained, no one can predict the limit of the probable volume in this class of goods, since our manufacturers cannot possibly develop any adequate price competition under present conditions. That is why it is a fallacy to say that the amount of textile importations from Japan is insignificant. Comparisons should be made only by classification.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

A WAY SUGGESTED TO BRING ABOUT PERMANENT AND SOLID RECOVERY

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a letter I wrote to the President on relief matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, it is an unhealthy condition when citizens will fight, as they are now fighting, to get on the Government pay roll. It is not the function of Government to employ people, except insofar as may be necessary to carry on the processes of orderly Government. Yet we have come to a deplorable pass in this country where the Government is the great employer, and it appears that literally millions of people, men and women, adults and minors, all over the Union, are straining themselves to the limit, desperately striving to get their names on a Government roll. The mail that comes to Members of Congress is heavily swollen with applications for Government employment, and in every Congressman's office the filing section devoted to "Requests for jobs" is stuffed to the bursting point.

The urge to grasp the supporting arm of the Government and to hold onto it like grim death is so great that there is in evidence a developing tendency of citizens who are "on the Government" to refuse private employment when offered, either because they believe they will jeopardize their interests by letting go of their Government support or because the custom of looking to the Government for relief is becoming so ingrained and entrenched that it is developing into a regular habit not easily to be shaken off. One of my Indianapolis correspondents wrote to me the other day about a group of citizens in Ohio who were offered work by a railroad company and declined in a body, stating that they preferred to remain on Government relief.

The transfer from private employment to Government employment is amazing and alarming. Until the vast civilian army that is drawing sustenance from the Government can be demobilized and sent back to private employment and private pay rolls, the danger signals will continue to fly and earnest patriots will feel genuine concern over the future of our country. A few years ago I wrote a book descriptive of the encroaching governmental bureaucracy entitled "America Go Bust", in which I showed on authority of the Library of Congress that a mere list of the boards and commissions in existence then made a volume of 147 printed pages, and the Librarian of Congress was careful to explain that the list was partial and incomplete! I shudder to think how many pages have been added to that book since that time.

In my opinion, it would be a salutary thing, in the interest of a happy and prosperous future America, if many of these governmental agencies, which are now such a heavy burden on the taxpayers, to say nothing of their intrusion into the private concerns of the people, were wiped off of the slate at one stroke. I would abolish them outright and send their personnel back to private life to take potluck with the people who have to earn their living in creative private employment—creative in the sense that it adds to the general wealth and prosperity of the Nation. Other activities I would demobilize down to the point where they would cease to be inquisitorial in character and would become administrative only, always remembering that there is a world of truth in Jefferson's adage, "That government is best which governs the least." We have too many beardless young officials telling experienced business men what to do and how to do it. Leave the job to the honest and experienced business man and he will do it a lot better than if he is ordered and directed from Washington.

Now I have said that it is a very unhealthy condition when so many are struggling to get on the Government roll, either for employment or for relief, and that is true; but I do not wish my observation to be construed in any way as a criticism either of those who are seeking this employment and this relief or of the great humanitarian President of the United States who is striving so devotedly and so nobly to guide the Nation to better times. I realize, of course, that the condition I speak of only comes from the situation of dire desperation in which so many millions of our fellow citizens find themselves. Over the doorway of nearly every factory superintendent and every private employment agency in the land is the sign "men not wanted." Unable to secure work from private employers and with no visible source of income to keep their loved ones from starvation, men turn desperately to the Government. Can any one who has a judgment to understand and a heart to appreciate affliction, blame them? I think not. Nor am I disposed to be harsh in my criticism of those who decline to go off of the Government relief roll to accept the first job that is offered, realizing that the job offered may last only a few days while the relief relinquished would sustain the beneficiary and his family a much longer period. Let us in these awful times try to be kind and considerate and not judge others unjustly. Let us remember that all of us belong to the same great family, that we are all children of the same God.

TIDAL RUSH FOR GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT

Why are people turning to the Government in ever-increasing numbers, in almost the proportions of a tidal wave, for work? The answer is simple. Because business and industry are so impoverished and prostrate that the Government is, for the time, about the only employer.

In my opinion this fact suggests just one thing for our consideration and suggests it so clearly and unmistakably that he who runs should be able to read the lesson: It suggests that there should be a change in our national policy away from spending vast sums for artificial relief, to a policy of lending the Government's credit to revive business, industry, and reemployment by normal processes, thus bringing about relief by natural and normal methods without placing a burden on the Federal Treasury. I have accordingly suggested to our great President that he use half of the $4,000,000,000 relief fund to revive business and industry by making loans in small amounts to business men and manufacturers, in order that they may start operation of their plants and call men off of the relief rolls back into regular employment.

Vast expenditures for public works will never restore normal employment and prosperity, in my judgment, but by increasing the debt and tax burden and throwing the Budget more out of balance such expenditures will increase the fear of business men and will postpone the day of normalcy in business and industrial activities. The Lord forbid that there should be many more postponements of the return to normalcy in America.

The viewpoint of business men is well expressed, I think, in a letter I have just received from Nicholas H. Noyes, a distinguished and nationally known business executive of Indianapolis, secretary and treasurer of the firm of Eli Lilly & Co., of Indianapolis. He writes:

Our foreign sales manager, Mr. R. W. Showalter, has just returned from a 7 months' trip over in Australia, New Zealand, China, Singapore, India, Europe, and the Philippines.

He reports that in Australia, New Zealand, Singapore, India, and England business is very good. He pointed out that most of these countries 2 or 3 years ago were in bad condition, particularly Australia and New Zealand, but that in every one of them they are now operating under a balanced budget, and that they are the bright spots of the world so far as building construction, trade, and manufacturing in general are concerned.

I send this to you because I think it will be interesting and because I believe that many of our Senators and Representatives in Washington fail to realize what a deterrent to good business a greatly unbalanced budget is and how tremendously helpful it would be to get this changed.

England was in very bad shape in a business way 3 years ago, but just about the time when she then went off the gold standard she balanced her budget by the most heroic expense-cutting methods and started immediately to improve, including a great building boom which has been going on for the past year and a half to 2 years.

I believe the suggestion I have made to the President points the way—and the only way—to solid and permanent recovery in this country. It would add, I think, to the great humanitarian and social benefits which his administration has accomplished, and which will make President Roosevelt's name notable in American history, a complete restoration by normal means of business and industry, and it would take millions off of the relief rolls and put them back in private employment where they belong. It would accomplish this result without throwing the Budget further out of gear, and every business man in America would be thankful for that.

VITAL QUESTION MUST BE DECIDED

My suggestion to the President was made in all sincerity and earnestness. I believe the time has come when we must decide the very vital question as to whether we shall restore and revitalize business and industry and normal reemployment or whether we shall still further project Government into competition with business and industry, thus promoting tendencies and leading to consequences which no one with mere finite vision can fathom.

By permission of the House, I insert in the RECORD my letter to the President, as follows:

APRIL 8, 1935.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Congress has just placed at your carte blanche disposal an enormous relief fund of $4,000,000,000—the largest fund of that character ever appropriated in the history of the world—and the question arises, "How is it to be spent?" I wish to make a suggestion as to how, in my opinion, you might use not more than half of that sum, or $2,000,000,000, to bring about permanent and solid recovery in America, with resultant widespread prosperity and happiness to the masses of our people.

Your love for humanity, demonstrated in a thousand ways; your well-known fairness and your generous tolerance of constructive criticism, encourage me to write this letter. Of this I at least feel certain, namely, that whether you approve my suggestion or not; whether you consider it worthy of further attention or not, you will know that my motives are good and that it is the well-meant offering of not only a party associate but a personal friend.

My suggestion is that you use $2,000,000,000, or one-half of this vast fund of $4,000,000,000, in making loans to smaller business concerns and industries that cannot now operate and give employment because they are financially starved and have no working capital.

I wish to bring to your attention a bill I have introduced, which embodies in concrete and clearly understandable form, the idea I have in mind and which reads as follows:

"There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000,000,000 as a fund from which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall make loans for working capital to business concerns and manufacturing industries. The plan of lending said sum of $2,000,000,000 shall be based, as nearly as practicable, on an average loan of $50,000 to 40,000 business men and manufacturing firms and the aggregate loans of any one firm under this act shall not be in excess of $200,000.

"Within 10 days after the approval of this act the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation shall summon to a conference to be held at Washington, D. C., officials of recognized National and State business, manufacturing and other industrial organizations, and outstanding leaders in the business and industrial world. The purpose of said conference shall be to assist officials of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in devising a systematic plan for the lending of said fund of $2,000,000,000 in such a way as to aid in restoring normal employment throughout the country as soon as possible. Loans shall be made on the basis of the applicant's willingness and demonstrated capacity to furnish employment. Loans shall be granted whenever there is reasonable assurance that the applicant will be able to repay the amount borrowed. Loans shall be for a period of 5 years at 5 percent interest, with the privilege of renewal for 2 years if the conditions of the loan are meanwhile satisfactorily complied with."

Now, Mr. President, that you have funds at your disposal twice ample to carry out the purpose of this bill, I wish you could see your way clear to carry this idea into effect by Executive order. There is no doubt of your legal right to use $2,000,000,000 for this purpose. On that point I direct your attention to a letter of Comptroller General McCarl to Mr. BUCHANAN, Chairman of our Appropriations Committee, which you will find on page 5321 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 5, 1935. In that letter the Comptroller General holds that the specific items written into the bill in the Senate's break-down are merely limitations on those proposed expenditures, and do not bar you from using the fund for other purposes of relief. The Comptroller General, of course, is the last authority in interpreting the act.

The sentiment of the country, as I sense it, is rapidly turning away from vast expenditures of public money, and I believe this is the last large fund that will be voted by the Congress as a direct appropriation for economic relief. A swing of sentiment back toward governmental retrenchment, a reduction of debt and tax burdens, and balanced budgets is clearly discernible.

The success of this last great fund will depend, in my judgment, on the plan that will be adopted to administer it. If it is used in accordance with the philosophy of my proposal to rehabilitate the normal processes of regeneration, that is to say, to make it possible for business men and manufacturers to get on their feet and by so doing resume operations, giving employment in regular jobs to millions of men and women now on relief rolls, that in my opinion will start activities that will usher in real and abiding prosperity, for when these normal processes of regeneration are once rehabilitated and functioning continuously they will automatically take care of the employment problem by enabling all worthy persons to make the transfer from the despised charity and relief rolls to regular employment. If a substantial part of the appropriation of $4,000,000,000 is not used to revitalize business and industry, I fear that when the great fund runs out and the last dollar is spent we shall have as many unemployed as we have now, and with an even more distressing problem to face, because by that time millions of our fellow beings will have become accustomed to looking to the Federal Government to sustain them instead of to business and industry, which should be their regular employers.

I yield to no one in my admiration of the great service you have rendered to humanity in legislation and executive acts that protect the masses from exploitation and establish great principles of equality and social justice. What you have done along that line entitles you to be remembered with Jefferson and Lincoln. With all that has been so well done to bring crooked financiers under control I am in hearty accord. But, speaking as a friend and supporter, I believe the time has come when we should give some concern to the situation of honest capital and do more to encourage capital to resume operations in the interest of all the people. To that end, with the worst of the emergency over, I would take the Government as rapidly as possible out of many things in which it is now actively engaged and which, I believe, constitute an inadvisable projection of government and bureaucracy into legitimate business interests if continued.

In the long run our Government must be either capitalistic or socialistic. America attained a state of prosperity unparalleled in the history of the world under the capitalistic system, which was just as important to the working man as it was to the employer, because the workingman cannot get a job unless there is an employer with capital enough to pay him a salary, unless, of course, the universal employer should become the State, which, God forbid!

By lending, not donating, $2,000,000,000 of this great fund to business men and manufacturers I believe you would not only revitalize employment, but you would revitalize prosperity. I believe you would find that 95 percent of all these loans would ultimately be paid back into the Federal Treasury. I would like to see these loans offered in small allotments of a few thousand dollars up to $100,000 so as to make reemployment universal. I would like to see you take personal charge of the situation and call the business men of the Nation to the colors, accepting the challenge issued by President Harriman, of the United States Chamber of Commerce, recently when he said that "business is rarin' to go." I would like to see you issue a call to business men to come to Washington for a conference, when plans will be mapped out on a systematic basis to revive business and industry by Government loans, using the applicant's pledge to reemploy as the yardstick to measure his loan.

With nothing but admiration for the great service you have rendered to America and the world along humanitarian lines, I respectfully submit these suggestions as to a further program which I sincerely believe if carried into effect would lead the remainder of the way out of the morass to solid and permanent recovery.

With best wishes, very truly yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 15, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

Hollingsworth, resolving that they express appreciation for the protection afforded small enterprise in this industry through the National Industrial Recovery Act against the predatory trade practices and the destructive price cutting which was more than prevalent at the time the act became effective, and that they desire to have continued this security for both small enterprise and the workers within the industry, and that the code authority place itself on record as unanimously supporting the extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act for 2 years; to the Committee on Labor.

7055. Also, petition of the Perry County Central Trades and Labor Council, Crooksville, Ohio, by their secretary, J. A. White, unanimously voting as being unalterably opposed to war, and asking that laws be passed prohibiting the drafting or conscription of men for foreign war service, and preventing our country from entering a war, except to guard against invasion; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7056. Also, petition of Post 1090 of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Warren, Ohio, by their adjutant, J. C. Craig, urging support of House bill 6995, restoring benefits to Spanish-American War veterans, their widows and dependents; to the Committee on Pensions.

7057. Also, petition of the Organization of Street Railway & Motorcoach Employees, Local Division No. 788, of the city of St. Louis, Mo., comprising a membership of 3,300 workers, by their secretary-treasurer, Matthew True, urging support of the Wagner-Connery labor relations bill and the Black-Connery 30-hour bill, as they believe them to be capable of doing much toward the alleviation of the present industrial relationship and increasing employment, both of which are of paramount importance at this time; to the Committee on Labor.

7058. Also, petition of Knox Camp, No. 54, United Spanish War Veterans, Mount Vernon, Ohio, by their adjutant, Charles E. Clewell, urging support of House bill 6995, which will restore the Spanish War, including the Boxer Rebellion and Philippine Insurrection veterans, their widows and dependents, and for other purposes, back to the original status of laws enacted prior to March 19, 1933; to the Committee on Pensions.

7059. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the city of Attleboro, Mass.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7060. Also, petition of the city of Rochester, N. Y.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7061. Also, petition of the Italian-American World War Veterans of Camden County, N. J.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7062. Also, petition of Typothetae of Philadelphia, Inc.; to the Committee on Labor.

7063. By Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts: Petition signed by Catherine Smith and 163 other citizens of Haverhill and West Newbury, Mass., urging the passage of the Townsend plan for old-age assistance; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who in this Holy Week didst walk the way of suffering and death, ever conscious of Thy Father's love, ever mindful of the world's great pain: Teach us in this day new-born that we must be alone in deep midsilence, open-doored to God, if deeds of greatness be ever dreamed or done. Live Thou again in us, in thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars, in pulses stirred to generosity, in deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn of miserable aims that end in self, that we may be to other souls the cup of strength in this their hour of utmost need. Enkindle generous ardor in the nations of the world, that under the shadow of Thy cross of love mankind may weave the only conqueror's garland of true peace. We ask it in Thy name and for Thy sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, April 12, 1935, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

GENERAL PULASKI'S MEMORIAL DAY—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 48)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying joint resolution, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith Senate Joint Resolution 21, "Authorizing the President to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski", without approval.

I take special note that this proclamation would be made an annual event.

Every American should have the deepest appreciation of the brilliant and gallant services of General Pulaski in the Revolutionary War. His devotion to duty ended only when he fell in action in the service of the Republic; he is one of our heroes of that time and of all time.

General Pulaski was distinguished among the noble company of those who gave their all for that cause; some were Americans; some were from countries across the sea. I do not think that General Pulaski would have wished to be singled out from his fellows and comrades for more honor than we can give to them all. Our tributes to the memory of the officers who served on the staff of General Washington will be the more fitting and appropriate if we do not seek to legislate separate memorial days for each of them, however illustrious they may be.

For our own leader of the American Revolution, the greatest of Americans, and for him alone, have we as a people set apart one day each year.

CHARLES C. FLOYD—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 49)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill no. 274, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles C. Floyd."

This bill provides that Charles C. Floyd shall hereafter be held and considered to have received an honorable discharge from the military service on December 10, 1930, the purpose being to give him, as to the future, the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred by any law upon honorably discharged soldiers.

The records of the War Department show that Charles C. Floyd was separated from the military service of the United States and an honorable discharge denied him because of habits and traits of character which rendered his retention in the service undesirable. The enactment of S. 274 into law would, in effect, constitute a legislative reversal of the considered action of the authorities charged with the execution of the laws enacted for the government and control of the military forces, and, as I am advised by the War Department, would single out for preferential treatment one individual of a large but undetermined number of former soldiers whose status is identical with that of the man under discussion. Moreover, it would place a man whose service was such as to necessitate his removal for the good of the service on a par with those whose service was honest and faithful.

EXPENSES OF INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF MILITARY MEDICINE AND PHARMACY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State, with an accompanying memorandum, to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Eighth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy, to convene at Brussels in June 1935.

ACT OF PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE—SUBMISSION OF PHILIPPINE CONSTITUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for your information a copy, as received by radiogram from the Acting Governor General of the Philippine Islands, of Act No. 4200, enacted by the Tenth Philippine Legislature, first special session, on April 8, 1935, and approved on the same date, entitled:

"An act to submit to the Filipino people for ratification or rejection the Constitution of the Philippines, with the ordinance appended thereto, to appropriate funds therefor, and for other purposes."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 11, 1935.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 5914) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, California, in 1935 and 1936, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EMPLOYMENT FOR GRADUATES OF EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS (S. DOC. NO. 50)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Civil Service Commission, in response to section 2 of Senate Resolution 67, relative to aiding graduates of educational institutions in the matter of securing employment, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, covering the period of December 1 to December 31, 1934, inclusive, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 35

Whereas the Democratic Party of Texas in convention assembled on September 11, 1934, adopted the following plank in the party platform:

"We oppose the abdication or surrender of the State's power to control the production of its natural resources. We likewise oppose any Federal encroachment upon the exclusive power of this State to control the production of oil and gas. We oppose any plan that results in the arbitrary compulsory unitization of oil fields"; and

Whereas there is pending at this time before the Committee on Mines and Mining of the United States Senate a bill known as the "Thomas bill", which has for its purpose the attempted regulation of the production of oil within the States; and

Whereas the purpose of said bill is directly contrary to the principles contained in the platform of the Texas democracy and contrary to the principles of our dual form of government in that it is an attempted invasion of the sovereign powers of this and other States of the Union: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Texas (the house of representatives concurring), That the Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress be, and they are hereby, respectfully petitioned and requested to oppose the adoption of the so-called "Thomas bill" or other similar bills; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate and the chief clerk of the house of representatives be, and they are hereby, instructed to mail a copy of this resolution to the Members of the Texas delegation in the Congress of the United States, to the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and to the Chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the United States Senate, and to the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Assembly Joint Resolution 46

Relative to memorializing the President of the United States and Congress in connection with trans-Pacific air mail service

Whereas various aviation groups in the United States are actively engaged in a study of the need for and the requirements of a trans-Pacific airplane service; and

Whereas it appears that such a service soon will be established through the enterprise and pioneering spirit of the American aviation industry; and

Whereas the success of such a worth-while undertaking will depend to some extent upon Federal contracts for carrying mail to and from continental United States and other localities in and bordering upon the Pacific Ocean; and

Whereas it is understood that the Post Office Department is at present considering the early establishment of an air-mail service across the Pacific: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Assembly of the State of California, the senate concurring, does herewith respectfully urge the President of the United States, the United States Senators, and the Members of the House of Representatives from California to approve and recommend the establishment of such trans-Pacific air mail service, together with such appropriations and other legislative action by the National Congress as may be necessary to accomplish the purposes herein set forth; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, Senators JOHNSON and MCADOO, and the Members of the National House of Representatives from California.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the petition of S. R. Simmons, of Columbia, S. C., praying for the enactment of old-age pension legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Escondido Lodge, No. 344, I. O. O. F., of Escondido, Calif., favoring the adoption of the so-called "Townsend old-age-pension plan", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Aldermen of Chelsea, Mass., protesting against the importation of Japanese-made merchandise in competition with American industry, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at a joint meeting of the Bois DeOrmont Post, No. 1795, and the Ladies Auxiliary, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Bridgeton, N. J., favoring the enactment of House bill 1, to provide for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Italian-American World War veterans of Camden County, N. J., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation providing for the payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram from the student body of Denison University, Granville, Ohio, submitting a protest against war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Boston (Mass.) group of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, favoring the enactment of legislation to control private property in war times within rigidly moderate limits, which was referred to the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Racine, Wis., favoring the enactment of legislation proclaiming October 11 in each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Middleport, N. Y., praying for the enactment of House bill 5802, being an amendment to section 601 of the Revenue Act of 1932, to provide an excise tax on eggs and egg products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York Flour Club, New York City, N. Y., protesting against the processing tax now effective on wheat, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from a citizen of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act to license processors of agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Parent-Teacher Association of No. 38 School, Rochester, N. Y., favoring the establishment of a national film institute to encourage the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion pictures for visual education and for suitable entertainment, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Nassau-Suffolk Monument Dealers' Association, New York, favoring the continuance of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Independent Retail Tobacconists' Association of America, Inc., New York City, N. Y., favoring the continuance of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Infants' and Children's Wear Code Authority, New York City, N. Y., favoring continuance of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Branch No. 57, of Schenectady, and Branch No. 139, of Tonawanda, both of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of the so-called "Lundeen bill", being the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Columbia Council, No. 31, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Port Washington, Long Island, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation creating in the Department of Justice a bureau of alien deportation, and also reducing the immigration quotas to 40 percent of the number now admitted, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Manor Council, No. 112, of Woodhaven, and Paul Revere Council, No. 102, of Brooklyn, both of the Sons and Daughters of Liberty, in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation to strengthen the existing law pertaining to the deportation of aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Bronx County organization of the American Legion, Bronx, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the so-called "Wagner-Costigan antilynching bill", which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a nonsectarian sisterhood known as the "Sword of the Spirit", Far Rockaway, N. Y., protesting against the adoption of a billion dollar national defense program, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Temple Hill Association, Inc., of Newburgh, N. Y., favoring the passage of the so-called "Jenckes bill", relative to the display of the American flag on public buildings, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn and vicinity, in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of House bill 1411, to permit full cuts of United States postage stamps to be printed in stamp catalogs, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Little York Grange No. 442, of Little York, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the so-called "motor carrier bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Nassau County Farm Home Bureau Association, favoring governmental regulation of all transportation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GERRY presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolution of the general assembly protesting the reported intention of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States to increase the processing tax on cotton

Whereas it has come to the attention of the general assembly that the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, is planning to increase the processing tax on cotton; and

Whereas such action on the part of the Department of Agriculture of the United States would have a very serious effect upon the textile industry of the State of Rhode Island and would further increase unemployment in this State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the general assembly protests the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States and trusts that he will reconsider his alleged decision to increase the processing tax on cotton; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit duly certified copies of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States and to the Honorable Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

Mr. GIBSON presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Vermont, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Joint resolution relating to extension of the Civil Service Act to include postmasters of all classes

Whereas it is universally recognized that civil service as applied to postal workers in the Government service has been of material benefit in the upbuilding of the efficiency; and

Whereas President Roosevelt and the Civil Service Commission has recommended to Congress the extension of the Civil Service Act to include postmasters of the first, second, and third class, believing it to be a forward step in the progress and efficiency of the service; and

Whereas the present system of changing postmasters frequently under the "spoils" system because of some political influence is considered wasteful and conducive to instability and inefficiency as well as uneconomical to the Government. It is believed that under civil service incompetent postmasters would be removed and efficient postmasters retained: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That the general assembly of this State respectfully requests the Senators and Representatives of Vermont in the Congress of the United States to take such steps as will bring about an extension of the Civil Service Act to include postmasters of all classes; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be submitted by the secretary of state to the Senators and Representatives of Vermont in the Congress of the United States.

SHELTER BELTS IN EASTERN COLORADO

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Colorado Legislature has transmitted to the Colorado delegation in Congress house joint memorial 14, urging the establishment of shelter belts, supplementing the proposed national shelter belt, to relieve dire need and distress in eastern Colorado. I ask that the memorial be printed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House Joint Memorial 14

Whereas the Congress of the United States has heretofore appropriated certain funds for the establishment of a national shelter belt in the benefits of which Colorado, western Kansas, and western Nebraska do not participate; and

Whereas the conditions of the western Great Plains area constituting eastern Colorado, southwestern Nebraska, and western Kansas due to drought, unfavorable weather conditions, wind, and dust storms are such that steps must be taken immediately to prevent further soil erosion, the conservation of moisture, and the establishment of wind breaks or unbelievable disaster will result to these areas; and

Whereas there has been organized by the people of eastern Colorado, western Kansas, and western Nebraska an association known as "the Western Great Plains Shelterbelt Association" for the purpose of procuring the establishment of shelter belts supplemental to the national shelter belt to accomplish in the western Great Plains area the objects for which the national shelter belt was established: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Thirtieth General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the senate concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States is respectfully memorialized to appropriate and set aside immediately the funds necessary to establish shelter belts in eastern Colorado, supplemental to the national shelter belt to accomplish all the purposes for which the national shelter belt was established in the territory known as the "western Great Plains area" in the State of Colorado, thus relieving dire need and distress in such territory; be it further

Resolved, That the purposes of the Western Great Plains Shelterbelt Association be approved and that each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Colorado be urged to support and assist in carrying out the purposes of this memorial; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Colorado, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior, and the chairmen of the respective committees in the House of Representatives and the Senate having jurisdiction of the said matter.

UNAMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. GUFFEY presented resolutions adopted by Jesse W. Soby Post, No. 148, the American Legion, of Langhorne,

Pa., which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
JESSE W. SOBY POST, No. 148,
Langhorne, Pa.

Whereas repeatedly, in the past few months, allegations have been made over the radio and in the public press by prominent persons of integrity that national officials of the American Legion and Legion members in close liaison with these officials and national headquarters have been guilty of un-American activities; and

Whereas we believe these allegations should be investigated and guilt or innocence be proved; and

Whereas in a quasi-military organization, as the American Legion, the presumption of guilt might well remain a stigma unless such investigation be made; and

Whereas Congress by act chartered the American Legion: Therefore be it

Resolved, By the Jesse W. Soby Post, No. 148, American Legion, Department of Pennsylvania, Langhorne, Pa., that the Congress of the United States investigate thoroughly the allegations, and that those concerned be given an opportunity to prove their innocence; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress make this investigation open to the public and press, without any reservation whatsoever, so that for the good of the Nation and the American Legion those may be either exonerated or suppressed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) for the adjustment and settlement of losses sustained by the cooperative marketing associations, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 483) thereon.

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2185) to amend an act entitled "An act to accept the cession by the State of Oregon of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Crater Lake National Park, and for other purposes", reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 484) thereon.

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2215) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the collection and publication of statistics of tobacco by the Department of Agriculture", approved January 14, 1929, as amended, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 485) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1460) to fix standards for till baskets, Climax baskets, round-stave baskets, market baskets, drums, hampers, cartons, crates, boxes, barrels, and other containers for fruits or vegetables, to consolidate existing laws on this subject, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 486) thereon.

Mr. MURPHY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 12) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 487) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 2306) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the heirs of James Taylor, deceased Cherokee Indian, for the value of certain lands now held by the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 488) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1523) to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Wolf Point, Mont., in the construction or improvement of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 489) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1528) for expenditure of funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Poplar, Mont., in the construction or improvement of public-school building to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 490) thereon.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6223) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 491) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) directing the Comptroller General to readjust the account between the United States and the State of Vermont, reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF RAILROADS

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (S. 2573) to provide for the creation of a corporation to be known as the "United States Railways"; to provide for the possession, control, and ownership of certain property of carriers by United States Railways; and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WHEELER. In connection with the bill which I have just introduced, providing for the creation of a corporation to be known as "United States Railways", and which I have asked to have referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD an analysis of the bill.

There being no objection, the analysis of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANALYSIS OF THE GOVERNMENT-OWNERSHIP BILL

This bill is a comprehensive Government-ownership statute, providing for the acquisition, ownership, and management of the railroads by a Federal corporation, called the "United States Railways", under public management and in the public interest.

The bill authorizes the creation of the United States Railways and its acquisition of the property of the railroads, either by consolidation of the present companies with the Federal corporation and an exchange of their respective securities, or by use of eminent domain and a payment for the property in debentures of the United States Railways guaranteed by the Government.

The provisions for acquisition by exchange of securities permit the United States Railways to offer its securities to a carrier, or to the latter's security holders, on a basis which the bill prescribes, the security holders being given the option of accepting the offer or of receiving under condemnation proceedings the present value of their securities paid in Government-guaranteed debentures. The bill authorizes an offer, under the exchange provisions, of debentures equal to the present value of the carrier securities plus contingent securities (income bonds or preferred stock, not guaranteed by the Government) of the United States Railways equal to the difference between such present value of the carrier's securities and what their value would be on the basis of the 1930 earnings, it being provided that the interest payable on the debentures thus issued shall not exceed the present income of the property and that the aggregate interest and dividends payable on the debentures and contingent securities shall not exceed the income of the year 1930. These provisions have two principal purposes. In the first place, it is intended to make it possible for the Government to acquire the property in such a way that the fixed charges can be borne by the present earnings of the property, thereby avoiding the necessity of meeting such charges through taxation. In the second place, it is intended to provide for a fair treatment of the security holders and not to restrict them to payment for the value of their holdings at depression prices. Consequently, the act provides for an acquisition on a basis whereby the security holders will be made whole for the present value of their holdings and will be given "rain check" securities for the difference between the present value and the value on the basis of the 1930 income. This "rain check" arrangement gives the security holders the benefit of future increases in earnings, using those of the year 1930 as an upper limit. That this is a fair and liberal basis is clear from the fact that the net railway operating income of the class I railroads in 1930 was $870,000,000, which is approximately the average of the last 10 years, the earnings of the period 1925–34, inclusive, being $850,000,000, whereas the 1934 income was $463,000,000. The bill does not adopt the suggestion which has been sometimes current that the Government should take over the railroads and guarantee the bonds, thus bailing out one class of investors. Under the exchange proposed, it is clear that the capital costs of the transportation system would be substantially reduced, because the property would be acquired on a basis which is less than the present capitalization, the funded debt being consequently lower, and there would be a reduction of the interest rate, since Government-guaranteed debentures will bear lower interest rates than the present railroad bonds.

Under the provisions of the bill, where physical property is acquired by the use of eminent domain, or where securities are condemned, the value is to be paid for wholly in debentures of the United States railways, guaranteed by the Government. The value is to be determined by a special commission called the "Railway Acquisition Tribunal", under provisions which put emphasis upon the present actual commercial value of the property and which are designed to exclude from consideration reproduction costs and similar data which, in view of the obsolescence created by competitive transportation agencies and the low earning power of the property, are no indication of its present or prospective value.

The bill provides for the temporary taking over of the railroad properties on January 1, 1936, pending permanent acquisition proceedings, on a rental arrangement very similar to that used during Federal control in the war period.

The bill provides for the protection of the operation of the United States railways from the influence of politics. The management is vested in five trustees, whose salary is to be $20,000 a year, and who shall be men of wide experience and demonstrated capacity and obligated to administer the properties in the public interest, independent of political considerations, and on a self-supporting basis. In the appointment of trustees, officers, and employees and their dismissal, promotion, or demotion, no political qualification may be given consideration, and officers of the United States or of any political party organization are forbidden by the act to solicit or recommend the appointment, dismissal, promotion, or demotion of any officer or employee. Provision is made for a railroad advisory council consisting of 24 members, to be appointed by the President and representing labor and the various industries and professions. Provisions are made under which, speaking generally, there is no important disturbance of the present system of State taxation of railroad property or of the handling of labor problems. The Interstate Commerce Commission is given substantially the same authority over rates as it had during the period of Federal control.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. COPELAND introduced a bill (S. 2582) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commere of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have just introduced, for reference to the Committee on Commerce, a ship subsidy bill. This bill has been prepared with great care following conferences with the House Committee and the Senate Committee on Commerce. Because of the fact that it will be of great interest to the shipping industry and they will be anxious to know what we are proposing, I ask that the message of the President on this subject be printed in the RECORD, to be followed by the printing of the bill itself.

There being no objection, the President's message and the bill introduced by Mr. COPELAND were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I present to the Congress the question of whether or not the United States should have an adequate merchant marine.

To me there are three reasons for answering this question in the affirmative. The first is that in time of peace, subsidies granted by other nations, shipping combines, and other restrictive or rebating methods may well be used to the detriment of American shippers. The maintenance of fair competition alone calls for American flag ships of sufficient tonnage to carry a reasonable portion of our foreign commerce.

Second, in the event of a major war in which the United States is not involved, our commerce, in the absence of an adequate American merchant marine, might find itself seriously crippled because of its inability to secure bottoms for neutral peaceful foreign trade.

Third, in the event of a war in which the United States itself might be engaged, American flag ships are obviously needed not only for naval auxiliaries, but also for the maintenance of reasonable and necessary commercial intercourse with other nations. We should remember lessons learned in the last war.

In many instances in our history the Congress has provided for various kinds of disguised subsidies to American shipping. In recent years the Congress has provided this aid in the form of lending money at low rates of interest to American shipping companies for the purpose of building new ships for foreign trade. It has, in addition, appropriated large annual sums under the guise of payments for ocean mail contracts.

This lending of money for shipbuilding has in practice been a failure. Few ships have been built and many difficulties have arisen over the repayment of the loans. Similar difficulties have attended the granting of ocean mail contracts. The Government today is paying annually about $30,000,000 for the carrying of mails which would cost, under normal ocean rates, only $3,000,000. The difference, $27,000,000, is a subsidy, and nothing but a subsidy. But given under this disguised form it is an unsatisfactory and not an honest way of providing the aid that Government ought to give to shipping.

I propose that we end this subterfuge. If the Congress decides that it will maintain a reasonably adequate American merchant marine I believe that it can well afford honestly to call a subsidy by its right name.

Approached in this way a subsidy amounts to a comparatively simple thing. It must be based upon providing for American shipping Government aid to make up the differential between American and foreign shipping costs. It should cover first the difference in the cost of building ships; second, the difference in the cost of operating ships; and finally, it should take into consideration the liberal subsidies that many foreign governments provide for their shipping. Only by meeting this threefold differential can we expect to maintain a reasonable place in ocean commerce for ships flying the American flag, and at the same time maintain American standards.

In setting up adequate provisions for subsidies for American shipping the Congress should provide for the termination of existing ocean mail contracts as rapidly as possible and it should terminate the practice of lending Government money for shipbuilding. It should provide annual appropriations for subsidies sufficiently large to cover the differentials that I have described.

I am submitting to you herewith two reports dealing with American shipping: A report of an interdepartmental committee known as the "Committee on Shipping Policy", appointed June 18, 1934, by the Secretary of Commerce, and a report to me from the Postmaster General on ocean mail contracts prepared pursuant to an Executive order of July 11, 1934.

Reports which have been made to me by appropriate authorities in the executive branch of the Government have shown that some American shipping companies have engaged in practices and abuses which should and must be ended. Some of these have to do with the improper operating of subsidiary companies, the payment of excessive salaries, the engaging in businesses not directly a part of shipping, and other abuses which have made for poor management, improper use of profits, and scattered efforts.

Legislation providing for adequate aid to the American merchant marine should include not only adequate appropriation for such purposes and appropriate safeguards for its expenditure, but a reorganization of the machinery for its administration. The quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative duties of the present Shipping Board Bureau of the Department of Commerce should be transferred for the present to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Purely administrative functions, however, such as information and planning, ship inspection, and the maintenance of aids to navigation should, of course, remain in the Department of Commerce.

An American merchant marine is one of our most firmly established traditions. It was, during the first half of our national existence, a great and growing asset. Since then it has declined in value and importance. The time has come to square this traditional ideal with effective performance.

Free competition among the nations in the building of modern shipping facilities is a manifestation of wholly desirable and wholesome national ambition. In such free competition the American people want us to be properly represented. The American people want to use American ships. Their Government owes it to them to make certain that such ships are in keeping with our national pride and national needs.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 4, 1935.

To develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. It is necessary for the national defense and development of its foriegn and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine (1) sufficient to carry at least one-half of the foreign commerce of the United States and to provide shipping service on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of national commerce at all times, (2) capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, (3) owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States and so operated and regulated as to secure to the shipper of American products adequate service and parity of rates to foreign markets, and (4) composed of the best equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels, constructed in the United States and manned with a trained and efficient citizen personnel. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine by the means hereafter expressly provided in this act and by any other means which the Congress from time to time may deem necessary. Insofar as not inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the agencies of the United States Government charged with the administration of this act and shipping laws shall, in such administration and in the making of rules and regulations, keep always in view the purpose and object of the policies herein expressed as the primary end to be attained.

TITLE II—UNITED STATES MARITIME AUTHORITY

SEC. 201. (a) A board is hereby created to be known as the "United States Maritime Authority", and hereinafter referred to as the "Authority". The Authority shall be composed of five persons, hereinafter referred to as "members", to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the President shall designate the member to act as chairman of the Authority, and the Authority may elect one of its members as vice chairman. The members of the Authority shall be appointed as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, and shall continue in office for terms of 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 years, respectively, from the date of their appointment, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of 7 years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he succeeds. The members shall be appointed with due regard to their fitness for the efficient discharge of the duties imposed upon them by this act. Not more than one member shall be appointed from the same State. Not more than three of the members shall be appointed from the same political party. A vacancy in the Authority shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. No member shall take any part in the consideration or decision of any claim or particular controversy in which he has a pecuniary interest.

(b) No member shall be appointed who is in the employ of, or holds any official relation to, any common carrier by water or other person subject to this act or the shipping laws, or owns any stock or bonds thereof, or is pecuniarily interested, directly or indirectly, in any person subject to this act. No member while in office shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment, or hold any official relation to any common carrier by water or other person subject to this act or the shipping laws, or own any stock or bonds thereof, or be in any manner pecuniarily interested, directly or indirectly, in such person.

(c) The duties of the Authority may be so divided that under its supervision the directorship of various activities may be assigned to one or more members. Any member may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. In case of a vacancy in the Authority the remaining members shall exercise all its powers. The Authority shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) The Authority may adopt rules and regulations in regard to its procedure and the conduct of its business. It may employ, within the limits of appropriations made therefor by Congress, such attorneys as it finds necessary in the conduct of its work, or for proper representation of the public interest in investigations made by it or in proceedings pending before it, whether at the Authority's own instance or upon complaint, or to appear for or represent the Authority in any case in court or other tribunal.

(e) Each member shall receive a salary of $12,000 per annum. The Authority shall appoint a secretary at a salary of $7,500 per annum, and employ and fix the compensation of such attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees as it may find necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as may be appropriated for by the Congress, and shall, whenever possible, in such employment, employ qualified present employees of the United States Shipping Board Bureau or United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation. The President, upon the request of the Authority, may authorize the detail of officers of the military, naval, or other services of the United States for such duties as the Authority may deem necessary in connection with its business.

(f) With the exception of the secretary, a clerk to each member, the attorneys, naval architects, and such other special experts and examiners as the Authority may from time to time find necessary to employ for the conduct of its work, all employees of the Authority shall be appointed from qualified present employees of the United States Shipping Board Bureau or United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, or from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law, when no such qualified Shipping Board employee is available.

(g) The expenses of the Authority in the conduct of its business, including necessary expenses for transportation, incurred by the members of the Authority or designated employees under its orders, in making any investigation or upon official business in any other place than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the Chairman of the Authority, or a designated employee of the Authority.

SEC. 202. The Authority is authorized and directed:

(1) To study all national maritime problems, and their proper relationship to trade and commerce;

(2) To analyze and edit pertinent data and develop plans for construction and efficient operation of vessels, taking into consideration the benefit accruing from standardized production where practicable;

(3) To determine, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Authority, the amounts of direct financial aid to be paid under contracts awarded pursuant to titles III and V of this act; and

(4) To study means by which the revenue of contractors may be increased by advertising and solicitation on the part of operators, and wherein economies may be effected.

(5) To establish and maintain liaison with such other departments and boards of the Federal Government, and with representative trade organizations throughout the United States, as may be concerned, directly or indirectly, with any movement of commodities in foreign commerce, for the purpose of securing preference to vessels of United States register in such shipments.

INVESTIGATIONS

SEC. 203. The Authority shall make studies of and make a report to Congress as soon as practicable on—

(1) The scrapping of old or obsolete tonnage owned by the United States or in use in the merchant marine;

(2) Tramp shipping service and the advisability of participating in such service with vessels under United States register;

(3) The construction by or with the aid of the United States of superliners, especially with a view to their use in national emergency.

(4) The relative cost of construction of comparable ocean vessels in the various coastal districts of the United States, together with recommendations as to how such differential may be equalized.

SEC. 204. In the execution of its duties under this act the Authority is authorized and directed to investigate, determine, and keep current records of: (1) The essential services, routes, and lines for the development of the American merchant marine pursuant to section 7, Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 866);

(2) the relative cost of construction or reconditioning of comparable vessels of the United States and in foreign countries; (3) the relative cost of marine insurance, maintenance repairs, wages and subsistence of officers and crews, in the operation of comparable vessels on particular routes, services, and lines under the laws, rules, and regulations of the United States and under those of the foreign countries whose vessels are the competitors of such American service, route, or line; (4) the extent and character of the governmental aid and subsidies granted by foreign governments to their merchant marine; (5) the number, location, and efficiency of the shipyards now existing or which may hereafter be built in the United States; and (6) such other matters, as such Authority may from time to time determine to be necessary, relating to the development of the merchant marine and the cost of maintenance and operation of the various services, routes, and lines compared with the cost of similar services, routes, and lines under foreign flags.

TITLE III—OCEAN MAIL ROUTES AND ADJUSTMENT OF OCEAN MAIL CONTRACTS

SECTION 301. After the date of enactment of this act no contracts shall be awarded or renewed under title IV of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 46, secs. 891e to 891r, inclusive).

SEC. 302. The Postmaster General shall, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act, investigate and determine on what ocean trade routes between ports of the United States or any territory, district, or possession thereof, and foreign ports, it is desirable for the needs of the Postal Service of the United States that mail of the United States should be carried in whole or in part by vessels documented under the laws of the United States, and the schedule of mail movements which in his judgment should be in force upon such route or routes. The Postmaster General shall certify the results of such investigation and determination to the Authority as soon as possible after the same shall be concluded.

SEC. 303. The Authority shall, as soon as practicable after action taken as provided in section 302, determine the type, size, speed, and other characteristics of the vessels which should be employed upon the route or routes so certified, the frequency and regularity of their sailings, the minimum speed at which they should be safely operated at sea in ordinary weather, and all other facts bearing upon the capacity and suitability of the vessels to meet the requirements of the Postal Service as certified by the Postmaster General, and to promote the commerce and welfare of the United States and the other purposes of this act.

SEC. 304. In accordance with sections 302 and 303 and existing law, the Postmaster General is authorized to enter into contracts with citizens of the United States for such periods as he may deem advisable, but not exceeding 20 years, for the operation of such vessels in the carriage of mail and for the performance of commercial services in such trades and for the other purposes of this act. The vessels employed under such contracts shall be (1) American built and documented under the laws of the United States, during the entire time of such employment, or (2) shall have been documented under the laws of the United States not later than April 1, 1935, and shall remain so documented during the entire time of such employment.

SEC. 305. All mails of the United States carried on vessels between ports between which it is lawful under the navigation laws for a vessel not documented under the laws of the United States to carry merchandise shall, if practicable, be carried on vessels in respect of which a contract is made under this title.

SEC. 306. Upon each vessel employed in ocean mail service under a contract made under this title, the Postmaster General shall be entitled to have transported such mail messengers as he may require, for whom shall be provided subsistence, suitable staterooms, and working quarters, all free of charge. Such messenger shall wear suitable uniforms to be prescribed by the Postmaster General.

SEC. 307. In the case of failure of a vessel from any cause to perform any regular voyage required by a contract made under this title, a pro rata deduction shall be made from the contract price on account of such omitted voyage; and suitable deductions, to be determined by the Postmaster General, may be made from the compensation payable under the contract for delays, failures to properly safeguard the mails, or other irregularities in the performance of the contract. Deductions so determined upon shall be deducted by the Postmaster General from the payments otherwise due and payable under the terms of the contract. The Postmaster General may, in case of emergency, permit the substitution for a particular voyage of a vessel not within the provisions of the contract, even though not conforming to the requirements of section 305

SEC. 308. If there are any vessels now being operated on any such routes by citizens of the United States who hold mail contracts made pursuant to the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, then the Authority may, subject to the approval of the President, privately negotiate with the holder of any such contract, without advertisement or taking of bids as hereinbefore provided, for a surrender of such contract, and for the substitution therefor of a new contract for the performance of services under this act, on such terms and conditions as the Authority may deem advisable.

If it is impossible to reach an agreement for such substituted contract, then the Authority may approve the continuance of the existing contract, or the President may cancel such contract and determine just compensation therefor, and if the amount of the compensation so determined by the President is unsatisfactory to the holder of such contract, the latter shall be entitled to receive such portion thereof as the President shall determine, and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said portion so received, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor, in the manner provided by paragraph 20 of section 41 and section 250 of title 28 of the United States Code.

TITLE IV—NEW CONSTRUCTION

SECTION 401. (a) The necessity is hereby recognized for replacement of existing vessels and for the addition of new vessels, as conditions may require, to develop and maintain a well-balanced and adequate merchant marine of modern passenger, combination passenger and cargo, and cargo vessels, qualified to compete with similar types of vessels of other nations, and it is also recognized that 20 years constitute the average economic life of such vessels and, therefore, in awarding contracts under this act, the Authority shall require the construction of such new vessels as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

(b) In case the new vessel or vessels to be constructed will replace a vessel or vessels which are old, slow, or otherwise inadequate or obsolete for the service in which engaged, the Authority is authorized in its discretion to buy such ship or ships from the applicant at a reasonable value (which in no event shall exceed the cost of such ship or ships to the applicant, less a reasonable and proper depreciation thereon) and apply the purchase price to that part of the cost of the construction of such new vessel or vessels to be borne by the applicant. The Authority may lay up or scrap said vessel or vessels, or may sell, charter, or otherwise provide for the operation of said purchased vessel or vessels in some other service or route for which the vessel or vessels may be suitable.

TITLE V—FINANCIAL AID TO THE MERCHANT MARINE

PART I—CONSTRUCTION DIFFERENTIAL SUBSIDY

SECTION 501. (a) The Authority is authorized and directed to consider the application of any citizen of the United States as defined in section 38 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 802), for financial aid in the construction, outfitting, and equipment of new vessels, or the reconditioning of vessels already built, to be used on an essential service, route, or line in the foreign commerce of the United States. If the Authority determines that (1) the service, route, or line requires a new vessel of modern and economical design or the reconditioning of a vessel already built, to meet competitive conditions or to further promote the foreign commerce of the United States; (2) the plans and specifications of the proposed vessel meet the requirements of commerce; and (3) the applicant possesses the ability, experience, financial resources, and character necessary to successfully operate and maintain such vessel in the proposed service, the Authority shall then, pursuant to the provisions of this Act, determine the difference between the domestic and foreign construction cost of a vessel of the type proposed to be built, or the difference between the domestic and foreign reconditioning cost of a vessel of the type proposed to be reconditioned.

(b) (1) The said specifications shall be submitted to the Navy Department, who shall have the right to suggest such changes therein as it may deem necessary or proper in order that the proposed vessel may be adequate as a naval or military auxiliary and otherwise suitable for the use of the Government in case of national emergency or for the national defense.

(2) In case the said specifications shall be satisfactory to the Authority and shall be approved by the Authority and the Navy Department, the Authority shall have the authority to grant a subsidy of such amount as will equal, but not exceed, the difference between the cost of construction of the said vessel in an American shipyard and the cost of constructing the same, or an equivalent vessel, under the same specifications in a foreign shipyard of equal standing: Provided, however, That the said subsidy may be increased to the extent of the extra cost of constructing or equipping said vessel as a naval auxiliary, together with the estimated increased cost of operating such vessel over its economic life by reason of such naval provisions, over the cost of such vessel for commercial purposes.

SEC. 502. (a) The Authority is authorized to enter into a contract with the applicant and a shipbuilder for (1) the construction, outfitting, and equipment, or the reconditioning of the proposed vessel subject to the provisions of section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 870, Supp. VII, title 46, sec. 870); (2) the payment to the shipbuilder by the Authority out of the fund created by such section of a construction subsidy based on the difference in cost determined under subsections (a) and (b) of section 501; and (3) if the applicant is eligible and applies therefor, a construction loan under such section.

(b) In case no construction loan is applied for by the applicant for financial aid, the construction subsidy shall be paid to the shipbuilder upon completion of the vessel. In case a construction loan is granted, such loan shall not be for a greater sum than three-fifths of the total cost of the construction, outfitting, and equipment, or reconditioning, less the construction subsidy, and no advance shall be made on such loan until the applicant for aid has paid to the shipbuilder not less than 25 percent of such total cost, not including the construction subsidy.

SEC. 503. The total performance of the contract shall be secured as required under the provisions of section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 870, Supp. VII, title 46, sec. 870). The Authority shall require the proposed construction, outfitting, and equipment, or reconditioning to be done in a shipyard within the continental limits of the United States as the result of competitive bidding between the shipyards designated by agreement between the Authority and the applicant, after due advertisement, with the right in the auhority to reject any or all bids.

SEC. 504. No vessel in respect of which a construction subsidy has been paid shall be operated other than exclusively in foreign trade, unless the owner shall receive the consent of the Authority and furnish satisfactory bond or other security to the Authority to secure the repayment to the United States, in equal semiannual installments over the remaining assumed useful life of the ship (not exceeding 20 years), of an amount which bears the same proportion to the amount of subsidy paid by reason of paragraph (a) of section 501 as such remaining period bears to the entire assumed life of the ship, with interest at 5 percent per annum on the unpaid installments. No repayment shall be required for any semiannual period during which such vessel shall be operated wholly in foreign trade. During the time as determined by the Authority such vessel is operated in the joint domestic and foreign trade the owner shall refund only a proportion of the repayments payable for such period equal to the ratio of the revenues derived from its domestic trade to the revenues derived from the foreign trade.

PART II—OPERATING DIFFERENTIAL SUBSIDY

SEC. 505. (a) The Authority is authorized and directed to consider the application of any citizen of the United States as defined in section 38 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 802), for financial aid in the operation of a vessel or vessels constructed or to be constructed within the continental United States, and to be used in the foreign commerce of the United States. If the Authority determines that (1) the operation of such vessel or vessels is required to meet competitive conditions or to further promote the foreign commerce of the United States; (2) the applicant possesses satisfactory ability, experience, financial resources and character, and already owns, or can and will secure, a vessel or vessels of the size, type, speed, and number required, and has the proper equipment and other characteristics to enable him to operate and maintain a service, route, line, vessel, or vessels in such manner as may be necessary to meet competitive conditions; and (3) the payment of an operating differential subsidy is necessary to place the operation of such vessel or vessels on a parity with foreign competitors, it shall then determine the amount of operating differential as hereinafter provided.

(b) The Authority is authorized to enter into a contract with the applicant for the maintenance and operation of a service, route, line, vessel, or vessels determined to be necessary for a period not exceeding 20 years.

(c) Such contract shall provide that the operating differential subsidy shall be paid the applicant and shall be an amount per voyage for the operation and maintenance of said service, route, line, vessel, or vessels, based on the difference in cost of insurance, maintenance, repairs, and the wages and subsistence of officers and crews, in the operation of comparable vessels under the laws, rules, and regulations of the United States as compared with those of the foreign countries whose vessels are competitors of such service, route, line, vessel, or vessels, including the effect of governmental aid or subsidies in such foreign countries, as determined by the Authority.

(d) The Authority shall require such security, in such manner and form as he may determine to be reasonable and necessary to insure the performance of the contract by the owner.

SEC. 506. (a) The Authority shall endeavor to permit full and fair competition as far as possible consistent with the purposes of this act, by requiring the inauguration of the service sufficiently in the future as to enable prospective contractors to provide for the construction or acquisition of the vessels required.

(b) No such contract shall be made with respect to a vessel to be operated on a service, route, or line served by citizens of the United States unless the Authority shall determine that the service already provided upon such route or line is inadequate, and that in the public interest additional vessels should be operated thereon.

SEC. 507. (a) Every contract executed under this part shall provide for the payment of the subsidy to the owner at stated intervals, but not in advance.

(b) Every such contract shall provide that the amount of the payments to the owner shall be subject to review and readjustment from time to time, but not more frequently than once a year, at the instance of the Authority or of the owner. If any such readjustment cannot be agreed to between the Authority and the owner, the Authority, on its own motion or on the application of the owner, shall determine the facts, and after a proper hearing it is authorized to make such adjustment in the amount of such payments as it may determine to be fair and reasonable and in the public interest. Its decision shall be based upon and governed by the changes which may have occurred since the date of the said contract, with respect to wages, operating costs, foreign subsidies, or other conditions affecting shipping, and shall be promulgated in a formal order.

(c) In case the owner shall not be satisfied with such determination, a suit to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order of the Authority shall be brought in the district court against the United States. The pending of such suit shall not of itself stay or suspend the order of the Authority, but the court in its discretion may retain or suspend in whole or in part the operation of the Authority's order pending the determination of the suit.

No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order made or entered by the Authority shall be issued or granted by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. When such application as aforesaid is presented to a judge he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least 5 days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Authority, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit. In cases where irreparable damage would otherwise ensue to the petitioner, a majority of said three judges concurring, may, on hearing, after not less than 3 days' notice to the Authority and the Attorney General, allow a temporary stay or suspension, in whole or in part, of the operation of the order of the Authority for not more than 60 days from the date of the order of said judges pending the application for the order or injunction, in which case the said order shall contain a specific finding, based upon evidence submitted to the judges making the order and identified by reference thereto, that such irreparable damage would result to the petitioner and specifying the nature of the damage. The said judges may, at the time of hearing such application, upon a like finding, continue the temporary stay or suspension in whole or in part until decision upon the application. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction, in such case if such appeal be taken within 30 days after the order, in respect to which complaint is made, is granted or refused; and upon the final hearing of any suit brought to suspend or set aside, in whole or in part, any order of said Authority the same requirement as to judges and the same procedure as to expedition and appeal shall apply.

(d) Every such contract shall provide that the compensation to be paid under it shall be reduced, under such terms and in such amounts as the Authority shall determine, for any periods in which the vessel or vessels are laid up without a reason satisfactory to the Authority, or are used in domestic commerce, either wholly or in conjunction with foreign commerce.

SEC. 508. (a) In case the Authority shall determine that a change in the service, route, or line is necessary in the public interest, it is authorized to agree with the owner to make such change upon such readjustment of payments to the owner as shall be arrived at by the method prescribed in (b) of section 507.

(b) If at any time the owner (excluding one obligated under a construction loan or receiving a construction differential), receiving an operating differential subsidy, finds that he cannot maintain and operate his vessels on such service, route, or line with a reasonable profit upon his investment, then he may, after 60 days' notice in writing to the Authority, withdraw such vessels from such service, route, or line, and thereupon the further payment of the operating differential subsidy shall cease and the owner be discharged from any further obligation under such contract.

SEC. 509. (a) No contract executed under this part or any interest therein shall be sold, assigned, or transferred, either directly or indirectly, or through any reorganization, merger, or consolidation, or pursuant to any involuntary proceeding against the holder thereof, without the consent of the Authority; nor shall any agreement or arrangement be made by the holder whereby the maintenance or operation of the service, route, line, vessel, or vessels is to be performed by any other person without the written consent of the Authority. In case the Authority consents to such agreement or arrangement, the agreement or arrangement shall make provision whereby the person undertaking such maintenance or operation agrees to be bound by all of the provisions of the contract and of this act applicable thereto, and the rules and regulations prescribed pursuant to this act. In case the holder of any such contract shall voluntarily sell such contract or any interest therein, or make such assignment, transfer, agreement, or arrangement whereby the maintenance or operation of the service, route, line, vessel, or vessels is to be performed by any other person, without the consent of the Authority, the Authority shall have the right to cancel such contract.

(b) Contracts executed under this part may be canceled by the Authority, for repeated and intentional violations of such contract, this act, or rules and regulations prescribed pursuant to this act. The Authority may impose appropriate penalties for violations of such contract, this act, or rules and regulations prescribed pursuant thereto, not to exceed $, which shall be deducted from subsidy payments.

SEC. 510. (a) The vessels receiving financial aid under this part shall be of steel or other acceptable metal, shall be steam or motor propelled, shall be as nearly fireproof as practicable, and shall be American built and registered under the laws of the United States during the entire time of such employment.

(b) A vessel for the service of which a contract is entered into under this part, and the construction of which is hereafter begun, shall be either (1) a vessel constructed according to plans and specifications approved by the Authority and the Secretary of the Navy, with particular reference to economical conversion into an auxiliary naval vessel; or (2) a vessel which will be otherwise useful to the United States in time of national emergency.

SEC. 511. No contractor under a contract in force under this part shall suffer or permit any insurance, stevedoring, terminal, ship repairing, towboat, or other services of like character to be supplied vessels operated under such contract, by any subsidiary or other corporation directly or indirectly controlled by such contractor, except with the written consent of the Authority.

SEC. 512. (a) Every vessel operating under a contract in force under this part, of less than 10,000 gross tons, shall be required to carry 2 cadets, and every vessel of 10,000 gross tons and over shall be required to carry 4 cadets. Such cadets shall be compensated by the contractor in the amount of not less than $30 per month; shall be provided with quarters separate from those occupied by unlicensed members of the crew; and shall be afforded every opportunity to serve an apprenticeship in, and be instructed concerning, the navigation and operation of the vessel.

(b) Naval officers of the United States on the active list may volunteer for service on any vessel employed in service under a contract made under the provisions of this part, and when accepted by the owner or master thereof may be assigned to such duty by the Secretary of the Navy. While in such employment such officers shall receive from the Government half pay, exclusive of allowances, and such other compensation from the owner or master as may be agreed upon by the parties; but such officers while in such employment shall be required to perform only such duties as appertain to the merchant marine.

PART III—SHIPPING TRADE PROMOTION AID

SEC. 513. (1) Any citizen of the United States as hereinbefore defined may apply to the said committee for a subsidy to enable him to operate in foreign commerce a vessel or vessels owned by him and documented as a vessel of the United States, for the purpose of developing the foreign commerce of the United States in a service or on a route with respect to which the operating subsidy provided for in section 505 hereof would be inadequate. Such application shall contain all the information required of applicants for operating subsidies, and in addition thereto all the facts indicating the inadequacy of an operating subsidy. If the Authority shall determine that it is in the public interest and desirable for the further development of the commerce of the United States, and that an operating subsidy determined as hereinabove provided would be inadequate, then it is authorized to grant a subsidy of such amount as it may determine, for a period which it shall fix not exceeding 5 years, and upon such other terms and conditions as the Authority shall fix, consistent with the provisions of this act, and it may enter into a contract with the applicant accordingly. The amount of such trade development subsidy shall not exceed in any year the amount of the actual losses reasonably incurred in maintaining and operating such vessel in such service or route, together with interest, not exceeding 6 percent, upon his capital actually invested therein. Except as herein otherwise provided the provisions of part II hereof with respect to operating subsidies shall apply to contracts for shipping trade promotion aid.

PART IV—PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO FINANCIAL AID GENERALLY

SEC. 514. Each application for financial aid under the provisions of this title shall be accompanied by statements disclosing the names of all persons having any pecuniary interest, direct or indirect, in such application, or the ownership or use of the vessel or vessels, services, routes, or lines covered thereby, and the nature and extent of any such interest, together with such financial statements as may be required by the Authority. All such statements shall be in such form as the Authority shall prescribe. Whoever knowingly files or causes to be filed with the Authority any statement false in any material particular shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject upon conviction to a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or to both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 515. (a) Every contract executed under this title shall contain provisions requiring:

(1) Each party to the contract (except the Authority) and every affiliate, subsidiary, or holding company connected with any such party, to keep its books, records, and accounts relating to such contract, and to the maintenance and operation of the vessels, services, routes, and lines covered by the contract, in such form and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Authority; and

(2) Each party to the contract (except the Authority), and every affiliate, subsidiary, or holding company connected with any such party, to file, upon notice from the Authority, statements of financial operations, special reports, memoranda of any facts and transactions, appertaining to the performance of or transactions or operations under such contract directly or indirectly affecting the financial results of such operation, and including all transactions or operations appertaining or subsidiary thereto, insurance, stevedoring, handling of cargo, wharfage, terminal charges, and any other matters which in the opinion of the Authority affect the financial results in the performance of or transactions or operations under such contract.

(b) The Authority is authorized to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts referred to in this section whenever it may deem it advisable or whenever requested by either House of Congress. The parties to the contracts referred to in this section (except the Authority), and affiliate, subsidiary, and holding companies connected with any such party, shall keep their books, records, and accounts referred to in this section open to inspection and audit at all times by accredited representatives of the Authority.

(c) The Authority may employ special agents or examiners who shall have authority to examine all accounts, records, and memoranda kept or required to be kept hereunder. The Authority may prescribe the length of time such accounts, records, or memoranda shall be preserved.

SEC. 516. In case of failure or refusal on the part of any person to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda in manner prescribed by the Authority, or to submit such accounts, records, and memoranda to the inspection of the Authority or any of its authorized agents or examiners, such person shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $5,000 for each such offense. Such forfeiture shall accrue to the United States and be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States. Any person who shall falsify any account, record, or memoranda, or who shall willfully destroy, mutilate, or alter any such account, record, or memoranda, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject upon conviction thereof to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not less than 1 year nor more than 3 years, or both such fine and imprisonment. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the several District Courts of the United States shall be authorized to try and punish offenses hereunder within their respective jurisdictions.

SEC. 517. To safeguard the public interest in the administration of financial aid under this act, every contract executed under this title shall contain provisions requiring—

(a) The contractor to conduct its operations with respect to the vessels, services, routes, and lines covered by its contracts in the most economical and efficient manner;

(b) That salaries and allowances (including compensation in any form) to its officers, employees, and counsel shall be reasonable;

(c) That there shall be set aside in trust in a depository approved by the Authority, in amounts and from sources agreed to in the contract, funds for depreciation, to assure construction of replacement tonnage, and an adequate operating reserve. Such funds shall not be withdrawn for any purpose except by consent of the Authority and that part of the fund clearly due of the Authority and if not used for the purposes specified, that part of the fund clearly due to Government advances shall revert to the Maritime Authority.

(d) In case of any contractor owning, operating, chartering, or acting as an agent for foreign vessels or of foreign interests or in case of any transaction of the contractor with organizations or persons with whom its directors or officers are connected or affiliated, such transactions shall be subject to regulations and orders prescribed by the Authority.

TITLE VI—MERCHANT-MARINE FUNDS

PART I—CONSTRUCTION LOAN FUND

SEC. 601. The provisions of sections 11 and 12 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended, are hereby reenacted. All the powers and duties therein vested in the United States Shipping Board, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, or transferred to the Department of Commerce by section 12 of the Executive order signed June 10, 1933, pursuant to the act of Congress approved March 3, 1933, are hereby transferred to and shall be exercised by the Authority.

SEC. 602. All sums of money now in the construction loan fund created by section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, together with all debts, accounts, choses in action, and all notes, mortgages, and other evidences of indebtedness arising out of loans made from said fund, are hereby assigned, transferred, and set over and made available to the Authority.

PART II—INSURANCE FUND

SEC. 604. The provisions of title V of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, are hereby reenacted, and all the power and duties therein vested in the United States Shipping Board or transferred to the Department of Commerce by section 12 of the Executive order signed the 10th day of June 1933, pursuant to act of Congress approved the 3d day of March 1933, are hereby transferred to and shall be exercised by the authority.

TITLE VII—REGULATORY POWERS

SEC. 701. The power and duties vested in the United States Shipping Board by sections 14, 14 (a), 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 38, 39, 40, and 41 of the Shipping Act, 1916, as amended by the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, and the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended herein, or transferred to the Department of Commerce by the Executive order signed the 10th day of June 1933, pursuant to the act of Congress approved the 3d day of March 1933, are hereby transferred to and vested in and shall be exercised by the Authority: Provided,

(1) That the last paragraph of section 18 of the Shipping Act, 1916, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Whenever the Authority finds that any rate, fare, charge, classification tariff, regulation, or practice demanded, charged, collected, or observed by said carrier is unjust or unreasonable, it may determine or prescribe an order enforcing a just and reasonable maximum or minimum rate, fare, or charge or a just and reasonable classification, tariff, regulation, or practice."

(2) That paragraph (b) of section 19 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, be amended to read as follows:

"To make rules and regulations affecting shipping in a foreign trade not in conflict with the law in order to adjust or meet general or special conditions unfavorable to shipping in the foreign trade, whether in any particular trade or upon any particular route or commerce generally and which arise out of or result from foreign laws, rules, or regulations, or from competitive methods or practices employed by owners, operators, agents, or masters of vessels of a foreign country, and to prescribe minimum and maximum rates, fares and charges, rules, and practices which may be charged and enforced by vessels documented under the laws of the United States or foreign vessels in the foreign trade of the United States."

(3) That the second paragraph of section 3 of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, be amended to read as follows:

"Pending such hearing and the decision thereon the Authority, upon filing with such schedule and delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may from time to time suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, but not for a longer period than 4 months beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after full hearing, whether completed before or after the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the Authority may make such order with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective, and may prescribe the maximum and minimum rates, fares, and charges which may be charged and enforced. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made within the period of suspension, the proposed change of rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, and practice shall go into effect at the end of such period. The Authority shall give preference to the hearing and decision of such questions and decide the same as speedily as possible. Nothing contained herein shall be construed to empower the Authority affirmatively to fix specific rates."

INTERRELATION OF RAIL AND WATER TRAFFIC

SEC. 702. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water-transportation service and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve both rail and water transportation, and the Authority and the Interstate Commerce Commission are hereby severally authorized and directed to cooperate to that end.

(b) A board is hereby created, to be known as the "Joint Transportation Board", to be composed of the Secretary of Commerce and of two members selected by the Interstate Commerce Commission from among their members, officers, and employees, and of two members selected by the Authority from among their members, officers, and employees, of which Board the Secretary of Commerce shall be the chairman. Said Board shall appoint a secretary, who shall keep minutes of its meetings, which minutes shall be furnished to all members of the Authority and of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Board shall hold regular semimonthly meetings and such additional meetings as may be necessary to transact its business.

(c) The Board shall consider and make such recommendations to the Authority and the Commission pertaining to the interrelation of rail and water traffic as in its opinion will further the purpose and policy declared in subdivision (a) hereof. None of the provisions hereof shall be construed to limit the power or jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of the Authority with respect to any matter within the lawful jurisdiction of either.

TITLE VIII—AMERICAN SEAMEN

SECTION 801. All vessels operated under any contract made under and pursuant to this act shall be manned in their deck and engine-room departments exclusively by citizens of the United States, native born or completely naturalized, unless satisfactory proof is made to the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection that qualified and competent citizens are not procurable therefor: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the stewards' department, but preference in the employment of citizens in such stewards' department should be given by the owners of any such vessel so far as efficient and competent employees are available.

SEC. 802. The Secretary of Commerce, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized and directed to establish, in such of the principal ports of the United States as he deems advisable, schools for the training of citizens of the United States as seamen for service on vessels documented under the laws of the United States. The Secretary shall make all rules and regulations necessary to carry out the purposes of this section so as to train such citizens in seamanship, particularly in the manning, handling, and rowing of lifeboats, and in knowledge of the construction and use of all appliances and equipment used on board modern passenger and cargo ships with which seamen are concerned, with a view to making American seamen the most efficient and skilled. On the conclusion of such training, certificates showing that such training has been had shall be issued by the Secretary to each individual who has satisfactorily demonstrated his skill and capacity, and the holding of such certificate shall be a condition to the procurement of a certificate as an able seaman as now provided by law.

SEC. 803. The President is authorized to use for the establishment and maintenance of such schools any funds hereafter appropriated by Congress or which have heretofore been made available to him for use in the maintenance of the Federal Civil Works Administration.

SEC. 804. Section 2 of the act of March 4, 1915, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in all merchant vessels of the United States of more than 100 tons gross, excepting those navigating rivers, harbors, bays, or sounds exclusively, the sailors performing the duties of helmsmen and/or lookoutmen, firemen, oilers, and water tenders shall be divided into at least three watches, and each such watch shall be kept on duty successively for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing of the vessels. The seamen shall not be shipped to work alternately in the fireroom and on deck, nor shall those shipped for deck duty be required to work in the fireroom, or vice versa; nor shall any seamen be required to work more than 8 hours in 1 day; but these provisions shall not limit either the authority of the master or other officer or the obedience of the seamen when, in the judgment of the master or other officer, the whole or any part of the crew are needed for the maneuvering of the vessel or the performance of work necessary for the safety of the vessel or her cargo, or for the saving of life aboard other vessels in jeopardy, or when in port or at sea from requiring the whole or any part of the crew to participate in the performance of fire, lifeboat, or other drills. While such vessel is in a safe harbor no seaman shall be required to do any unnecessary work on Sundays or the following-named days: New Year's Day, the Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas Day, but this shall not prevent the dispatch of a vessel on regular schedule or when ready to proceed on her voyage. And at all times while such vessel is in a safe harbor, 8 hours, inclusive of the anchor watch, shall constitute a day's work. Whenever the master of any vessel shall fail to comply with this section and the regulations issued thereunder, the owner shall be liable to a penalty not to exceed $500, and the seamen shall be entitled to discharge from such vessel and to receive the wages earned. But this section shall not apply to fishing or whaling vessels, or yachts."

SEC. 805. Section 4551 of the United States Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4551. That every seaman shall be provided with and shall always carry a book which shall be known as 'a continuous discharge book.' Such book shall have a distinguishing number, description, fingerprint, and photograph of the seaman firmly attached, and shall contain, for each discharge, the name and official number of the vessel, port of registry, tonnage, description of voyage or employment, name of the seaman, nationality, place and date of birth, character, rating, date of entry of the vessel, date and place of discharge. Said discharge book shall be signed for each discharge by the seaman and the master, and attested by the signature and seal of the shipping commissioner or persons duly authorized to act as such commissioner before whom the seaman is discharged. Such book shall be in convenient form; shall be printed, bound, and issued in such number as the Director of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, may decide; and it shall be issued to the seaman by the shipping Commissioner or persons duly authorized to act as such commissioner. Any person, corporation, or association which shall issue any such book or any imitation of such book, or any person who, not being the real owner, shall use or endeavor to use such book, or any person who shall make any statement or endorsement on such book not herein provided or shall make any false or forged entry in such book, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by imprisonment of from 1 to 3 months at the discretion of the court.

"Whenever a seaman is shipped or discharged in any collection district where no shipping commissioners are appointed, and the master of the vessel is performing the duty of shipping commissioner, the master shall make the proper entries in the continuous discharge book and any master who fails to make such proper entry shall pay to the United States a penalty of $100 for each such offense, which fine shall go to the fund for sick and destitute seamen.

"(a) Upon discharge of a seaman, the master shall indicate in the said discharge book a brief designation of the conduct and ability of the seaman during the voyage. Such endorsements in the continuous discharge books shall be supported by corresponding entries in the official log book. If the seaman is of the opinion that his ability or conduct has been inaccurately entered in the book, he shall have the privilege of making an appeal to the shipping commissioner or person duly authorized to act as such before whom he is discharged and whose decision shall be final.

"(b) There shall be maintained in the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection in Washington a central record of every seaman to whom a discharge book is issued under the provisions of this Act, together with the name and address of his next of kin, and a copy of each discharge entry in said discharge book which copy shall be forwarded to the Bureau in Washington by the shipping commissioner or person duly authorized to act as such before whom he is discharged.

"(c) In case of the loss of a book by shipwreck or other casualty, the seaman shall be supplied with another discharge book in which shall be entered all data contained in the last book so far as this may be available from copies of records kept by the Director of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection; in other cases, the seaman may obtain such a duplicate book containing the same entries upon payment of a sum equivalent to the cost thereof to the Government, to be determined from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce.

"(d) At the time of signing the ship's articles, the seaman shall surrender his continuous discharge book to the master and it shall be kept in the master's custody until the seaman is discharged from the vessel. The distinguishing number of the book shall be entered in the articles on the same line as the seaman's signature. When a seaman is left in a hospital in a foreign port, the master shall leave the book in the custody of the nearest United States consul. When a seaman is left in a hospital in an American port the master shall leave the book in the custody of the shipping commissioner at such port, and in both such instances, there shall be made in the continuous discharge book by the master the entry, 'left in hospital', place, and date. If the seaman deserts, the master shall return the book to the United States shipping commissioner at the port of shipment.

"(e) The Director of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection is authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to administer this section and to insure the authenticity of the discharge books issued, and the identity of the owners thereof."

TITLE IX—ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS

SEC. 901. There is hereby established in the Department of Commerce the Office of Maritime Affairs, at the head of which shall be an Assistant Secretary, to be known as "Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Maritime Affairs" to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and to be paid a salary at the rate of $10,000 per annum. Such Assistant Secretary shall, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, have control and supervision of all administrative activities relating to the duties vested in the Department of Commerce in connection with the administration of the navigation laws, the inspection, construction, equipment, and manning of vessels, aids to navigation, and any other duties relating to the merchant marine now under the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce; unless transferred by this act to the Authority and such other duties in connection with maritime affairs to be performed in the carrying out of the provisions, primary purpose, and intent of this act.

SEC. 902. All the power and authority vested in the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation by the Shipping Act, 1916, the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, and the act authorizing suits in admiralty against the United States, and so forth, approved March 9, 1920, and not by this act transferred to and vested in the Authority, are hereby transferred to and vested in the Secretary of Commerce.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 903. The Authority and Assistant Secretary for Maritime Affairs, respectively, shall prescribe and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions, purpose, and intent of this act, as may be necessary to the efficient administration of the function with which each is charged under this act.

TITLE X—MISCELLANEOUS

APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 1001. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 1002. To aid in carrying out the policy and primary purpose of this act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated from time to time, such sums as may be necessary, for expenditure by the Authority, for trade-promotion purposes, for operating ships or lines of ships which have been or may be taken over by the United States, and when not inconsistent with the public interest, to insure a fair rate to shippers of American goods, to enable American ship operators to carry an equitable share of our foreign commerce, or to insure vessels of American registry equitable consideration in conference agreements.

TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 1003. (a) All appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the United States Shipping Board Bureau, and all other appropriations made for shipping, including the fund appropriated to enable the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation to operate ships or lines of ships which have been or may be taken back from purchasers by reason of competition or other methods employed by foreign shipowners or operators as appropriated under the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1927 and reappropriated under the Appropriations Act of February 20, 1929, shall be available for expenditure by the Authority for any and all objects of expenditure authorized by this act in the discretion of the Authority, without regard to the requirement of apportionment under the Antideficiency Act of February 27, 1906.

(b) All appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the Post Office Department for "Foreign Mail Service, Merchant Marine Act", under the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 shall be available for expenditure by the Authority in the same manner and to the same extent as if the Authority had been named in the law making such appropriations.

REQUISITION OF VESSELS

SEC. 1004. Section 702 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"REQUISITION OF VESSELS

"SEC. 702. (a) The following vessels may be taken over and purchased or used by the United States for national defense or during any national emergency declared by proclamation of the President:

"(1) Any vessel in respect of which, under a contract heretofore or hereafter entered into, a loan is made from the construction-loan fund created by section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended—at any time until the principal and interest of the loan have been paid; and

"(2) Any vessel in respect of which an ocean mail contract has been heretofore or is hereafter entered into—at any time during the period for which the contract is in effect.

"(3) Any vessel in respect of which a construction or operating subsidy or shipping-trade promotion aid is granted pursuant to the Merchant Marine Act, 1935, and any vessel which the Government of the United States has the right to acquire or take over pursuant to such act.

"(b) In such event the owner shall be paid the fair actual value of the vessel at the time of taking, or paid the fair compensation for its use based upon such fair actual value; but in neither case shall such fair actual value be enhanced by the causes necessitating the taking. In the case of a vessel taken over and used, but not purchased, the vessel shall be restored to the owner in a condition at least as good as when taken, less reasonable wear and tear, or the owner shall be paid an amount for reconditioning sufficient to place the vessel in such condition. The owner shall not be paid for any consequential damages arising from such taking over and purchase or use.

"(c) The President shall ascertain the fair compensation for such taking over and purchase or use and shall certify to Congress the amount so found by him to be due, for appropriation and payment to the person entitled to the person entitled thereto. If the amount so fixed by the President is unsatisfactory to the person entitled thereto, such person shall be entitled to sue the United States for the amount of such fair compensation, and such suit shall be brought in the manner provided by paragraph 20 of section 24 or by section 145 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 41, 250)."

CONFERENCES

SEC. 1005. To aid in carrying out the primary purpose and intent of this act, the Authority is authorized and directed to have its representatives sitting with and participating in discussions or decisions of pools, conferences, and associations having for their general purpose the distribution of traffic, fixing of rates, and such other matters as are usually the subject of such organizations, and for any such organization to refuse or fail to permit an accredited representative or representatives of the Authority to sit with and participate in such discussions or decisions, shall render such organization, its officers and directors, or each of them, liable to a fine of $.

SEC. 1006. The Authority shall have the power to permit members of conferences to enter into contracts with shippers providing for a return of a stipulated part of freight moneys to the shipper in consideration of the shipper confining his shipments to lines and vessels which are members of the conference.

ANNUAL REPORTS TO CONGRESS

SEC. 1007. The Authority shall make a report to the President of the administration of the functions with which it is charged, including statements relating to the grants of financial aid under this act.

TRANSPORTATION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

SEC. 1008. Any officer or employee of the United States traveling on official business overseas to foreign countries, or to any of the possessions of the United States, shall travel and transport his personal effects on ships registered under the laws of the United States when such ships are available, unless the necessity of his mission requires the use of a ship under a foreign flag: Provided, That the Comptroller General of the United States shall not credit any allowance for travel or shipping expenses incurred on a foreign ship in the absence of satisfactory proof of the necessity therefor.

UNFAIR COMPETITION OR PRACTICES

SEC. 1009. The Authority shall have full power and authority to use any funds not designated for other purposes to give aid and support to the holder of any contract under this act, in meeting any unfair competition or practice by any foreign vessels or vessel, together with the power and authority to use said money to aid and support a "fighting ship" as defined in paragraph 2 of section 14 of the Shipping Act of 1916.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 1010. When used in this act—

(a) The words "foreign trade" mean trade between the United States, its territories or possessions, or the District of Columbia, and a foreign country. The loading or the unloading of cargo, mail, or passengers at any port in any territory or possession of the United States shall be deemed to be foreign trade if the stop at such territory or possession is an intermediate stop on what would otherwise be a voyage in foreign trade; and

(b) The term "citizen of the United States" includes a corporation, partnership, or association only if it is a citizen of the United States within the meaning of section 38 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 802).

(c) The term "person" includes corporations, partnerships, and associations existing under or authorized by the laws of the United States, or any State, Territory, District, or possession thereof, or of any foreign country.

SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

SEC. 1011. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

REPEALS

SEC. 1012. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; but the provisions of this act shall not be construed to repeal any of the provisions of the Shipping Act, 1916, the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, the Merchant Marine Act, 1928, or the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, unless directly in conflict therewith.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 1013. This act may be cited as the "Merchant Marine Act, 1935."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I say further that it is hoped the Senate committee hearings on the bill may begin next week. I may say for the benefit of the occupants of the press gallery that there are copies of the bill available. Judge BLAND, of the House, and I have agreed, because of the interest in the matter, that there is no reason why the material should not be available at once for the press.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 5914) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, Senate bill 423, for the relief of Lynn Brothers Benevolent Hospital, was referred sometime ago to the Committee on Claims. It relates to a claim with respect to an Indian reservation. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and it will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion of Mr. ASHURST, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2542) to authorize the prompt deportation of criminals and certain other aliens, to guard against the separation from their families of certain law-abiding aliens, to further restrict immigration into the United States, and for other purposes, and it was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. McNARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. CAREY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1807) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CASE OF WILLIAM P. M'CRACKEN, JR.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document certain extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD relating to the proceedings against Mr. William P. MacCracken, Jr.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UNDER SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR—NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND RULE XVI

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following notice in writing:

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraphs 1 and 4 of rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 6223) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, the following amendment, viz:

On page 2, line 3, after the word "Interior", insert the following: "Under Secretary (which position is hereby established in the Department of the Interior with compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum and with appointment thereto by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate)"; and

REFUNDING OF GOVERNMENT LOANS—ADDRESS BY SECRETARY MORGENTHAU

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a radio adress delivered April 14, 1935, by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

You will see in tomorrow morning's newspapers that the Treasury has called for redemption on the 15th of next October all of the fourth Liberty Loan bonds whose numbers end in 3 or 4. The last of the Liberty Loan bonds have now been called. And so, in this seventeenth year after the armistice, these famous securities move from the realm of Government finance to the pages of history.

This administration has now called for redemption $8,000,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds. We did not have to call them; they were not due; it was good business sense that prompted our action. The bonds called today bear 4¼-percent interest, while the average interest rate for all Government securities now outstanding is only 2.86 percent.

It is impossible to estimate accurately how much we will save in interest on this new refunding because it has not yet been completed, but I can tell you how much we are saving on our previous $5,000,000,000 of refundings. In round numbers it amounts to $65,000,000 a year. If we do as well on the remainder, which seems to be a fair assumption, there will be an additional saving of $35,000,000 a year. That makes a total of $100,000,000 which will not have to be raised next year from the taxpayers.

Refinancing on this scale has the quality of high adventure. In England, when they undertook a similar operation to reduce debt charges, the Chancellor of the Exchequer felt called upon to ask that no new capital issues be offered during the period of the conversion; and that ban remained in effect 6 months. The operation was accompanied by appeals to patriotism; indeed, it resembled one of our war-time Liberty Loan campaigns. Here we have handled this same transaction so easily and in such a commonplace manner that many people have undoubtedly been unaware of its nature or significance.

But the benefits of this transaction do not end with the saving of $100,000,000 a year.

When we began our refinancing early in 1934 we faced a peculiar situation; there was plenty of money, and presumably it ought to have been cheap, but it wasn't. The bond market was stagnant and prices were low. Scarcely any refunding was going on. There was a log jam in the capital market. The Federal Government took the initiative by refunding the first five billions of high-rate Liberty bonds into lower rate and longer bonds. In the 15 months between January 3, 1934, and April 3, 1935, the average price of representative municipal bonds rose 24 percent. High-grade railroad bonds rose 14.4 percent. Public-utilities bonds rose 12.1 percent. Industrial bonds rose 14.7 percent. These increases in the market value of bonds reflect the decrease in the cost of money.

The great importance of cheap money to improve business conditions is not generally realized. The great corporations came into the market to attend to their necessary financing. The financial pages of your newspapers reflect the impressive change in the dimensions of their operations. Let me give you the figures. During March 1934 the total volume of corporate refunding amounted to only twelve and a half million dollars with no lowering in the interest rate. But during March of this year corporate refunding exceeded $112,000,000—or nine times as much as during the previous March. And the interest rate on the new issues this year shows an average decrease of almost 1½ percent which meant a saving of more than one and a half million dollars. That is real refunding. It shows conclusively that the financial log jam has been broken.

These developments have a very definite meaning in your everyday life. They affect not only the taxpayer but every stockholder, producer, consumer, and worker.

We are now just on the eve of seeing the substantial benefits of this fundamental change.

There is no longer any reason why capital should not flow normally into the arteries of business. In fact, with the splendid cooperation and wise guidance of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, it is doing so.

Although you may not have followed all this refinancing in detail, you have undoubtedly read headlines referring to the new-deal expenditures. Nobody denies that there have been expenditures—and large ones—but let us go into that subject realistically.

Soon after this administration came into office, March 4, 1933, the President submitted a comprehensive recovery program which the Congress approved. As the President clearly pointed out in his first Budget message in January 1934, that program called for an expenditure of $9,300,000,000 for the 2-year period ending June 30, 1935, above the estimated income. The deficit at the end of the 21 months of that 2-year period was $6,300,000,000. With less than 3 months to go to complete the 2-year period, we are certain that expenditures will be $2,000,000,000 less than that original estimate.

Naturally you want to know what the Government got for its money. Emergency expenditures caused the deficit and here are the items: Loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Public Works Administration, and various other governmental agencies, $1,700,000,000.

Public works, under which head I include the Boulder Dam, rivers and harbors, the Tennessee Valley Authority's projects, subsistence homesteads, and the vast program of Federal aid for good roads, $1,200,000,000.

The remaining $3,400,000,000 was expended for relief of American citizens in distress. This was the grand total for all forms of relief and includes even the $600,000,000 for the Civilian Conservation Corps, whose splendid work is worth every dollar of its cost.

In order to get the true picture it is important to remember that these expenditures are not loss or waste. We have acquired values for them. From the loans of $1,700,000,000 we may expect repayments in substantial amount which will go to reduce the public debt. The $1,200,000,000 for public works is invested in dams, roads, buildings, and other permanent improvements. These two items account for nearly half of the deficit.

The greatest single item of expenditure has been for relief. We have furnished food, shelter, clothing—and the self-respect which comes of having a job—to millions who needed these things as never before. That item will continue to be the bulk of the real deficit.

Now let's take up the public debt of the Federal Government. When this administration came into office the gross public debt was a little less than $21,000,000,000. As of March 31 this year it had increased in round numbers to $28,800,000,000, the largest in our history. Although there is no doubt anywhere about our credit being good—if it were not, we could not have refunded all of those Liberty bonds—some people raise a point about the cost for interest. But let us see how this cost at the present time compares with the cost in past years. The annual interest cost on today's debt amounts to $800,000,000. And you would naturally suppose, in view of the fact that the debt is the largest in our history, that the interest cost must also be the largest. But it is not.

We are carrying the greatest national debt in our history for less money than it cost back in 1925, when the national debt was smaller by $8,000,000,000.

Now, let's look ahead and see, first of all, what certainties the future holds. In July and August we know that we are going to retire $674,000,000 of interest-bearing Government securities. They are the Panama Canal bonds and United States consols that have already been called for redemption. The cash for that transaction is now in the Treasury.

Then we are going to finish the retirement of the Liberty bonds previously mentioned. For all practical purposes, this gigantic operation will be out of the way when the time comes to raise the bulk of the money needed for the President's new work-relief program.

In his message submitting the Budget for 1936 to the present Congress, the President said:

"If this Budget receives the approval of the Congress, the country will henceforth have the assurance that, with the single exception of emergency relief, every current expenditure of whatever nature will be fully covered by our estimates of current receipts. Such deficit as occurs will be due solely to emergency relief, and it may be expected to decline as rapidly as private industry is able to reemploy those who now are without work."

Since the President delivered that message, new developments that would bear upon his forecast have been mostly favorable.

In looking ahead we are cheered by the fact that tax receipts for the first 9 months of the present fiscal year are $145,000,000 above the estimates.

On June 30, 1936, we should have, according to the Budget estimates, a national debt of $34,000,000,000, but those estimates did not take into account the retirement of the $674,000,000 of Government securities which I mentioned a moment ago.

The work-relief program, for which Congress recently appropriated $4,880,000,000, is scarcely started. In view of these two facts and our present comfortable margin within the Budget estimates, it is entirely possible that we shall find on June 30, 1936, a national debt of considerably less than thirty-four billions.

In conclusion let us not forget a few central facts and figures. The new-deal expenditures are represented by money still right here at home. Some of it has been used to thaw out the frozen assets of banks for the benefit of depositors. Some of it is turning the wheels of industry. The greatest part of that portion which we shall not recover, in a material way, has been used to save human life and to preserve the morale of our people.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE AMERICAN LEGION

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech delivered over the radio by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] on April 6, 1935, regarding the American Legion and its accomplishments.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Upon this anniversary the American Legion may well take pride in its efforts and accomplishments in behalf of the general welfare. Citizens everywhere approve proposals for child welfare, care for war orphans, and support for the educational system of the Nation. To promote peace and security at home and abroad the Legion stands for law enforcement, for an adequate national defense, and for the related proposal of universal service of all our material resources as well as the conscription of men in time of war.

In addition to these objectives the American Legion fosters a true and living Americanism. It resists objectives which are un-American or anti-American. When we speak of un-American objectives, most often we refer to the destructive ideas of alien origin. Alien enemies of fundamental Americanism quarrel with our theory of government and rail and sneer against rights of property and our system of ordered liberty. My purpose tonight is not to denounce alien criticism but, rather, to deal with inimicable ideas born under our own flag. Economic depression invites a spirit of faithless disloyalty. The needy and impoverished, lacking necessities of life and too long whipped by adversity, find it difficult to remain loyal to a government which they are encouraged to feel is in some degree responsible for their suffering. They may be victimized by the evangelists of novel political doctrine, and even when not entirely mislead, they nevertheless often yield to doubt and indifference. It is but natural they should be more concerned over their own suffering than over the question whether a political or governmental concept is in keeping with American theory.

In my judgment, the most vexing problem that can come into the life of any American citizen, under any condition, cannot be of more permanent importance to that citizen than maintenance of his rights under our Government. This is true because nowhere else in the world, under any law, is there security to life and to property comparable to the security enjoyed under the American Constitution. Nowhere else will you find rights superior to the political and civil rights of an American citizen, the preservation of which may be hoped for only by reason of guaranties provided by the Constitution.

If I have your agreement to these propositions, then, I ask whether a threat against our Government coming from foreign lands is more destructive of our rights than a threat which has its inspiration in our own country and is suggested by our own citizens? A harmful proposal is not less evil, because it is suggested from within our own Government or by a citizen who is supposed to be devoted to the maintenance of our institutions. Unwieldy theoretical schemes for control of business and the regimentation of various groups who make up the citizenship of our country may lead to a condition as un-American as the socialism of the Soviet Union. It is growing increasingly evident that political and economic experiments rarely yield the results claimed for them. Yet there are those who believe our plan of government and our system of business have alike failed in the face of the depression. These disbelievers seek innovations. They would erect an enormous bureaucracy and place the entire country under its control. They would destroy private interests for a supposed but unreal public advantage. They would limit or deny the right of private property in very essential respects. They would deny and restrict the right to pursue a gainful occupation except with the consent of bureaucracy. They would limit opportunity everywhere, and casting all men in a common mold, they would take away the unequaled privilege which has belonged to the boys and girls of America to build themselves up from humble beginnings to positions of honor, affluence, and power. This spirit of bureaucracy threatens the liberty of the citizens of the Republic. Its evil is accentuated because proposals in its behalf are made in the name of the common good. Let there be an inventory of all these innovations and a new understanding of what they mean in terms of the destruction of fundamental American rights. Our institutions will remain secure only if the people of this country determine to scrutinize and to resist proposals which result in impairment of established civil, political, or religious rights.

I do not want it understood that I urge such a reactionary adherence to ancient forms that would prevent consideration of progressive ideas. Many reforms may be effectuated without violence to the Constitution. Even wealth sharing may be constitutionally attained by the indirect process of Federal taxation of inheritances and income. Every proposal for economic and social justice, including proposals for security for the aged, and every sound objective sought in the name of humanity, may be attained within the limitations of the American Constitution.

When I speak of the maintenance of constitutional right I, therefore, do not complain against laws for social reforms. The American Constitution provides and guarantees to the citizen both opportunity and justice. I do complain, however, against the spirit of contemptuous indifference of present-day theorists and experimentors who are too willing to disregard the constitutional limits and to destroy the basic rights of the individual citizen. There is nothing which bureaucracy can do for the people that is as valuable to them as the rights of the citizen which bureaucracy often denies and would seek to destroy. President Coolidge in his lifetime characterized Federal centralization as tyranny. He said:

"Unless bureaucracy is constantly resisted it breaks down representative government and overwhelms democracy. It is the one element of our institutions that sets up the pretense of having authority over everybody and being responsible to nobody."

In spite of hardship and suffering the people of the United States will not willingly part with representative government nor purposely destroy democracy as we know democracy. To preserve it we will resist destructive, un-American influences from abroad. There still remains the continuing danger of equally destructive, equally un-American influences at home, and then the one important question: Will we, the citizens of this Republic, marshal the strength and maintain the spirit to resist this ugly threat against the principles and privileges of American citizenship?

LABOR DISPUTES AND THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article which appeared in the American Bar Association Journal for April 1935, entitled "Labor Disputes and the Federal Government", by O. R. McGuire, member of the Bar Association's committee on administrative law.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LABOR DISPUTES AND THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

PERSISTENCE OF EFFORTS TO BRING INTRASTATE LABOR RELATIONS UNDER FEDERAL CONTROL MAY EVENTUALLY RESULT IN PROPOSAL OF A CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO AUTHORIZE IT—IT IS THEREFORE DESIRABLE TO CONSIDER THE WORKINGS OF SUCH A PLAN IN THE FEDERATED DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENT OF AUSTRALIA, WHERE A SYSTEM OF COMPULSORY REGULATION AND DECISION OF LABOR DISPUTES HAS LONG BEEN IN OPERATION

(By O. R. McGuire, member of American Bar Association's Committee on Administrative Law)

The Constitution of the United States, as it now exists, leaves little room for doubt that the Federal Government does not possess the power to prescribe the hours of labor, maximum or minimum wages, or terms and conditions of employment in intrastate business or industry nor may the Federal Government insist that there shall be followed any system of compulsory arbitration of such intrastate disputes. If previous opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States are to be accepted as establishing the law of the Constitution in this respect, it seems equally clear that manufacturing, farming and the bulk of other industries employing labor are intrastate in character.

However, the persistence with which efforts are being made to bring such intrastate labor relations under Federal control through the enactment of various statutes by the Congress may eventually culminate in a proposed constitutional amendment after the Supreme Court of the United States finally sustains the judgments of the lower courts holding unconstitutional or inapplicable Federal statutes attempting to regulate the relations of employer and employee in intrastate business or industry. Therefore, it not only appears appropriate but highly desirable to take a glance at the laws of another federated democratic government—the Commonwealth of Australia—where there has been long in operation a system of compulsory regulation and decision of labor disputes.

At the federal convention, which was held in Sydney in 1891 to discuss the proposed legislative powers to be conferred on the Commonwealth government, Mr. C. C. Kingston proposed that the Commonwealth Parliament should have power to establish courts of conciliation and arbitration for the settlement of industrial disputes. It was made quite clear in the official report of the debates in this convention that it was the intention of such proposal that industrial disputes confined to one State were to be left to the State concerned for settlement but nevertheless the proposal was defeated. Six years later the proposal was again advanced in the federal convention held at Adelaide, in 1897, when Dr. Higgins, later Justice Higgins, of the federal industrial court, proposed that the federal government should have power to deal with industrial disputes extending beyond the limits of any one State. He urged that industrial disputes could not always be confined in their evil effects to any one State and that when not so confined the Commonwealth government was the only government which could cope with them. The proposal was again defeated, but he advanced it the next year in the convention held at Melbourne, and this time with success, for it was incorporated in the Commonwealth constitution as section 51, paragraph 35, as follows:

"The parliament shall, subject to the constitution, have power to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of the Commonwealth with respect to conciliation and arbitration for the prevention and settlement of industrial disputes extending beyond the limits of any one State."

This federal constitutional provision was implemented by the Commonwealth conciliation and arbitration act of 1904, which has been several times amended. The chief objects of the act are set forth in section 2 thereof as being to prevent lockouts and strikes, to constitute a court of conciliation and arbitration, to provide for the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court by conciliation and compulsory arbitration in default of amicable agreement between employer and employees; to enable the states of the Australian Commonwealth to refer labor disputes to the Commonwealth court, to facilitate and encourage the organization of representative bodies of employers and employees, and to provide for the making and enforcing of industrial agreements.

Section 11 of this act of 1904 provided that the Commonwealth court of conciliation and arbitration should be a court of record, and section 12 provided that the president should be appointed by the Governor General of the Commonwealth from among the justices of the high court, the supreme court of the Commonwealth government, for a term of 7 years. Subsequently the high court held in the case of Waterside Workers' Federation of Australia v. Alexander, Ltd., 25 C. L. R., 434, that since the Commonwealth constitution provided in section 72 that justices of the courts created by the Commonwealth Parliament should hold office for life and the justice of the Commonwealth arbitration court was appointed for a term of 7 years only, such court was incompetent to exercise any judicial power. The result thereof was an amendment of 1926 which provided that the judges of the Commonwealth arbitration court should be appointed for life. A prior act of 1920 had changed the title of the presiding judge from president to chief judge with authority in the Governor General to appoint such additional judges as might be required. Only barristers or solicitors of the high court or of the supreme court of a State of not less than 5 years' standing are eligible for appointment to the Commonwealth arbitration court. Since the 1926 amendment that court has freely exercised judicial powers such as the imposition of penalties for breaches of awards, the interpretation of awards, and the issuance of injunctions or prohibitions.

The States of the Australian Commonwealth likewise have their industrial courts. The wage board system was introduced in Victoria in 1895, and the powers and jurisdiction thereof was greatly enlarged in Victoria Act 3677 of 1928. Tasmania had a wages board act in 1910. South Australia, New South Wales, and Western Australia each had an industrial arbitration act in 1912. Queensland had an industrial peace act in 1912, and an industrial arbitration act in 1916. The organization of the industrial tribunals vary somewhat as among the various States of the Australian Commonwealth, and it would unduly extend the length of this paper to describe all of them in detail. The one in New South Wales, which is the principal industrial State in the Commonwealth, may be accepted as an illustration of similar organizations in the other States.

The Industrial Commission of New South Wales consists of three members, one of whom is called the president. A person to be qualified for appointment to that commission must be a puisne judge of the supreme court, a district court judge, a barrister of not less than 5 years' standing, or a solicitor of not less than 7 years' standing. Appointments are made by the governor. Each member has all the rights of a puisne judge of the supreme court of the State. The commission is a superior court of record, and the retiring age of the judges is 70 years. All members must be present at a sitting and decisions are reached by a majority vote. The commission may in a particular matter delegate any of its powers or functions to any one member or to a deputy commissioner appointed by the governor. Appeals lie to the commission from any order of a commissioner or deputy commissioner and the commission may vary such order or award in such manner as it thinks just. The commission may sit with assessors representing the interests of each of the parties before it and may commit to such assessors for determination or consideration and report any issue of fact.

This commission of New South Wales includes among its powers and functions the right to inquire into and determine any industrial matter referred to it by the minister of the State; to hear appeals from any order, determination, or award of a conciliator whose principal work is the making of awards and variations of awards in labor disputes; to determine, after public inquiry, but not more frequently than once in every 6 months, a standard of living, and to declare what shall be the living wages based upon such standard for adult male and adult female employees in the State; to hear and determine appeals under the act; to confer with any persons or industrial unions as to anything affecting the settlement of an industrial matter; and to summon any person before the commission for the purpose of giving evidence. Also, the commission has power to encourage the proper apprenticeship of minors and to provide for the welfare of juveniles in industry; to acquire and disseminate knowledge on all matters connected with industrial relationship between employers and workers, and to combat the evils of unemployment; to propound schemes for welfare work; to report on prices of commodities, monopolies, trade rings, etc.; to report upon the productivity of industries; to consider and report upon the industrial efficiency of the community; to collect and publish from time to time statistics of vital, social, and industrial matters; and to encourage and assist in the establishment in different industries of mutual welfare committees and industrial councils.

Under the statute any decision of the commission is made final and no award, order, or proceeding of the commission can be vitiated by reason only of any informality or want of form or be liable to be challenged, appealed against, quashed, reviewed, or called into question by any court of judicature on any account whatsoever. Also, under the statute, inspectors are appointed who may at any reasonable time inspect any premises and any work being done therein; call for and examine time sheets and pay rolls of employees; and examine any employee in regard to wages and hours of labor; and the inspectors are required to report to the minister of the State all breaches of the Factories and Shop Act of 1928 or of any award or industrial agreement which may come to the attention of such inspectors.

That is to say, we find in Australia that the Commonwealth government, functioning under a Federal constitutional provision, hereinbefore quoted, has established and endowed a Commonwealth arbitration court, appointed for life, with vast powers for the settlement of industrial labor disputes extending beyond the limits of any one State, and the various State governments have established and endowed arbitration courts under various names for the settlement of labor disputes within the respective States. In other words, Australia has a complete system of Federal and State arbitration courts with jurisdiction far beyond anything heretofore attempted in this country—even beyond the legislation held unconstitutional in Coppage v. Kansas (236 U. S. 14), and Atkins v. Children's Hospital (261 U. S. 525).

What have been the results in Australia?

The Adelaide Chamber of Commerce Bulletin for February 1934 contains the statement that the position of industrial arbitration in Australia justified the remark of the late Mr. Justice Higgins—the man who succeeded in securing power in the Commonwealth Constitution to establish a Federal arbitration court—with reference to the "Serbonian bog of technicalities"; that there were Federal and State awards which overlap; that the bases of the different awards vary in different industries on varying costs of living figures computed on different bases; that the interpretation of the Federal Constitution and Commonwealth legislation thereunder—which overrode State legislation—had changed so as to give the greatest operation to the Commonwealth constitution and laws; and that the word "dispute" had been stretched to include cases where the mere exchange of correspondence between employers and a union has been held to constitute a dispute.

The British economic mission in its report of January 7, 1929, to the prime minister of the Commonwealth government stated, among other things, that it had consulted with employers and employees and that it was the consensus of opinion that the arbitration courts had not come up to expectations. Also:

"By workmen's representatives, not less emphatically than by representatives of the employers, it has been consistently represented to us that the arbitration courts are not achieving their purpose and that a system designed to arrive by judicial decisions at fair and prompt settlement of industrial disputes such as could be freely accepted by both sides must be held to have failed. The most important of the reasons which have been advanced for this view are that experience has shown that there arises between the two parties who appear before the arbitration court judge or arbitrator the spirit of antagonism inseparable from litigation, and that the object of prompt settlement is defeated by the delay occasioned by the necessity for the collection and presentation of detailed evidence in a form acceptable to a court. It is complained that the procedure of the arbitration tribunals occasions the expenditure of much time and money by the litigants, and involves very long absences from their ordinary occupations for a large number of persons whose time might be more profitably employed that the subject matter of the questions which are brought before such tribunals is not of a nature with which judicial tribunals, necessarily unversed in the practical problems of industry or in the economic questions to which they give rise, are best fitted to deal; and that the overlapping jurisdiction of the federal and State arbitration courts have led to an almost inextricable tangle of conflicting decision so complicated that large staffs have to be maintained to keep track of them and to endeavor to guard against involuntary contravention of any of them in the course of everyday business. The indictment of the system of the arbitration courts which we have heard is a heavy one; and we feel that it is well founded on many grounds, and particularly on the ground that the system has tended to consolidate employers and employees into two opposing camps, and has lessened the inducement to either side to resort to round-table conferences for that frank and confidential discussion of difficulties in the light of mutual understanding and sympathy which is the best means of arriving at fair and workable industrial agreements.

"A change in the method prevalent in Australia of dealing with industrial disputes appears to us to be essential, and we hold that there should be a minimum of judicial and governmental interference in them except insofar as matters affecting the health and safety of persons engaged in industry may be concerned."

The foregoing is the opinion of a British economic mission sent out to Australia to make a report respecting the very serious economic and industrial situation then confronting the people of Australia and is thus the judgment of a group of experts wholly detached from the political conditions in that Commonwealth.

With respect to conflicts between the Commonwealth and State arbitration courts, the opinion of the supreme, or high court of the commonwealth government in Whybrow's case (10 C. L. R., 266), placed the unions in a happy position. That opinion was to the effect that the federal arbitration court could fix a rate of wages higher than the rate fixed by the applicable State arbitration court with the result that the employees could try their luck with the federal court with the knowledge that the State rate of wages and conditions of work could not be reduced or made worse and might possibly be increased or bettered. In other words, where both a federal and a State award or determination of wages and working conditions operate in the one industry the employees are entitled to the higher wages and better working conditions in whichever award they are prescribed. In a subsequent case of Cyde Engineering Co., Ltd., v. Cowburn (37 C. L. R. 462), the high court held that the State legislatures could not fix or authorize the State arbitration courts to fix a rate of wages or prescribe working conditions inconsistent with those fixed and prescribed in the award of the federal arbitration court.

A result of such a conclusion of the high court is stated in the above-referred-to bulletin of the Adelaide Chamber of Commerce with respect to rates of wages fixed by the federal arbitration court in a recent textile award. That award prescribed a flat rate of pay for all woolen mills, throughout the Commonwealth. Prior to that time the rates of wages in such mills had been fixed in the various States on the basis of the different costs of living in such States, but due to an allegation that such industry was highly competitive, it was concluded to make the rate of wages uniform. The chamber said:

"Such an award is based upon entirely wrong premises, and unfortunately the employers in the smaller States concerned, in endeavoring to obtain exemption, had to fight not only the union leaders, but also the lawyers of employers of the eastern States. Industry in the smaller States cannot long continue to stand up to the competition of manufacturers in the more populous States who have the benefit of a large home market."

The labor unions make no secret of the fact that they prefer the federal arbitration court to the State courts or boards. The vice president of the Australian council of trade unions (representing some 500,000 workers) is reported to have testified on March 19, 1928, before the royal commission on the Commonwealth constitution that he considered it was essential that the federal parliament should be given unrestricted power to deal with the problems of capital and labor throughout the country, whether interstate or intrastate in character and that to allow 13 differently constituted legislative bodies to deal with the problem in piecemeal was only courting disaster. On the other hand, Justice Brown said in the South Australian Living Wage case for the Tinsmiths (1 S. A. I. R. 55), that:

"Most industries in south Australia, however, as in other States, are domestic industries which call for, and should receive, domestic supervision. With regard to such industries, the proximity of the court, with its relative accessibility, and the relative ease with which it is subjected to criticism through one or the other of the various organs of public opinion, make it a more truly democratic tribunal than a centralized tribunal can claim to be, however generous might be its awards. Further, the fact that the local tribunal is more nearly in touch with local industries also serves to justify the maintenance of State industrial control alongside of the federal system. There is a great sphere of useful service for both. But if the public interest is to be served, there should be no marked divergency between the Commonwealth and State authorities as regards such basic matters as the living wage. I hope the time is not far distant when some arrangement will be made, formal or informal, for coordinate action."

While the struggle in Australia seems to be not unlike the struggle in this country between Federal and State rights, the Commonwealth government has been unable to secure the adoption of an amendment to the federal constitution authorizing the federal government to take over the control of labor conditions in purely State matters where such control has not been effected by virtue of the two above referred to judgments of the federal high court in the Whybrow and Clyde Engineering Co. cases. Such control over intrastate wages, hours of labor, etc., is very substantial as shown by the award of the federal arbitration court in the above referred to woolen manufacturing case.

Has such a scheme of arbitration or industrial courts brought about industrial peace in Australia? The answer is decidedly not. The Labor Report for 1932, issued by the Commonwealth bureau of census and statistics at Canberra states that the working days lost during 1932, due to industrial disputes, aggregated 212,318, and during 1931 aggregated 245,991 days. The estimated loss of wages during 1932, due to such industrial disputes, aggregated £165,582, and for 1931, the sum of £227,731. The number of industrial disputes in 1932 was 127, and the number in 1931 was 134, and in 1932, 32,917 people out of the comparatively small population of 5,435,734 in Australia were engaged in industrial disputes for that year. During the 5-year period from 1928 to 1932, inclusive, the said labor report is to the effect that an aggregate of 119,562 persons were engaged in labor disputes with a loss of 7,208,306 working days and £7,330,319 in wages. It is stated by the same authority that the main causes of industrial disputes in Australia are wage questions, working conditions, and employment "of particular classes of persons."

It is thus clear that the arbitration courts have not succeeded in Australia—with all of their vast power to either prevent or settle industrial disputes—and this seems to be due in some measure, at least, to the fact that while an award may be enforced against the employer by fines, such remedy is ineffective against the labor unions when they refuse to accept an award as satisfactory and the members either do not return to work or quit work. The high court held in the Waterside Workers' case (10 C. A. R. 429) that while an arbitration court may have fixed the minimum wages to be paid, the employees were under no obligation to accept employment at such wages. Even if the employer should succeed in securing a judgment against the union for violating an award by striking for higher wages, such judgments are often difficult if not impossible to collect.

Senator WAGNER introduced in the Senate of the United States on February 15, 1935 (S. 1958) to establish a National Labor Relations Board to be composed of three members which is to be authorized, among other things, "to prevent any person from engaging in any unfair labor practice (listed in sec. 8) affecting commerce." It is interesting to compare the provisions of such bill which the laws of the Commonwealth of Australia and its States for the regulation of labor disputes. Assuming for purpose of argument that such a law could be sustained in this country, either without or with an amendment to the Constitution to that end, it is difficult to see what would be the situation in this country with a three-judge court to hear industrial disputes. Australia has but a fraction of the population that we have in this country; in fact, the total population of Australia is less than the population of the State of New York and the industries of Australia are comparatively few. Yet, Mr. Charlton, a labor leader in the Commonwealth House of Representatives, stated in a debate of June 8, 1928, that:

"The principal trouble in connection with the arbitration court has been caused by the delays in getting claims heard. Some industrial organizations have had to wait for 18 months or 2 years before their claims have been brought before the court; the excuse offered for this state of affairs being that there are not sufficient judges to cope with the work."

Senator Barnes, another labor leader, stated in the Commonwealth Senate on June 12, 1928, that:

"As a result of years of experience in the trade-union movement, I believe that the greatest factor in fomenting industrial unrest is not a desire of the workers to be everlastingly on strike, but the fact that there is so much delay in having their cases heard by the arbitration court. * * * Unionists are prepared to obey the law, but they strongly resent the delays which occur in getting an award from the court."

The system of arbitration courts in Australia, with their power to fix wages and hours of labor for all industries, may be compared with the board of mediation, boards of adjustment, and boards of arbitration established in this country by the act of May 20, 1926 (44 Stat. 577, 587), at a cost of $125,564 to the Federal Treasury for the fiscal year 1935, to consider disputes between the interstate railroads and their employees. While there are many points of difference between the two systems, the principal one is that under the act of May 20, 1926, the matter is a voluntary one between the railroads and their employees, while in Australia it is compulsory, and would be so here in event S. 1958 became law and was sustained.

However, in connection with the power of the Federal Government to fix wages and hours of labor in intrastate industry, presumably through the medium of codes of fair competition or under some such provision as section 7 of the act of June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 198), or the proposed Wagner labor-relations bill, Donald R. Richberg, executive director of the National Emergency Council, in a radio address of March 18, 1935, referred to United States v. Brims (272 U. S. 549); Coronado Coal Co. v. United Mine Workers (268 U. S. 295); and Local 167 v. United States (291 U. S. 293), and said:

"The last stronghold of an irreconcilable opposition appears to lie in legalistic arguments over the powers of the Federal Government. Here again public opinion is confused by sound and fury emanating from the bench and bar, instead of light. When judges and lawyers loudly proclaim that the power of the Federal Government to regulate interstate commerce does not authorize the regulation of manufacturing and mining or trade within a State, they are not stating the law. They are simply dodging the law, and repudiating the express and repeated rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States. * * * The quibblers and evaders of the law should not be allowed to confuse opinion as to the power of the Federal Government to restrain unfair competition in business practices or in labor conditions for the protection of interstate commerce. There is no question of the power. There is only the question of how and where that power should be most widely exercised."

It seems to me that in this connection the history and achievements of the Australian Arbitration Courts of the Commonwealth government, as well of the various states in that Commonwealth, should be carefully considered in this country.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE TRAFFIC BY MOTOR CARRIERS

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The attention of the Senator from Montana is called to the fact that this is Monday and there is a morning hour. The motion is not in order until the call of the calendar is completed, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent that, upon the completion of the calendar, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1629) providing for the regulation of transportation by motor busses and trucks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the call of the calendar the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill referred to by him.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there was some discussion concerning this matter on Friday before adjournment. Is this the bill the Senator then mentioned which he would like to take up today?

Mr. WHEELER. This is the bill about which I spoke to the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I understand that the conference report on the Agricultural Department appropriation bill has been agreed to and will be laid before the Senate in due time. I have asked the chairman of the subcommittee having the matter in charge [Mr. RUSSELL] to defer any effort to have the conference report adopted until Wednesday, because I desire to make an attack on the conference report and to give specific reasons to the Senate why I feel I should do so. To be prepared to do this it is necessary for me to have a day or two in which to give the matter consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, to what measure is the Senator referring?

Mr. COPELAND. I am referring to the agricultural appropriation bill and the conference report thereon, and specifically to the fact that the conferees have reduced the appropriation for the Food and Drug Administration below the amount to which the Senate agreed.

As the Senator knows, and as the Senate knows, I am eager not alone to have the present law strengthened, but certainly if we are not to have any new law, then there must be money enough allotted to the Food and Drug Administration to enable them properly to administer the present law. I feel very strongly that submission on the part of our conferees to the House in this matter—and I say it with all respect—was a great mistake.

It is my purpose on Wednesday or at some future time to tell the Senate frankly why I think the money should be appropriated. That is the purpose of the announcement. The chairman of the subcommittee having the matter in charge has told me that, so far as he is concerned, he is willing to have the matter go over until Wednesday. I speak of it in order that it may be known, when the report is brought up, that I desire to be heard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York ask unanimous consent with reference to consideration of the conference report?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. I should like to have unanimous consent, if the report should come up, that action on it be deferred until Wednesday.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has stated that such an arrangement is satisfactory to the subcommittee chairman in charge of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; and I really see no reason why any action should be taken by the Senate. However, I want it clearly understood that before final action shall be taken by the Senate I shall have an opportunity to express such views as I have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator withdraw his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I do.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar is in order under rule VIII.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 396) to amend section 1180 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, with respect to usury, was announced as first in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 944) to amend section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 213) to amend section 113 of the Criminal Code of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. 1109, U. S. C., title 18, sec. 203), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1506) to change the name of the Pickwick Landing Dam to Quin Dam, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. In the absence of Senators who are specially interested, I think the bill should go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1878) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 574) relative to Members of Congress acting as attorneys in matters where the United States has an interest, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 35) authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate certain phases of the National Recovery Act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 875) for the relief of Michael F. Calnan, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2029) to authorize naval and Marine Corps service of any officers to be included in computing dates of retirement, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 74) to investigate the public and official conduct of James A. Farley was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2119) for the relief of Amos D. Carver, S. E. Turner, Clifford N. Carver, Scott Blanchard, P. B. Blanchard, James B. Parse, A. N. Blanchard, and W. A. Blanchard, and/or the widows of such of them as may be deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REGULATION OF SMALL-LOAN BUSINESS IN THE DISTRICT

The bill (S. 1162) to regulate the business of making small loans in the District of Columbia, and to amend an act to regulate the business of loaning money, etc., approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter or statement by Paul E. Jamieson, of this city, and a statement from the Washington Times for March 23, 1935, relative to the District of Columbia small-loan bill.

There being no objection, the letter and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1935.

Honorable Senators of the Committee:

Your chairman, Senator KING, has been gracious enough to afford me an opportunity to be heard on Senate bill 1162, entitled "A bill to regulate the business of making small loans in the District of Columbia, and to amend an act to regulate the business of loaning money, and so forth, approved February 4, 1913." In my opposition to this bill I not only speak as an individual interested in the civic welfare of the District of Columbia, but also as general counsel of the City Fire Fighters' Association, comprised of several hundred members of the rank and file of the District of Columbia Fire Department, and as chairman of the law and legislation committee of the Burroughs Citizens' Association, whose membership comprises several hundred other residents of the District of Columbia; both of which associations have gone on record, without a single dissenting vote, as being opposed to Senate bill 1162.

I understand that this committee has previously reported favorably on the bill, which bill I understand emanated in the District Building rather than in the minds of any of you gentlemen; and that your approval of the bill was based on flowery reports of civic need for such legislation given to you by officials and ex-officials of the District Government, in whom you should have confidence but who, I submit, are either consciously or unconsciously misleading you in the object and purport of this bill.

I will now read to you part of the report of Corporation Counsel Prettyman dated November 2, 1934:

"It is quite obvious that the small-loans business in the District urgently needs governmental regulation, inspection, and supervision. The problem here, however, is peculiar in several respects. In the first place, we are closely surrounded with concerns doing business at 3½ percent per month. Any regulation which has the effect of driving business out of the District will merely result in requiring our residents to go to these outside concerns and pay their rate of interest. In the second place, there has been for 20 years a law on the books which has been officially so construed as not to apply to concerns now doing business by the methods now used. Such long-standing administrative construction stands in the way of peremptory court action upon any change of opinion as to the meaning and effect of that act. In the next place, Congress has refused upon three occasions to enact a small-loans law for the District carrying a 3½ percent per month interest rate.

"The small-loan business is a legitimate business when properly conducted and there are many such concerns in the District. At the same time it is a vicious business when improperly conducted, and there are such concerns in the District."

The act of February 4, 1913, limits interest on small loans to 1 percent per month on the actual amount of the loan and provides that "this charge shall cover all fees, expenses, demands, and services of every character, including notarial and recording fees and charges, except upon the foreclosure of the security." (See title 17 sec. 25 of the new Code on p. 156.)

The corporation counsel and the Commissioners would have you believe that the present act of February 4, 1913, is grossly ineffective to protect the residents of the District of Columbia, because of adverse court constructions of that law; and yet this contention is not borne out by the record, because court adjudications have upheld, and have liberally construed in favor of the Government the act of February 4, 1913. Following are typical adjudications on the subject cited in Torbert's Digest:

"The act of February 4, 1913, is not intended to regulate the rate of interest to be charged generally in the legitimate business of loaning money in this District, but to regulate interest rates in the loaning of small sums of money, and is within the police power of Congress. (Reagan v. District of Columbia, 41 App. D. C. 409; 42 W. L. R. 88.)

"The terms of the act of February 4, 1913, are broad enough to punish all lending of money of the kind described, without regard to the particular form which the debt may be made to assume: and so held that where borrowers executed receipts and delivered them for the purpose of preserving evidence of the loan the transaction was within the purview of the law. (Chew v. District of Columbia, 42 App. D. C. 410; 42 W. L. R. 710.)

"An accommodation maker of a note can take advantage of usurious payments made by the party accommodated, although the latter makes no claim for them or to have them credited on the note; and the situation is not changed by the fact that the usurious interest was from time to time exacted on notes which were paid by the giving of renewal notes. (Van Senden v. Egan (S. C. D. C.), 44 W. L. R. 578.)

"Under 1183 of the Code, the penalty for usury applies to the action brought on usurious contract for the money loaned thereunder, irrespective of who may be defendants in the suit. (Van Senden v. Egan (S. C. D. C.), 44 W. L. R. 578.)

"There is no statute of limitations which bars the defendant in a suit on a note from having usurious interest payments credited on the debt, although made more than 3 years before suit brought. (Van Senden v. Egan (S. C. D. C.), 44 W. L. R. 578.)

"A corporation, of which the parties receiving usurious payments were officers and agents, held not to be in the position of an innocent holder for value of the notes infected with usury. (Mollohan v. Masters, 45 App. D. C. 414; 44 W. L. R. 727.)

"The custom of brokers and real-estate agents of exacting exorbitant commissions from borrowers under pretense of services to be rendered in the future, condemned; and in this case the deduction of $75 from a loan of $475 held usury. (Kidwell v. White, 44 App. D. C. 600; 44 W. L. R. 281.)

"If a suit is brought on the principal debt after payment of usurious interest such usury may be made a valid offset against the principal debt; but usury upon obligations paid and canceled cannot be used as a set-off against a subsequent obligation even between the same parties, either in law or equity. A party claiming relief from an usurious contract who failed to claim an offset against the enforcement of that particular contract has his remedy at law to recover back the amount prescribed by statute as the penalty for usury. (Metropolitan Loan & Trust Co. v. Schaffer, 44 App. D. C. 356; 44 W. L. R. 114.)

"One conducting the business of pawnbroker through combined District and Virginia offices, the place where applications for loans are made, applications for loans, disclosure of security, safe-keeping of the property pledged, and return of the pledge being in the District, while the appraisement of the security, agreement for the loan and its repayment, payment to the borrower, and delivery of the pledge, and repayment of the loan with agreed interest is performed in the Virginia office, held to be engaged in the business of loaning money in the District in violation of the act of February 4, 1913. (District of Columbia v. Horning, 47 App. D. C. 413; 46 W. L. R. 146.)"

"The act of February 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 657), known as the "loan-shark law", was intended to apply only to persons making small loans upon personal security, and so held not to apply to a transaction which debt of $177,500 was secured by a first trust on real estate so that the payer of a small bonus for an extension in the payment of interest might recover one-fourth of the great principal sum, but such case is covered by sections 1180 and 1181 of the code (Von Rosen v. Dean, 59 App. D. C. 359; 58 W. L. R. 475; 41 F. R. (2d) 982).

"Money exacted by the lender from the borrower for the use of money in excess of the legal rate allowed by statute is usury, whatever name or pretense the exaction or forbearance may be designated (Von Rosen v. Dean, 59 App. D. C. 359; 58 W. L. R. 475; 41 F. R. (2d) 982)."

Before proceeding with a discussion of the charges allowed in S. 1162, it might be helpful to consider the history of usury, and for this purpose I quote from 66 Corpus Juris, 142:

"It seems that the taking of interest for the loan of money, or at least taking excessive interest, has been regarded with abhorrence from the earliest times. We are told that such usury was prohibited by the early laws of the Chinese and Hindus and by the Koran. The mosaic law prohibited the Jews from exacting interest on loans to their brethren, but permitted interest to be taken from Gentiles. Among the Athenians moderate interest charges were allowed, but custom fixed the maximum rate at 12 percent, and anyone exacting a higher rate was looked on with contempt as being vile. Among the Romans interest charges were limited by the Twelve Tables, and subsequently totally abolished. Commercial necessity revived the practice of making loans at interest, which were, however, stricty regulated by later legislation. During the Middle Age the people of England, and especially the English Church, entertained the opinion then current in Europe—that the taking of any interest for the loan of money was a detestable vice, hateful to man, and contrary to the laws of God. It is said that not only was the usurer liable during his life to the censures of the church, but after his death his chattels were forfeited to the King and his lands escheated to the lord of the fee. Contracts for interest not exceeding 10 percent were expressly legalized by act of Parliament in 1545; but it was also provided that a contract for a loan at a rate of interest in excess of 10 percent should be wholly void both as to principal and interest. This act was repealed in 1555, but restored in 1570. Subsequent acts gradually reduced the rate of interest allowed until 1714, when by statute the lawful rate was fixed at 5 percent, where it remained until 1854, when all restrictions on interest charges were removed. The early colonial usury acts were modeled after the English act, the rate of interest allowed being usually higher, however. These early enactments, as would be expected, adopted the penalty for usury fixed by the statute of the mother country, and made all usurious contracts wholly void. The tendency of subsequent statutes, however, has been steadily to mitigate the punishment inflicted on the usurer, who now, in most of the American jurisdictions, is required to forfeit only the usurious interest, either wholly or as to the illegal excess, although it appears to have been thought in the early times that no action could be maintained on any contract to pay interest, since such contracts were unlawful and void. There is not wanting authority for the statement that contracts for reasonable interest were valid at common law."

With this in mind we proceed to a specific consideration of the interest rates and charges which would be permitted under S. 1162, and I submit that an analysis of them indicates that S. 1162 is a set-up for would-be loan sharks, who under the bill could with legal vestment prey upon those unfortunate residents of the District of Columbia who can least afford to be preyed upon.

Turning to section 12 of the bill we find that 2 percent per month is allowed on the unpaid principal balances of the loan, which is 24 percent per annum. (The present small-loan law of February 4, 1913, allows but 1 percent per month or a rate of 12 percent per annum.)

Further, under section 12–A, on loans of $35 or less for a period of 30 days or less (the types of loans which the poorest element, and those who can least afford to be charged burdensome rates) are permitted not only interest of 2 percent per month (or 24 percent per annum) but in addition a fee of $1 for credit report. So a typical loan hereunder, say for $35 for 1 month, by addition of the $1 for credit report, and 2 percent interest (which is 70 cents), we have a total charge which may be made of $1.70 on the $35 loan for 1 month; which reduced to a per annum percentage figure entails the terrific rate of 43 percent. I submit that such a rate is burdensome and oppressive, and contrary to public morals and policy, whether or not Congress will say as a matter of technical law that it is legal. Whether or not the lender gets the full return of the 43 percent, the poor borrower, nevertheless, is chargeable with the 43-percent rate.

Continuing on to section 12–B where the loan is for more than $35 for 30 days or less, we find that the fees allowed are as much as $3 (in addition to interest and other charges); and applying the rate of 2 percent per month (being as stated a rate of 24 percent per annum), and adding thereto the $3 on a typical loan of say $50 for 2 months, we have a charge of $2 interest and $3 in fees, or a total of $5 for the $50 loaned for 2 months, which is thus a rate of 10 percent for the 2 months or a 60-percent rate per annum.

The above are on so-called "character" loans. However, never do these loan sharks rely much on mere character. They always protect themselves with comakers, endorsers, and every other safeguard to assure a return of the amount loaned, along with the tremendous interest; and this procedure is recognized in section 12–B of the act by an allowance for investigating proposed endorsers. Why allow tremendous interest in such a case, when the risk is not so great to the lender, but indeed burdensome to the borrower, who must resort to these loan sharks either through dire need or weakness, to get a mere $35, $50, or the like.

Under section 12–C are treated loans on collateral (secured loans), notwithstanding which, the burden on the borrower, to the unjust enrichment of the loan shark, continues in S. 1162. By this I mean that not only the basic 24 percent per annum rate can be charged, but also a charge of $1 for recording the chattel mortgage, $3 for examination of titles, and so forth. Therefore, including these charges with the basic 24 percent per annum rate we have a rate which in many cases would come as high as 48 percent per annum. For example: A man borrows $100 on his automobile for 2 months, and is charged $1 for recording the chattel mortgage and $3 for examining the title, in addition to the 24 percent per annum interest rate regularly allowed under the bill. The extra allowance of $4 is 4 percent of $100 for, say, 2 months (the duration of a loan), or 24 percent per annum, which added to the 24 percent rate of interest allowed, makes a total of 48 percent per-annum rate. Obviously, if the loan were for a shorter period than 2 months (say 6 weeks) the percentage rate would be even higher than 48.

In summarizing my objection to S. 1162 I point to the fact that a basic rate of 24 percent per annum is allowed in S. 1162 instead of 12 percent under the act of February 4, 1913; the act of February 4, 1913, with its real teeth, would be repealed in large measure by S. 1162; the broad powers given the Commissioners and superintendent of insurance might raise rates to a still greater degree of burden on a poor borrower than the already burdensome rates basically prescribed in the bill; pawnbrokers who left the District with the enactment into law of the act of February 4, 1913 (which the District Building claims to be ineffective), would return, and again we would have wholesale pledgings of household articles by weak and shiftless people, with attendant burden on their families; and S. 1162 will invite loan sharks to operate here and will thus also tacitly invite chattel mortgages on household necessities (the only things owned by the class of people who must appeal to a loan shark), and thus cause the risk of depriving these poor people and their families of the exemptions otherwise allowed them by general law with respect to attachments.

I have seen those who have felt the "sting" of the loan shark before, and in my small way have sought to assist by defending some of these unfortunates in successfully pleading the act of February 4, 1913, as showing that as a matter of public policy Congress had pointed the finger of condemnation at loan sharks.

Finally, I might suggest that with the tendency of these times, in line with the policy of the present national administration, to make legitimate loans accessible to borrowers at lower interest rates than for many, many years, it behooves us to consider carefully a contrary policy of exorbitant rates, oppressive to a borrower, as is involved in S. 1162.

If the true intention of officials at the District Building is to get legislation to control "procurers" and to tighten the existing small-loan act of February 4, 1913, why is this not done, and this alone done, in S. 1162 rather than to have a more liberal law, with greatly liberalized rates which can be thrust on a poor borrower to the unjust enrichment of the lender.

At our meetings at the District Building last fall, when regulations of the same import as S. 1162 were under consideration by the corporation counsel, there were two general classes present: (1) The civic-minded group, who had no interest in the subject matter save the welfare of the District of Columbia, and who opposed any liberalization of the law of February 4, 1913, which, due to the stringent penalties and low interest rates, now effectively keeps loan sharks out of the District of Columbia; and (2) the "shylocks" and/or their attorneys who, for selfish reasons, were in favor of a liberal small-loan law so that they or their clients can operate a small-loan business in the District of Columbia, and under authority of law make burdensome charges, and with impunity grind a poor defaulter under their heels by heartless foreclosures, etc.

The corporation counsel at that time made a list of everyone who attended the meetings, with their interests and affiliations; and it should enlighten the members of this committee to study this list and see for themselves just who is interested in this legislation, and to thus draw a conclusion as to the whys and wherefores.

I trust that this committee will further study S. 1162 and will not approve a bill which, while it might otherwise thus ultimately become a law of the realm, would, nevertheless (in the words of Lord Coke), still be against the law of nature and against the law of God.

Respectfully submitted.

PAUL E. JAMIESON.

[From the Washington Times of Mar. 23, 1935]

SENATOR KING'S LOAN BILL RAPPED

Charges that the small-loans bill, sponsored by Senator WILLIAM H. KING, will protect "loan sharks" were made today by Rolf Nugent, director of the department of remedial loans of the Russell Sage Foundation, in statements to the Commissioners and members of the Senate District Committee.

Mr. Nugent submitted a tabulation of interest rates which he said would be possible under the proposed bill. The tabulation indicates that persons borrowing $5 for a period of 1 week would have to pay 1,560 percent interest.

The bill authorizes $1 fee and interest at 2 percent a month with a minimum interest charge of 50 cents, for all unsecured loans of $35 or less for a 30-day period.

Mr. Nugent stated: "The King bill throws aside all the experience with small-loan legislation over a quarter of a century. Instead of prohibiting the exorbitant charges for small loans which prevail in the District, it would furnish an enabling act for their continuation. It resembles bills proposed 20 years ago by loan sharks themselves, some of which became law and were later repealed."

The Russell Sage Foundation, Mr. Nugent pointed out, is in favor of a flat 3-percent charge on the first $100 loan with a 2-percent charge for additional sums.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, Senate bill 1162 provides for 2 percent per month interest on small loans, not to exceed $300, in the District of Columbia, as opposed to the present law, which provides for 1 percent interest per month on small loans. In addition, Senate bill 1162 provides for a fee of $1 and additional interest and other charges, not to exceed 50 cents, on loans of $35 or less for a period of 30 days or less.

It has been pointed out by a director of the department of remedial loans of the Russell Sage Foundation that under the provisions of Senate bill 1162, persons borrowing $5 for a period of 1 week would have to pay 1,560 percent interest. He has also stated:

The King bill throws aside all the experience with small-loan legislation over a quarter of a century. Instead of prohibiting the exorbitant charges for small loans which prevail in the District, it would furnish an enabling act for their continuation. It resembles bills proposed 20 years ago by loan sharks themselves, some of which became law and were later repealed.

At the hearings held by the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia it was the contention of quite a number of representatives of various District civic organizations that the present law, providing for 1 percent per month interest, had never been enforced, and that various lending companies are now operating in violation of the present law, which was passed by Congress in 1913. Corporation Counsel Prettyman made the statement at one of these hearings that the present law had never been enforced, but that if Senate bill 1162 failed of enactment by Congress this year he would see to it that the present law was enforced, this also being the viewpoint expressed by People's Counsel Roberts. It was brought out also at these hearings that no exhaustive or extensive study had been made of the small-loan situation, either here in the District of Columbia or elsewhere by the committee.

The legislatures of many States are now making extensive efforts to decide just what is the correct rate of interest applicable to small loans. The result of these studies will be known during the course of the year.

It is interesting here to note that there is at present in the hands of the House Subcommittee No. 8 on the Post Office and Post Roads a bill (H. R. 3252) which provides that no lending company may advertise through the medium of the mails, periodicals, radio, and so forth, where such advertising would pass over State boundaries, any rate of interest over 15 percent per year, or 1¼ percent per month, and that this bill has already received favorable review by the subcommittee. This would seem to indicate that Congress desired to show its aversion to higher interest rates. With this in view, it seems strange that Congress should be desirous of raising the present interest rate in the District of Columbia from 12 percent to 24 percent per year for small loans, and allow extra charges that could total an enormous interest on loans under $35.

It is suggested that the present law, as enacted in 1913 by Congress, providing for 1 percent per month, or 12 percent per year, be enforced, and that by next year, after a year's trial of a law that, although in effect for 22 years, has never been properly enforced, according to Corporation Counsel Prettyman, more information will be available as to the advisability of changing the present law.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah, who is the author of the bill, should make a brief statement analyzing it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall be glad to do so.

This bill is not the product of the committee. It came to the committee from the District Commissioners after they had given consideration to the subject for a number of years. Representatives of civic organizations of the District appeared before the Senate committee and endorsed the measure. They said that they had for years attempted to secure the passage of a measure which would be satisfactory, and that this measure more nearly represented their views than any that had been suggested.

I call attention to the report of the committee, which, in part, is as follows, and which is explanatory of the bill:

On February 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 660, c. 26), there was enacted a bill to regulate the loaning of money in the District of Columbia. Under this bill the rate of interest upon any loan made by a licensed loan company was limited to 1 percent per month on the actual amount of the loan, to include all fees, expenses, and demands for services of every character. Only one person was ever licensed under this act, and for many years no one has been so licensed.

Since 1930 there has been pending before the Senate a series of small-loans laws, many of which were of the so-called "uniform law type", specifying a rate of interest of 3½ percent per month on unpaid balances of loans up to $300. Although this type of legislation received very strong support from organizations said to be philanthropic in nature, it was strongly opposed in the District of Columbia as authorizing unconscionably large rates of interest.

At the hearings conducted on previous bills and during consideration of the present bill a great deal of information was secured as to operations of loan sharks in the District of Columbia at the present time. Numerous instances were found where rates, including charges, as high as 30 percent of the face amount of the loan were being demanded and received. It has been found difficult to prosecute in such cases, as the stated interest rate is given as 6 percent and the dealer purports to act as the procurer of the loan only.

As a result of years of administrative interpretation of the Loan Shark Act of 1913, the application of that act to certain conditions is not clear. The committee found a general agreement of all civic organizations, social agencies, and officials that the business of making small loans should be the subject of regulation. Numerous conferences were held for the purpose of so fixing the charges and conditions that loans would be still available to the persons in need but at the lowest possible rates consistent with the expense of conducting the business.

The present act describes as interest not only the simple interest stated in the note but anything of value required to be paid as compensation for the loan, including charges, fees, and expenses of all natures, and specifies that interest so determined shall not exceed 2 percent per month on the monthly unpaid principal balance of the loan. The interest may not be compounded and neither the interest nor the fees can be deducted from the principal of the loan.

The provisions governing fees themselves divide loans into three classes and provide that loans of $35 or less for a period of 30 days or less in instances where no collateral is required, fees not to exceed $1 to be charged for a credit report if such a report is actually secured or made and not to exceed 50 cents for interest for all other charges in addition to the $1 for the credit report is permitted. It is in this class of loans for small amounts for short periods that the greatest abuses are prevalent at present, known instances of charges as high as $10 and $15 being made even on collaterally secured loans.

Section 12 of the act specifies the fees which may be charged for other types of loans up to $300. Section 13 has been modified so as to permit the licenses to make loans greater than $300 but so as to restrict the charges which may be made on amounts of above $300 under the statutes governing usury, as there is no occasion to permit the higher rates necessitated by the proration of charges on the smaller loans.

NECESSITY FOR THE LEGISLATION

It was clearly shown to the committee that many thousands of the residents of the District of Columbia are in such financial condition that they must resort to money lenders to meet minor financial emergencies. Great numbers of these unfortunate persons are now compelled to borrow money from lenders in the District of Columbia at rates vastly in excess of those prescribed in the bill. Many others use loan companies in nearby Maryland and Virginia operating under statutes which permit the collection of 3½ percent per month. Although much testimony was introduced under the auspices of the Russell Sage Foundation to the effect that small-loan companies cannot conduct their operations at less than 3½ percent per month, the committee is of the definite opinion that with the present trend in interest rates responsible companies can conduct a small-loans business in the District of Columbia at the rates herein prescribed. This opinion is confirmed by a number of responsible loan operators and by the investigations of the officials of the District of Columbia.

This legislation has been carefully considered by the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the corporation counsel, the people's counsel, and various citizens' associations of the District of Columbia. It has received the unanimous approval of the above persons and organizations, as well as the unanimous approval of the District Committee. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitted the draft of the bill and urge its passage.

As I have stated, the Commissioners favored the bill, as did the corporation counsel and the people's counsel.

The contention is made that there is a law here now fixing the rate of 1 percent per month. The fact is that no organization will take out the necessary license to make for 1 percent these small loans where there is no collateral, where the person offers no security whatever. Usually it costs a dollar or a dollar and a half to make the necessary investigation. Moreover, the losses are so great that no organization will make loans of these small amounts for 1 percent.

It is true that a law prescribing a rate of 1 percent per month has been on the statute books for years, but attempts to enforce it were futile. The principal opponents of the bill, as indicated, were those who favored the Russell Sage plan, referred to by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], which prevails in a large number of States. The District Commissioners and representatives of civic organizations here declined, however, to accept the Russell Sage plan, and, as stated, formulated this bill now before us.

Now, as to the rate of interest: It is true that for a very small loan, say $5 for 1 month, the rate is high, largely due to the examination which is made before the credit is extended.

If the loan is $100 for a year, the rate that may be charged under the bill is $27, but under the Russell Sage plan it would be $42. For a loan of $300 for a year, the bill provides a rate of interest of $72, while the Russell Sage plan would cost $126.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the present law, as I understand, provides that interest may be charged at the rate of 1 percent. That is 1 percent a month, is it not?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That means 12 percent a year.

Mr. KING. To be sure.

Mr. NORRIS. The bill now before the Senate provides for 2 percent a month, which would be 24 percent a year.

Mr. KING. That is correct; but that includes all fees, expenses, and expenses in ascertaining the standing of the person seeking the loan—the rate charged by the Russell Sage Foundation plan is——

Mr. NORRIS. The Russell Sage Foundation bill is not pending here.

Mr. KING. No; but that is the one which was urged by the opponents of this measure.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder if a bill would have any standing if a rate of 50 percent a year were charged.

Mr. KING. The Commissioners and the citizens' organizations appearing before the committee regarded this bill as very much better than the present law. Undoubtedly they would oppose 50 percent, as they opposed the Russell Sage plan, which authorizes more than 36 percent per annum.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think a rate of interest of 24 percent a year is unconscionable, and would it not be better if the prospective borrowers were not able to borrow at all?

Mr. KING. But they will and do borrow, many crossing into Maryland and Virginia, as the hearings disclosed.

Mr. NORRIS. All right. That is a confession that we are unable to pass a law that will govern these people. They are bigger than the Government.

Mr. KING. We have a law here providing for a rate of 1 percent, but small loans cannot be attained on that basis.

Mr. NORRIS. I should think the committee would be able to bring in a bill that would stop all methods of evasion of the law. Certainly we can do that.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that the representations made to the Senate committee were that the present law does not meet the situation; that it is difficult, if not impossible, to obtain small loans at the present rate.

Mr. NORRIS. They are made for a greater rate?

Mr. KING. A greater rate or——

Mr. NORRIS. Then what is the use of having any law on the subject, if the people who make these loans will not pay any attention to it, and they are greater than Congress is? Why not let them charge anything they desire to charge?

Mr. KING. There is a usury statute, but it is not enforced, and it is claimed that with respect to these small loans it cannot be enforced.

Mr. NORRIS. I cannot understand why we are asked to pass a law of this kind when it is said that 1 percent may be charged now, but nobody will loan at that rate. Those who have money to loan apparently pay no attention to the law, but loan for a higher rate, and we are unable to provide any method of enforcement of the law, or to pass any new law that could be enforced.

Mr. KING. May I say that many States have adopted the Russell Sage Foundation plan, regarding it as superior to any other.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and I read the propaganda before one of the State legislatures that had investigated the subject. Different organizations from all over the United States that were then loaning at very high, usurious rates spent literally hundreds of thousands of dollars in this propaganda, and they were able to defeat any modification of the bill by the legislature.

Mr. KING. I will say to my friend that if he will come before the committee and present a better way of dealing with this subject, I shall be very happy to have him do so. This is the best bill that the District Commissioners and a number of civic organizations were able to evolve, and they were aided by the corporation counsel, and the people's counsel, both of whom recommend it.

Mr. NORRIS. That may all be true, Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I have said all I care to say.

Mr. NORRIS. But it is shocking to me that we are about to legalize such a rate of interest.

People would probably be better off if they were not able to borrow at all. If one has to borrow and starts in paying at these rates for 30 days, and renewing the note every 30 days or every 60 days, whenever he once starts, he can never get through with it.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to state to the Senator that the question of regulating small-loan companies has been before the State legislatures for many years. Twenty-five years ago, I believe it was, I became interested in the matter before the Legislature of Kentucky, and at every meeting of the legislature since then there has been an attempt to get a similar bill through, and the same objection has always been made to it which the Senator from Nebraska is now making. About 2 years ago, however, after a quarter of a century, a bill was enacted, and from newspaper reports, and from what I hear, it is working remarkably well.

Mr. NORRIS. If it will work, we ought to repeal the usury laws, and permit the national banks to lend money at 24 percent per annum. It seems to me we should not take up such a measure as this under a unanimous-consent consideration of the calendar. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1476) to provide for unemployment relief through development of mineral resources; to assist the development of privately owned mineral claims; to provide for the development of emergency and deficiency minerals, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FEDERAL PATRONAGE IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

The bill (S. 509) to prevent the use of Federal official patronage in elections and to prohibit Federal officeholders from misuse of positions of public trust for private and partisan ends was announced as next in order, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc, That no person holding an appointive office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States shall be officer, delegate, or alternate of any political convention, having for its aim the nomination or election of any candidate, avowed or unavowed, for President or Vice President of the United States.

SEC. 2. Violations of section 1 hereof shall be punishable by fine of not more than $1,000 and by loss of the official position of such person committing such violation.

Mr. KING and Mr. GERRY asked that the bill go over.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, may I be advised who made objection to the consideration of this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two or three objections were made.

Mr. GERRY. I objected, Mr. President.

Mr. STEIWER. I ask that the objection be withheld momentarily. I wish to have the opportunity only to advise the Senate that the bill is similar to a bill which was introduced in the Senate at the last session, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, carefully considered, and reported to the Senate favorably, with some amendments, which are incorporated in the pending bill. In other words, the measure now on the Calendar is in the same form in which the bill was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session of the Congress.

I shall not detain the Senate to discuss the bill at this time, but I hope that those who are objecting will familiarize themselves with its purposes and afford us an opportunity to have the bill considered without the necessity of moving to bring it up. I very much doubt whether anyone in the majority party would have any very substantial objection to the measure. It is a bill which, in the main, will refer in practical effect to the minority party, and to the conventions held by the minority party. So far as I know, it would have but little practical relation to anything which the majority party might do. I thank Senators.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 164) for the relief of Donald L. Bruner, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1452) providing for the employment of skilled shorthand reporters in the executive branch of the Government, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1453) to create a board of shorthand reporting, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 363) to increase the efficiency of the Veterinary Corps of the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BAIL IN CRIMINAL CASES—RECOMMITTAL OF BILLS

The bill (S. 18) to amend section 1015 of the Revised Statutes was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business No. 364, being Senate bill 18, and Order of Business No. 365, being Senate bill 17, making it a contempt to willfully fail to appear after having been admitted to bail, be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. These bills have to do with the suppression of crime, and ought to be recommitted, for the reason that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] have both pointed out to me that certain changes should be made, and I think the changes should be made by the committee, because, so far as those of us who introduced the bills are concerned, we are not lawyers, and it seems that the objection is a legal one. Therefore, it ought to be passed on by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is granted, and the bills will be recommitted.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 5) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein; to prevent the false advertisement of food, drink, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 87) to prevent the shipment in interstate commerce of certain articles and commodities, in connection with which persons are employed more than 5 days per week or 6 hours per day, and prescribing certain conditions with respect to purchases and loans by the United States, and codes, agreements, and licenses under the National Industrial Recovery Act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MODIFICATION OR CANCELATION OF CONTRACTS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, is amended by striking out "April 30, 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 31, 1935."

PREVENTION OF BLINDNESS IN INFANTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2153) to provide for the prevention of blindness in infants born in the District of Columbia, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 1, beginning with line 3, to strike out section 1, as follows:

That the health officer of the District of Columbia shall prepare and place in suitable containers a 1-percent solution of silver nitrate, or another silver preparation of recognized merit, the contents of each container being the exact quantity necessary for treating two eyes. Instructions for the use of such solution shall accompany each container. It shall be the duty of each physician, midwife, or other person in attendance upon any case of childbirth to secure a container of such solution from the health officer and administer it as a prophylactic against inflammation of the eyes of the new-born child.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the health officer of the District of Columbia shall cause to be prepared and placed in suitable containers a 1-percent solution of silver nitrate or other preparation which, in his opinion, is suitable for use as a prophylactic against inflammation of the eyes of the new-born child, the contents of each container being the exact quantity necessary for the treatment of one eye and two such containers shall be furnished for use in each case of childbirth. It shall be the duty of each physician, midwife, or other person in attendance upon any case of childbirth to administer such solution as a prophylactic against inflammation of the eyes of said new-born child. It shall be the duty of each midwife or other person, except licensed physicians, to secure containers of such solution from the health officer for use in each case of childbirth.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the health officer of the District of Columbia shall cause to be prepared and placed in suitable containers a 1-percent solution of silver nitrate or other preparation which in his opinion is suitable for use as a prophylactic against inflammation of the eyes of the new-born child, the contents of each container being the exact quantity necessary for the treatment of one eye and two such containers shall be furnished for use in each case of childbirth. It shall be the duty of each physician, midwife, or other person in attendance upon any case of childbirth to administer such solution as a prophylactic against inflammation of the eyes of said new-born child. It shall be the duty of each midwife or other person, except licensed physicians, to secure containers of such solution from the health officer for use in each case of childbirth.

SEC. 2. Whenever any physician, midwife, or other person in attendance upon any case of childbirth finds that the new-born child has inflammation of the eyes, attended by a discharge therefrom, such physician, midwife, or other person shall communicate such fact in writing or otherwise to the health officer within 6 hours after the existence of such discharge becomes known to such physician, midwife, or other person. Upon receipt of such communication the health officer shall issue an order directing the parents of such child (or other person charged with its care) either to (1) place such child in the care of a registered physician, or (2) submit immediately satisfactory proof of inability to pay for such medical service. If the health officer finds such proof sufficient to establish such inability to pay, he shall order the parents (or such other person) to place the child under the treatment of a physician selected by him at the expense of the health department.

SEC. 3. No person other than a registered physician shall treat any case of inflammation of the eyes, attended by a discharge therefrom, of a new-born child for any period longer than may be necessary to obtain the services of a registered physician.

SEC. 4. Any person convicted of violating any provision of this act, or any order or regulation issued pursuant to the provisions of this act, shall be fined not more than $100 or imprisoned not more than 30 days, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] desires to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is an amendment on the desk of the clerk which I desire to suggest to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 15, after the word "physician" and the period it is proposed to insert the following:

The provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to persons treating human ailments by prayer or spiritual means as an exercise or enjoyment of religious freedom.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE—NEGLIGENT HOMICIDE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2100) to amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia" approved March 3, 1901, as amended, by adding three new sections to be numbered 802 (a), 802 (b), and 802 (c), respectively, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia", approved March 3, 1901, as amended, be further amended by adding immediately following section 802 three new sections to be numbered 802 (a), 802 (b), and 802 (c), respectively.

"SEC. 802. (a) Negligent homicide: Any person who, by the operation of any vehicle at an immoderate rate of speed or in a careless, reckless, or negligent manner, but not willfully or wantonly, shall cause the death of another, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 1 year or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or both.

"It shall be the duty of the coroner of the District of Columbia, upon any inquisition taken before him which results in the jury finding that negligent homicide, as defined herein, has been committed on the deceased, to require such witnesses as he thinks proper to give recognizance to appear and testify, or in default thereof to be committed to jail for appearance, in either the Supreme Court or the police court of the District of Columbia, and the coroner shall return to either said court the said inquisition, testimony, and recognizance or order by him taken or given.

"SEC. 802. (b) Negligent homicide included in manslaughter where death due to operation of vehicle: The crime of negligent homicide defined in section 802 (a) shall be deemed to be included within every crime of manslaughter charged to have been committed in the operation of any vehicle, and in any case where a defendant is charged with manslaughter committed in the operation of any vehicle, if the jury shall find the defendant not guilty of the crime of manslaughter such jury may, in its discretion, render a verdict of guilty of negligent homicide.

"SEC. 802. (c) Immoderate speed not dependent on legal rate of speed: In any prosecution under section 802 (a) or 802 (b), whether the defendant was driving at an immoderate rate of speed shall not depend upon the rate of speed fixed by law for operating such vehicle."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Utah what change is made in existing law by the measure just read.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill which is before us is patterned after a Michigan statute. It was found in Michigan, as it has been found in the District of Columbia, that with the extreme punishment which is permissible for negligent homicide, it is difficult to secure convictions. After a full consideration of all the questions involved, the District Commissioners and the corporation counsel recommended the pending bill. It lessens the punishment in certain cases, and they think that it will lead to better results.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL KAUFMAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3105) for relief of Samuel Kaufman, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to summon Samuel Kaufman, late major, Dental Corps, Medical Department, Regular Army, before a retiring board to inquire whether at the time of his resignation, December 15, 1922, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was a result of an incident of service, and if, as a result of such inquiry, it is found that he was so incapacitated, the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said Samuel Kaufman a major of the Dental Corps, Medical Department, and place him immediately thereafter upon the retired list of the Army, with the same privileges and retired pay as are now or may hereafter be provided by law or regulation for officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That the said Samuel Kaufman shall not be entitled to any back pay or allowances by the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does not the Senator from New Jersey desire to make an explanation of the bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, Mr. President. The bill would simply give to the claimant the right to appear before a retiring board to present his case. It is a permissive bill, merely authorizing the President to summon the claimant before a retiring board.

This man has already received a disability rating of 50 percent by the Veterans' Administration, but other circumstances and developments in his case have arisen since, and in the Committee on Military Affairs we feel unanimously that the claimant should certainly at least be given an opportunity to come before a retiring board. This is only fair.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield gladly.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is observed from the message of the Secretary of War addressed to the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that the recommendation of the War Department on the bill is adverse.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, that, I think, is a perfunctory position on the part of the War Department, if I may put it that way; and is presented in the light of the fact that the War Department probably really cannot do otherwise in the sense that they do not wish to be the ones to suggest that any officer come before a retiring board. But, after all, if we are simply going to leave to the departments the veto of any and all bills which come from the committees of the Senate, we will be in quite a helpless position.

As I have said, this bill would do nothing but give the claimant an opportunity to go before a retiring board; it merely authorizes the President to bring him before a board if he cares to do so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. KING. In addition to what was said by the Senator from Arkansas, I discover from the record that this gentleman tendered a voluntary resignation. We have had a number of cases where officers in the Army have resigned and gone into private life, and in some instances, because they did not make good, they have sought to be reinstated, or to secure reconsideration of their resignations, in order that they might be placed upon the retired list. It seems to me that in the light of the frequency of measures of this kind, this bill ought to go over.

Mr. BARBOUR. Many requests of the kind referred to by the Senator do, indeed, come before the Committee on Military Affairs, but in the great majority of cases they are not granted or recommended by the committee. This case appealed to the committee because of developments subsequent to the disability rating allowed by the Veterans' Administration, and there seemed to be every reason for giving this particular individual, in the light of the facts in this case, an opportunity to appear before a retiring board. The bill simply authorizes, as I have said, the President to bring this claimant before a board if he, the President, sees fit to do so. I hope very much the Senator will not insist on his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

COMPUTATION OF NAVAL AND MARINE CORPS SERVICE

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business 289, being Senate bill 2029, to authorize naval and Marine Corps service of any officers to be included in computing dates of retirement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2029) to authorize naval and Marine Corps service of any officers to be included in computing dates of retirement, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in computing service for the purpose of retirement of an officer of the Army, there shall be included, in addition to service now authorized by law to be included, all service in the Navy or Marine Corps which is authorized by law to be included for the purpose of retirement of an officer of the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming explain the purpose of this measure. How many officers will be affected by it, and what will be the cost to the Government?

Mr. CAREY. The purpose of the bill is to provide that the same treatment shall be accorded to officers of the Army who have served in the Marine Corps or Navy as is accorded officers of the Marine Corps and the Navy who have had Army service. In figuring their period of service the bill allows the time which these officers served in the Navy to be taken into consideration. As I have stated, officers of the Navy who have served in the Army have that privilege. It is simply a matter of treating the Army officer who has served in the Navy in the same way that officers in the other service are treated.

Mr. ROBINSON. It would seem that there is inequality in the two services in that an officer serving in the Navy may have credit for the time he served in the Army or the Marine Corps, but one serving in the Army is not given credit for service in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. CAREY. That is true; and it only affects 87 officers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAREY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Suppose a person served in the Navy and then resigned, or his term expired, and there was an interregnum of several years before he entered the Army, would that service in the Navy then be attached to the service in the Army for the purpose of establishing length of service?

Mr. CAREY. I am not certain on that question.

Mr. KING. It would seem to me if there was an interim during which the person was out of the service he ought not to be given credit for the previous period.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to say that there are a number of officers in the Army who are Annapolis graduates. For some reason or other they did not want to remain in the Navy, resigned from the Navy, and received commissions in the Army. However, as I have stated, a man who has been in the Army and then goes in the Navy or Marine Corps gets this credit; so it is rank discrimination not to give these men who have gone into the Army the same privilege which is extended to those in the other service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if there was an interregnum after a man resigned either from the Army or the Navy during which period he went into private life, and remained there for several years, and then for reasons best known to himself went into the Army or into the Navy again, I do not think he should be permitted to tack onto his present service in the Army or in the Navy the time of service which he may have had in either branch of the service before he resigned and went into private life.

Mr. CAREY. I do not think he would be permitted to do that but I cannot say positively that he would not.

Mr. ROBINSON. In any event this bill simply makes applicable to persons serving in the Army the same right as to credit for service in any other military branch as applies now to those who are serving in the Navy.

Mr. CAREY. It treats the Army officer the same as the men are treated in the other service, and I think it is just and fair that they should be accorded the same treatment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1589) authorizing the purchase of United States Supreme Court decisions and digest was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 477) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the Southern District of New York and two additional judges for the Southern District of California was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2356) to amend the act entitled "An act for the relief of contractors and subcontractors for the post offices and other buildings and work under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1919, as amended by act of March 6, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL DISTRICTS IN GLACIER COUNTY, MONT.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1522) to provide funds for cooperation with public-school districts in Glacier County, Mont., in the improvement and extension of school buildings to be available to both Indian and white children.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is a considerable number of bills which seem to be embraced within the same principle or theory as the one just announced. I should like to have an explanation of them.

Mr. WHEELER. I made an explanation the last time the calendar was called. What has happened is that the Bureau of Indian Affairs as a permanent policy at the present time is closing up various Indian boarding schools throughout the United States and is placing the Indian children in the public schools. It has been found that by placing them in the public schools a saving to the Government is effected, because the cost is much lower. It has also been found that by sending the Indian children to the public schools they become better able to take their place in our modern life after they have gotten through school, and they are better fitted to go out and get positions than they are when they come out of boarding schools.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is, instead of being instructed in schools maintained exclusively for Indian children, they are given instruction in the public schools?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. In many jurisdictions the white population objects to Indian children going to the public schools, but in Montana in the particular places we have under consideration the school districts have said, "We are perfectly willing that you should send these Indians to school here; but we do not have the requisite facilities, and consequently we want you to cooperate in building additional rooms so that the Indian children may be taken into our schools."

These bills provide for a very meritorious object, and I am sure the Bureau of Indian Affairs has recommended them. At the last session of Congress most of these bills which are now on the calendar were passed without objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. Are the necessary appropriations proposed to be made from the General Treasury fund?

Mr. WHEELER. From the General Treasury fund.

Mr. ROBINSON. How are the Indian schools maintained which are now being closed?

Mr. WHEELER. The funds come out of the General Treasury. Many of the Indian boarding schools at the present time are dilapidated, and it would be necessary to spend much money on them. Not only that, but the cost to the Government of sending the Indian children to the boarding schools is much greater than is the cost of sending them to the public schools.

Mr. ROBINSON. On that statement of facts the policy would seem to be justified.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is any doubt about it. The Committee on Indian Affairs made a thorough study of the question throughout the United States, and the committee came to the conclusion unanimously that it was the best policy wherever it was possible to adopt it.

Mr. ROBINSON. How do the Indians themselves like the change in policy? I made a study of this subject some years ago and found that they were reluctant to leave their own institutions and be educated in institutions primarily maintained for white students.

Mr WHEELER. That is true in some instances, but in Montana particularly the better elements of the Indians have all come to the conclusion that they had better send their children to public schools, because it better fits them to take their places in the world after they have graduated.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why should not these appropriations be carried in a general bill?

Mr. KING. In the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I think they should. My idea is that if these bills shall pass the Senate the money will probably be paid out of the public-works fund.

Mr. ROBINSON. But these bills do not authorize that to be done.

Mr. WHEELER. No; I understand they do not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I wish to inquire of the Senator whether or not any of the Indian boarding schools, so called, which have been costing for several years $10,000,000 a year, are being closed?

Mr. WHEELER. It is my understanding that some of them are being closed; and, so far as my opinion goes, many more of them should be closed.

Mr. KING. As I understood when Dr. Ryan went into the Bureau of Indian Affairs he was pledged to reduction in the number of Indian schools, and to the adoption of a plan something along the line indicated by the Senator from Montana, and I was wondering whether that course was being carried out.

Mr. WHEELER. It is being carried out so far as it can be carried. There has been some objection to closing the Indian boarding schools on the part of the local people in the communities. The Riverside School is an exceedingly expensive school to the Government of the United States, and when the Indians go there they are brought up in surroundings which totally unfit them for the life on an Indian reservation. The bill, in my judgment, is a great forward step for the Indian children.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, one further question. I see that a large appropriation is made by the Government. Do the counties and school districts make a corresponding contribution?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; the school districts at the present time in each one of these instances have school buildings. The bills provide for additions to such school buildings for the purpose of taking care of the Indian children. The local districts are practically all in counties where the great portion of the land is in Indian ownership, and it pays no taxes whatsoever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, of which $60,000 is to be used for the purpose of cooperating with school district no. 9 in Glacier County, Mont., in the improvement and extension of high-school buildings, and $40,000 to be used in the improvement and extension of school buildings in other public-school districts in said Glacier County: Provided, That said schools shall be available to both white and Indian children without discrimination, except that tuition may be paid for Indian children attending in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 23, POLSON, MONT.

The bill (S. 1524) to provide funds for cooperation with school district no. 23, Polson, Mont., in the improvement and extension of school buildings to be available to both Indian and white children, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000 for the purpose of cooperating with school district no. 23, Polson, Mont., in the improvement and extension of public-school buildings: Provided, That the schools maintained by the district shall be available to both Indian and white children without discrimination, except that tuition may be paid for Indian children attending in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

JOINT SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 28, LAKE AND MISSOULA COUNTIES, MONT.

The bill (S. 1525) to provide funds for cooperation with joint school district no. 28, Lake and Missoula Counties, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children of the Flathead Indian Reservation, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of cooperating with joint school district no. 28, Lake and Missoula Counties, Mont., for the extension and improvement of public-school buildings, namely, at Arlee in the sum of $40,000, at Roman in the sum of $30,000, and at St. Ignatius in the sum of $30,000: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all Indian children of the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING AT BROCKTON, MONT.

The bill (S. 1526) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Brockton, Mont., in the extension of the public-school building at that place to be available to Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $40,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 55, town of Brockton, and county of Roosevelt, Mont., for the extension and betterment of the public-school building at Brockton, Mont.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district, and that accommodations in said enlarged building to the extent of one-half its capacity shall be available for Indian children from the Fort Peck Reservation: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOL AT FRAZER, MONT.

The bill (S. 1530) to authorize appropriations for the completion of the public high school at Frazer, Mont., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000 for the completion of the public high school at Frazer, Mont., and for necessary equipment in connection therewith for manual, laboratory, and other lines of training.

INCREASE OF LINE OF THE NAVY

The bill (H. R. 5599) to regulate the strength and distribution of the line of the Navy, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this measure?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the general purpose of the bill is to provide for increasing the strength of the line of the Navy to meet with the treaty strength. We have passed legislation at previous sessions, at the last session particularly, providing ultimately for building up the Navy to treaty strength, but we did not pass any legislation bearing upon the question of the personnel. This measure according to the plan of promotion, provides for officers and enlisted men, upon the basis that prevails within the Navy. It contemplates increasing their number according as we gradually acquire new ships and extend the activities of the Navy. That is in substance the purpose of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator refer to the Washington Treaty of 1922 or to the London Treaty? The fact must be borne in mind that we have increased to only a very small extent the personnel, and why should we begin providing for an increase in admirals and high officers in the Navy before we have brought the Navy up to what the Senator calls "treaty strength"? We may never go to the strength authorized by the London Treaty, and in that event we would have officers without ships and without personnel. I think we could take care of the officers after we get the Navy.

Mr. TRAMMELL. This bill does not contemplate the number being increased all at once. It contemplates progressive increases along with the progress that is being made in the matter of building and commissioning ships. That is the way I understand the bill. It does not contemplate loading the Navy down with a lot of officers who are not needed, but it authorizes them when they are needed according to the demands and needs of the Navy. The bill passed the House after very thorough hearings held by the committee of that body. I hope it will pass the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I request that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LONGEVITY PAY IN THE NAVY

The bill (S. 2287) to authorize the crediting of service rendered by personnel (active or retired) subsequently to June 30, 1932, in the computation of their active or retired pay after June 30, 1935, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, may I make a brief explanation of the bill before the Senator finally objects?

Mr. KING. I withhold the objection.

Mr. TRAMMELL. When the Congress provided a reduction of salary, first of 15 percent, then of 10 percent, then of 5 percent, that applied alike, of course, to all naval officers just as it did to the civilian employees. Notwithstanding that the salary reduction was lifted on the 1st of April, it still applies in a certain way against naval officers. The regulations and the law in regard to the Navy provide that naval officers shall have a 5-percent increase in longevity based upon periods of 3 years.

During the entire 3 years the salary reduction was in force all these officers lost their longevity pay for that particular 3-year period. This bill provides that hereafter in fixing their salaries those 3 years shall not be considered as having been lost, but the bill does not provide any back pay or any restitution of the salary based upon that longevity during the period of the salary reduction. Without this proposed legislation all naval officers will continue to suffer a reduction of 5 percent because of that period practically of 3 years. While all civilian employees and all Army officers have had their salaries restored in full, the naval officers will lose a 5-percent reduction in their salaries if we do not correct this hiatus in regard to longevity pay. That is the object of this bill, that naval officers shall not continue to suffer that 5-percent reduction.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2287) to authorize the crediting of service rendered by personnel (active or retired) subsequently to June 30, 1932, in the computation of their active or retired pay after June 30, 1935, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the suspension during the fiscal years 1933, 1934, and 1935 of the longevity increases provided for in the tenth paragraph of section 1 of the Pay Adjustment Act of 1922, the personnel (active or retired) so affected shall be credited with service rendered subsequently to June 30, 1932, in computing their active or retired pay accruing subsequently to June 30, 1935: Provided, That this section shall not be construed as authorizing the payment of back longevity pay for the fiscal years 1933, 1934, and 1935 which would have been paid during such years but for the suspension aforesaid.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1492) to compensate the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for lands set aside by treaties for their future homes and later patented to the State of Minnesota, under the Swamp Land Act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Over.

WHITE SWAN SCHOOL DISTRICT, YAKIMA COUNTY, WASH.

The bill (S. 1535) to provide funds for cooperation with White Swan School District, No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension of public-school buildings to be available for Indian children of the Yakima Reservation was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of cooperating with White Swan School District, No. 88, Yakima County, Wash., for extension and improvement of public-school buildings: Provided, That the expenditure of any moneys so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all Indian children of the district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

PUBLIC SCHOOL AT COVELO, CALIF.

The bill (S. 1536) to provide funds for cooperation with the public-school board at Covelo, Calif., in the construction of public-school buildings to be available to Indian children of the Round Valley Reservation, Calif., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the Round Valley Union High School District Board of School Trustees, town of Covelo, and County of Mendocino, Calif., for construction of a new public high-school plant at Covelo, Calif.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1426) providing for the appointment of Harry T. Herring, formerly a lieutenant colonel in the United States Army, as a lieutenant colonel in the United States Army, and his retirement in that grade was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the bill was reported by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. The report is very full and ample and sets forth the details about the bill. I think it is quite a meritorious measure, but I should rather have it go over until the Senator may have an opportunity to familiarize himself with it.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator very much.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1932) for the relief of the State of California was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that bill had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2213) to define the exterior boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation in New Mexico, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HATCH. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD SETTLERS

The bill (S. 1776) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1935 was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any homestead settler or entryman who, during the calendar year 1935, should find it necessary, because of economic conditions, to leave his homestead to seek employment in order to obtain the necessaries of life for himself and/or family or to provide for the education of his children may, upon filing with the register of the district, his affidavit, supported by corroborating affidavits of two disinterested persons showing the necessity of such absence, be excused from compliance with the requirements of the homestead laws as to residence, cultivation, improvements, expenditures, or payment of purchase money, as the case may be, during all or any part of the calendar year 1935, and said entries shall not be open to contest or protest because of failure to comply with such requirements during such absence; except that the time of such absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law, but a period equal to such absence shall be added to the statutory life of the entry: Provided, That any entryman holding an unperfected entry on ceded Indian lands may be excused from the requirements of residence upon the conditions provided herein, but shall not be entitled to extension of time for the payment of any installment of the purchase price of the land except upon payment of interest, in advance, at the rate of 4 percent per annum on the principal of any unpaid purchase price from the date when such payment or payments became due to and inclusive of the date of the expiration of the period of relief granted hereunder.

NATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL FOR BOYS

The bill (H. R. 3959) for the relief of the National Training School for Boys, and others, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds not otherwise appropriated, to Claude D. Jones, superintendent of the National Training School for Boys, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, the sum of $414, to be used in the payment of expenses incident to the illness of John Henry Tackett, former inmate of the National Training School for Boys, which resulted in amputation of the leg on March 22, 1932, such sum to be expended as follows: For hospitalization, Sibley Hospital, Washington, D. C., $129; for medical and surgical treatment, Dr. Curtis Lee Hall, $135; for the purchase of an artificial limb, $150: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

YELLOW DRIVURSELF CO.

The bill (H. R. 2353) for the relief of the Yellow Drivurself Co. was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, to E. C. Matthews, Karl Matthews, and C. G. Matthews, all of Chattanooga, Tenn., a partnership trading as the Yellow Drivurself Co., the sum of $512. Such sum represents the amount of a claim against the United States under contract no. W6145qm-4, entered into October 28, 1930, in good faith, by such Yellow Drivurself Co. and the constructing quartermaster at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., for the War Department. Such company furnished a car as specified in such contract, but the Comptroller General was unable to allow the payment of any claim for rental under such contract because such expenditure was not specifically authorized by law, as required by section 5 of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation Act of July 16, 1914 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 78): Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

PUBLIC SERVICE COORDINATED TRANSPORT OF NEWARK, N. J.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2439) authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N. J., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, this bill calls for the payment of the sum of $122,442.23, and I think it well that attention should be called to it, although the bill is, as the Committee on Claims thinks, a meritorious one.

The bill has been before the Congress since the Seventy-first Congress; it was favorably reported in the Senate in the Seventy-first, Seventy-second, and Seventy-third Congresses, and has again been favorably reported now in the Seventy-fourth Congress. It has been before the Committee on War Claims in the House of Representatives since the Seventy-first Congress, and has been favorably reported by that committee. The bill has been passed upon by Mr. McCarl, the Comptroller General, and thoroughly reviewed by him. He has recommended the payment and the form of the bill in which it now is.

The claim is based, as stated on its face, upon the destruction and removal during the late war of certain tracks, car houses, storage tracks, and so forth, belonging to the claimant company or its predecessor from their original location to new locations and the War Department's failure to restore them to the original location in accordance with the informal arrangement respecting the matter.

As I have said, the whole case has been reviewed very carefully by the Comptroller General. His letter addressed to the Congress will be found on page 3 of the report. He has gone over it in great detail, and I do not think it is necessary for me to go further into it, but if Senators require me to do it, I will undertake to read the letter of Mr. McCarl, in which he analyzes the claim, defines the items, and declares that the payment is justly due the claimant company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I address an inquiry to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I note that there is a limitation by amendment as to the amount which may be paid to attorneys. Is it designed to make that 10 percent the limitation upon all the compensation for attorneys, or may any agent receive pay up to 10 percent?

Mr. BAILEY. The limitation involves attorneys; but, I take it, it includes agents or any others. We have attached that limitation, I may say, in the Claims Committee as a matter of form to all bills, unless there is some special rule, and then we may change it; but in general the 10-percent limitation is provided.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So that all attorneys may not receive in the aggregate more than 10 percent?

Mr. BAILEY. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 2, after the word "claim", at the end of the bill, to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N. J., arising out of the removal by the War Department during the late war of certain tracks, car house, storage tracks, etc., belonging to said company or its predecessor, from their original locations to new locations, and the War Department's failure to restore same to their original location in accordance with an informal arrangement respecting the matter, and to allow in full and final settlement of any and all claims arising out of said transactions an amount not exceeding $122,442.43. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $122,422.43, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of said claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2312) for the relief of the Western Construction Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I should like an explanation of the bill, and, pending that, I will ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WESTERN ELECTRIC CO., INC.

The bill (S. 2487) for the relief of the Western Electric Co., Inc., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust, settle, and certify for payment, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the claim of the Western Electric Co., Inc., for supplies delivered to the Navy Mine Depot, Yorktown, Va., under requisition no. 96, Bureau of Ordnance, dated May 24, 1920, the said supplies having been delivered to and accepted by the United States, but payment therefor not having been made because of the absence of a formal written contract, as required by section 3744 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of June 17, 1917 (40 Stat. 198): Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

MOTHER'S DAY

The resolution (S. Res. 106) favoring an expression on Mother's Day of our love and reverence for motherhood, submitted by Mr. COPELAND on the calendar day March 15, 1935, and reported from the Committee on Education and Labor without amendment, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas by House Joint Resolution 263, approved and signed by President Wilson, May 8, 1914, the second Sunday in May of each year has been designated as Mother's Day for the expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of our country; and

Whereas there are throughout our land today an unprecedentedly large number of mothers and dependent children who, because of unemployment or loss of their bread earners, are lacking many of the necessities of life: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon our citizens to express, on Mother's Day this year, our love and reverence for motherhood;

(a) By the customary display of the United States flag on all Government buildings, homes, and other suitable places;

(b) By the usual tokens and messages of affection to our mothers; and

(c) By making contributions, in honor of our mothers, through our churches or other fraternal and welfare agencies, for the relief and welfare of such mothers and children as may be in need of the necessities of life.

The preamble was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 672) for the relief of the city of Baltimore was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHEELER. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2530) to protect American and Philippine labor and to preserve an essential industry, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

GERALD MACKEY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 378) for the relief of Gerald Mackey.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this is a bill authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to examine, investigate, and pay this claim in such amount as he may find proper.

The injured man was a member of the fire company at Tupper Lake, in up-State New York. There was a reciprocal arrangement between that town and the Veterans' Administration facility at Sunmount, in New York, for services to be rendered one to the other in case of emergency. There was a fire at the Veterans' Administration facility. This Tupper Lake fireman went there; he was mounting a ladder carrying a hose with a full head of water to play on the flames. The ladder broke and he was injured. The Veterans' Administration has said there is a moral obligation to make compensation, and it suggested the general form of the bill. The bill has passed the House, and it seemed to the committee there was justification for its passage by the Senate.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Under the general retirement act or under the act providing for compensation to persons injured while in the service of the State or municipalities, would not this case be covered?

Mr. WHITE. No. The town itself had an insurance arrangement, but for some reason it was held that the insurance did not cover an injury of the character involved in this particular case.

Mr. KING. I am advised that the bill authorizes the Comptroller General to fix the amount.

Mr. WHITE. That is correct. That form of bill was suggested by the Veterans' Administration, as I think has been done in other cases. The Comptroller General has not a reputation for prodigality in the payment of claims.

Mr. KING. It seems to me, unless the bill were referred to the Court of Claims, where all the facts could be investigated, it is rather dangerous to commit to some officer of the Government the determination of damages in case of a tort.

Mr. WHITE. It is not a case where there is a legal claim. There is no legal claim upon which the Court of Claims should pass. It is purely the recognition of a moral or equitable claim or debt.

Mr. KING. It seems to me the Court of Claims ought to find the amount due.

Mr. WHITE. The report of the House committee shows the maximum amount claimed by the man is $1,200, to cover all expenses and everything incident to the accident.

Mr. KING. Why does not the Senator offer an amendment providing that, while the Comptroller general may make the examination and determine the amount, yet in no event shall more than $1,200 or $1,000, whichever the committee thinks fair, shall be paid.

Mr. WHITE. If I must offer the amendment in order to have the bill passed, of course I shall do so. The bill passed the House in this form, and the Claims Committee thought it was perfectly safe in reporting it in this form.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it seems to me that it creates rather an unusual precedent that a Government official may have the sole determination of what the compensation shall be. Is there any real objection to providing that it shall not exceed $1,200, the amount which is stated in the report?

Mr. WHITE. Very well. I move to amend, on page 1, line 7, after the word "Mackey", by inserting the words "not to exceed $1,200."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "Mackey", it is proposed to insert the words "not to exceed $1,200", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to examine, investigate, and pay the claim of Gerald Mackey in such amount as the Comptroller General may determine to be fair and proper compensation for actual damages to the person of Gerald Mackey, not to exceed $1,200, including medical and hospital expenses and actual loss of earnings proximately resulting from injuries sustained while assisting in extinguishing the fire at the Veterans' Administration facility, Sunmount, N. Y., January 25, 1933, while serving as a member of the volunteer fire department of Tupper Lake, N. Y. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as the Comptroller General may find necessary for payment of the said claim, and payment by the Comptroller General in accordance with this act shall be full and final settlement of the said claim of Gerald Mackey against the United States on account of such injuries: Provided, That in addition to the evidence otherwise required and as a condition to payment of the claim, the said Gerald Mackey shall be required to submit proof satisfactory to the Comptroller General that he has not obtained settlement of the claim from a person other than the United States and shall be required to surrender to the United States any and all claim on account of the injuries heretofore described as against any person other than the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ESTATE OF THOMAS PERAGLIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 530) granting compensation to the estate of Thomas Peraglia, deceased, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$5,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to the estate of Thomas Peraglia, deceased, late of Palisades Park, Bergen County, N. J., in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States for the death of the said Thomas Peraglia, resulting from injuries he sustained when shot by a Federal prohibition officer at Palisades Park, Bergen County, N. J., February 12, 1927: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the merits of the case?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this is another House bill. It is a case of the kind which often comes before the Claims Committee. It provides for reimbursement because of the shooting of a person by a prohibition officer.

Prohibition officers heard there was a still being operated on certain premises in the town of Palisades Park, N. J. They went there, found the still, and were in possession of the premises. While they were on the premises Peraglia entered. The prohibition officer immediately shot him. The bullet went through his right lung. The man ran for a short distance, fell, and was found there. He was not armed. The bullet of the prohibition officer penetrated the right lung. The man lived about 5 years with an open rubber drain in the lung during that entire period of time; the man died, leaving a wife and children.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the bill. The only regret I have is that we cannot compel the man who did the shooting to pay the claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

KNUD O. FLAKNE

The bill (S. 1446) for the relief of Knud O. Flakne was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. WHITE. In the last Congress there was enacted legislation seeking to adjust the claims growing out of the draining of Mud Lake. That legislation designated the beneficiaries and specified the amount each beneficiary was to receive. Included among these designated beneficiaries was the F. H. Wellcome Co. Flakne was not named at all in the original legislation.

When the claim was presented to the Interior Department it appeared there was a conflict as to title. The bill does not increase the amount at all, it does not enlarge the obligation or liability of the United States over the legislation of last year, but it makes possible the determination of whether the amount of money named in the legislation of last year rightfully belongs to Wellcome Co. or to Flakne. That is all that is involved in it.

Mr. KING. I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1446) for the relief of Knud O. Flakne, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the words "amended by", to strike out the words "striking out the words F. H. Wellcome Co. and inserting in lieu thereof the words Knud O. Flakne", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "inserting the words 'or Knud O. Flakne' after the words 'F. H. Wellcome Co.'", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain riparian owners for losses sustained by them on the drained Mud Lake bottom in Marshall County in the State of Minnesota", approved June 26, 1934 (Private, No. 368, 73d Cong.), is hereby amended by inserting the words "or Knud O. Flakne" after the words "F. H. Wellcome Co."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY C. MORAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1447) for the relief of Mary C. Moran, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 7, after the word "amended" to strike out the words "by striking out the words 'Clarence Larson' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'Mary C. Moran'", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "by inserting the words 'or Mary C. Moran' after the words 'Clarence Larson'", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain riparian owners for losses sustained by them on the drained Mud Lake bottom in Marshall County in the State of Minnesota", approved June 26, 1934 (Private, No. 368, 73d Cong.), is hereby amended by inserting the words "or Mary C. Moran" after the words "Clarence Larson."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER C. DOYLE

The bill (H. R. 240) for the relief of Capt. Alexander C. Doyle was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, this is a bill authorizing the Comptroller General to adjust and settle the claim, but in a specified amount.

It appears from the papers in the case that this officer was stationed at Schofield Barracks, Hawaii. He was charged there with a great many duties. He was responsible for several million dollars' worth of Government property. He had direction of the police and sanitation. He was finance officer for the barracks. He was charged with the handling of the pay roll for the men and all the employees engaged in the various undertakings.

While he was engaged in these duties it was disclosed that there were irregularities in the pay roll amounting to some $3,300. The pay rolls were made up by subordinates in his office, submitted to him with their certification, and then approved by him.

The captain was court-martialed. He was tried and charged with neglect of duty, as the result of which it was alleged this loss occurred. The court martial which tried him exonerated him on every charge. There was no suggestion of wrong intent on his part. There was no suggestion that he profited in any way by the irregularities. There was no suggestion in the ultimate finding of the court martial that he was guilty of neglect or in any other respect was involved.

However, pending the investigation, pending the trial by the court martial, and notwithstanding the acquittal of the officer on all these charges, the War Department withheld a portion of his pay. Your committee felt that if the tribunal established by the War Department found him guiltless, the Department itself ought not administratively to penalize him. In other words, we felt that the War Department ought to abide by the verdict of its own tribunal, which was the court martial, and which, as I said, exonerated him in all respects of all charges.

Mr. ROBINSON. Did the Government sustain a loss by reason of his alleged neglect of duty?

Mr. WHITE. My impression is that there was a loss; but I desire again to emphasize to the Senator from Arkansas that the court martial exonerated this officer of the charge of neglect of duty. The basis of the court-martial proceedings was neglect of duty on his part, from which the loss resulted. That was the issue tried before the court martial; and he was acquitted not only upon that charge but upon various other suggestions which were involved in the court-martial proceeding. In other words, he got from the tribunal set up by the War Department a complete clean bill of health.

Mr. ROBINSON. Was there a report on the bill from the War Department?

Mr. WHITE. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not see it in the report of the committee.

Mr. WHITE. It does not appear in the report of the committee, and I shall have to confess to the Senator that I cannot answer that question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

BROWN & CUNNINGHAM, OF PORT DEPOSIT, MD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 684) for the relief of Brown & Cunningham, of Port Deposit, Md., which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the word "and", to strike out "Frank J. Cunningham" and insert "Nellie R. Cunningham"; in line 8, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,368.65" and insert "$2,400"; and at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Fred S. Brown and Nellie R. Cunningham, doing business under the name of Brown & Cunningham, Port Deposit, Md., the sum of $2,400, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for damages on account of loss of business and destruction of certain stock and fixtures caused by a Marine Corps truck (no. 1394), when such truck crashed into the store owned by said Brown & Cunningham at Port Deposit, Md., on October 12, 1933: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2357) to amend an act entitled "An act to improve the navigability and to provide for the flood control of the Tennessee River; to provide for reforestation and the proper use of marginal lands in the Tennessee Valley; to provide for the agricultural and industrial development of said valley; to provide for the national defense by the creation of a corporation for the operation of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals in the State of Alabama, and for other purposes", approved May 18, 1933, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, obviously that bill cannot be considered under the 5-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

TRIAL FOR MURDER BY NAVAL COURTS MARTIAL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1207) to authorize trial by court martial of any person in the naval service charged with the crime of murder committed without the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article 6 of section 1624 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"ART. 6. Any person in the naval service who is charged with the crime of murder may be tried by court martial and on conviction shall suffer death or such other punishment as a court martial may direct; but no person shall be tried by court martial for murder committed within the geographical limits of the States of the Union and the District of Columbia in time of peace."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] whether there is not now authority for the trial of persons serving in the Navy who are charged with homicide, where the crime is alleged to have been committed outside the geographical limits of the United States?

Mr. TRAMMELL. If they are connected with a vessel of the Navy, there is a law which provides for it; but if they are stationed at some post, the law does not cover a situation of that character. The Navy Department recommended the passage of this bill so that if an officer or other person in the naval service were entirely detached from a vessel he would be subject to its jurisdiction, instead of having to be turned over to the local authorities, wherever he might happen to be, outside of the United States. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether in handling such a case under this bill a different method would be employed than that which would prevail if the man committed the homicide while on board a ship of the Navy?

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is a detail which has not been gone into in the discussion of the bill; but, of course, the accused would be tried by court martial at the post where he might happen to be, instead of being turned over to the local authorities. The explanation for the bill, as I understand, is that the present law provides for the trial of men connected with ships, but not for the trial of men stationed at some post without the United States.

Mr. KING. But they have to be in the naval service in order to be tried by court martial?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Oh, they have to be in the naval service.

Mr. KING. Suppose, however, the authorities of the country in which the homicide was committed arrested the man and sought to take jurisdiction of the crime. They would do so. We could not prevent their doing so.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course, that would depend upon the law of the particular nation involved.

Mr. KING. Suppose a national of the country in which the post was located should be killed by a seaman at the post. Then, quite likely, the government of that national might claim jurisdiction over the offending person.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Ordinarily I should not think our law would supersede their law unless by some treaty arrangement, and so forth, it should be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the object is to give the naval authorities jurisdiction in just such cases as the Senator from Utah has suggested. The report states that under present conditions, unless a man is attached to a ship, there is no jurisdiction in the naval authorities to try him. Under this bill he would be tried by naval court martial whether or not he were attached to a ship.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is the object of the proposed legislation, which I think is much more desirable than leaving the matter open as it is at present, so that he would be turned over to the authorities of the country in which he was located.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANTS TO COMMANDANT OF MARINE CORPS

The bill (S. 1211) authorizing the assignment of two officers on the active list of the United States Marine Corps not below the rank of colonel to duty as assistants to the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an officer on the active list of the United States Marine Corps not below the rank of colonel may be detailed as first assistant to the Major General Commandant, and, in case of the death, removal, retirement, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Major General Commandant, shall, unless otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section 179 of the Revised Statutes, perform the duties of the Major General Commandant until his successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

SEC. 2. That an officer on the active list of the United States Marine Corps not below the rank of colonel may be detailed as second assistant to the Major General Commandant and in case of the death, removal, retirement, resignation, absence, or sickness of both the Major General Commandant and the first assistant to the Major General Commandant, shall, unless otherwise directed by the President as provided by section 179 of the Revised Statutes, perform the duties of the Major General Commandant until his successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

BONDS OF OFFICERS OF NAVAL SUPPLY CORPS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1212) to amend section 1383 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1383 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1383. Every officer of the Supply Corps of the United States Navy shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, give good and sufficient bond to the United States, to be approved by the Secretary of the Navy and in such sum as the Secretary may direct, faithfully to account for all public funds and property which he may receive. The Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, waive the requirements of this section in the case of officers of the Supply Corps who are not accountable for public funds or public property."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what is the effect of this bill?

Mr. TRAMMELL. This is an administration measure, recommended by the Navy Department. It seems that under the present law all supply officers of the Navy are required to give bond whether or not they have custody of any funds or any supplies. The Navy Department recommends that the law be amended so that bond shall be required only in the event the officer is entrusted with funds or property. The bill seeks to relieve officers of the necessity of giving bond where not required for the protection of the Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEADERS OF NAVY BAND AND MARINE CORPS BAND

The bill (S. 1609) for the relief of the present leaders of the United States Navy Band and the band of the United States Marine Corps was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of approval of this act the present leader of the United States Navy Band and the present leader of the band of the United States Marine Corps shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a lieutenant in the Navy and of a captain in the Marine Corps, respectively; and in the computation of their pay and allowances all service in the Navy and the Marine Corps of whatever nature rendered by said leaders shall be counted as if it were commissioned service; and the said leaders of the United States Navy Band and the band of the United States Marine Corps shall, at such time as the President in his discretion may direct, be entitled to retirement as a lieutenant in the Navy and as a captain in the Marine Corps, in the same manner as other officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of such rank and length of service, computed as stated above, would be entitled to retirement.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS AT QUANTICO, VA.

The bill (S. 1611) to authorize an exchange of lands between the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and the United States at Quantico, Va., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized on behalf of the United States to accept from the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co., a corporation of the State of Virginia, free from all encumbrances and without cost to the United States, all right, title, and interest in fee simple in and to the following lands, together with all the right, title, and interest in and to the platted streets and riparian rights in Quantico Creek as may attach to the lots conveyed in subsection (a):

(a) Lots no. 21, 22, 23, 38, 39, 51, 58, 59, 72, and 85 in the town of Carborough, county of Prince William, State of Virginia, as shown on the original plat filed with the condemnation of the above lots by the Potomac Railroad Co., that lie to the east of a line drawn 100 feet east from and parallel to the present center line of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co., purchased from the Potomac & Manassas Railroad Co. by deed dated August 15, 1871, recorded January 1, 1872, in the clerk's office of Prince William County in deed book no. 28, page 452, excepting therefrom that portion of lot no. 22, sold by the Potomac Railroad Co. to J. W. Norton by deed dated November 24, 1883, recorded in the clerk's office, Prince William County, on December 8, 1883, in deed book no. 34, page 424, which portion is more particularly designated and described as lot no. 22–A on plan marked "V. D. 41–4, R., F. & P. R. R. Co. Proposed exchange of lands at Quantico, scale 1"=100 feet dated October 1, 1932, revised September 4, 1933", beginning at the United States Marine Corps Reservation corner no. 154 along the boundary between the United States Marine Corps Reservation and lot no. 23, south 55° 16′ east, a distance of 38.3 feet to the corner of lot no. 23, the place of beginning; thence along boundary line of United States Marine Corps Reservation south 55°16′ east 131.7 feet to boundary monument no. 153 of United States Marine Corps Reservation; thence on said boundary line north 34°44′ east 141.6 feet to a point; thence leaving said boundary line north 64°46′ west 60 feet to a point; thence north 78°46′ west 48.5 feet to a point; thence south 59°54′ west 64.5 feet to a point; thence south 34°43′ west 53.8 feet to the point of beginning, containing three hundred and forty-eight thousandths of an acre.

The above properties, when transferred to the United States shall become a part of the Marine Corps Reservation, Quantico, Va.

SEC. 2. In exchange for the above-described lands, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to transfer by appropriate conveyance to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co., free from all encumbrances, and without cost to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co., all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the lands contained within the Marine Corps Reservation at Quantico, Va., described generally as follows:

(1) Those two small parcels of land, part of what is known as the "Shipping Board Tract" as shown on the map of the United States Marine Corps Reservation, Prince William County, Va., dated June 25, 1920, signed Thomas J. Brady, Jr., Public Works officer, that lies to the west of a line drawn parallel to and 100 feet east from the present center line of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. and lying within the right-of-way of said railroad company, such land being shown more particularly in yellow on the map marked "V. D. 41–4—R. F. & P. R. R. Co.—Proposed exchange of land at Quantico, Scale 1″=100 feet dated Oct. 1, 1932, revised Sept. 4, 1933."

(2) That parcel of land adjoining the present eastern right-of-way line of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad Co. between Fifth and Sixth Streets in the town of Quantico, Prince William County, Va., beginning at a point where the present southern line of Fifth Street intersects the present eastern right-of-way line of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad; thence in an easterly direction along said southern line of Fifth Street 10.13 feet to a point; thence in a southerly direction by a line parallel to and 10.13 feet east from the present eastern right-of-way line of the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad 56.58 feet to a point; thence bearing to the east by a line that is at right angles to the northern line of Sixth Street 180.17 feet to a point in said northern line of Sixth Street; thence in a westerly direction 39.57 feet to the eastern right-of-way line of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad; thence in a northerly direction along said right-of-way line 239.14 feet to the point of beginning; containing 5,047 square feet, all as more particularly shown in yellow on the map marked "V. D. 41–101—R. F. & P. R. R. Co. Easement desired from U. S. Govt. of Quantico, Va., dated Sept. 12, 1932."

JOHN J. MORAN

The bill (S. 211) for the relief of John J. Moran was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and paid to John J. Moran the sum of $296.42, being the amount paid by Mr. Moran as postmaster at Southington, Conn., to Raymond F. Keating and Keron R. Welch, employees at the post office for the period August 16 to September 30, 1918, which amount was not allowed by the Post Office Department, plus interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1439) amending the postal laws to include as second-class matter religious periodicals publishing local information was announced as next in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, let us have an analysis of this proposed change in the postal laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and reported by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Neither of those Senators appear to be in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then the bill may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1539) relating to undelivered parcels of the first class was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PUNISHMENT FOR DELIVERY OF NONMAILABLE MATTER—RECOMMITTAL

The bill (S. 1541) to punish persons knowingly causing the delivery by mail of certain nonmailable matter was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, this bill was recently reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and it is my information that the bill did not have very careful consideration. It is rather sweeping in its effect. After a conference with the author of the bill, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], he has agreed that the bill shall be recommitted to the committee for further consideration, especially in the light of certain hearings which have been held by the House committee.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator has stated that that meets the approval of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It meets the approval of the author of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 1541 be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF HUDSON, N. Y., AND PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6457) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Hudson, N. Y.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I wish to offer certain amendments to the bill which will authorize the issuance of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the city of Providence, R. I. This is one of the few bills introduced in Congress which will not cost the Government anything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments offered by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 6, after the word "pieces", it is proposed to insert "and in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the city of Providence, R. I., there shall be coined by the Director of the Mint 50,000 silver 50-cent pieces, in each case such coins to be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2 it is proposed to strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive, and to insert:

SEC. 2. Coins commemorating the founding of the city of Hudson, N. Y., shall be issued at par, and only upon the request of the committee, person, or persons duly authorized by the mayor of the city of Hudson, N. Y., and the coins commemorating the founding of the city of Providence, R. I., shall be issued at par, and only upon the request of the Providence Tercentenary Committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 7, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "authorized" down to and including the word "projects", in line 9, and to insert "in section 2, and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the commemoration of the founding of the cities of Hudson, N. Y., and Providence, R. I., respectively."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 20, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "they" down to and including the word "coins", in line 23, and to insert "may be requested by the committee, person or persons duly authorized by said mayor of Hudson, N. Y., in the case of coins issued in commemoration of the founding of that city, and by the Providence Tercentenary Committee in the case of coins commemorating the founding of the city of Providence, R. I., and in each case only upon payment to the United States of the face value of such coins."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Hudson, N. Y., and of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the city of Providence, R. I., respectively."

OSAGE TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2375) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of their lands sold by the United States, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $776,742.03, being the net amount received by the United States from the sale of land of the Osage Tribe of Indians in the State of Kansas under article I of the treaty of September 29, 1865 (14 Stat. L. 687), credited to the "Civilization Fund" on the books of the Treasury of the United States and used for the benefit of Indian tribes other than the Osage, said Osage Tribe of Indians referred to herein now residing in the State of Oklahoma, as found by the Court of Claims in its opinion of May 28, 1928 (66 Ct. Cl. 64), in a case known as "B–38", entitled "Osage Nation of Indians against United States of America", instituted under act of February 6, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1097).

SEC. 2. Said amount, when appropriated, shall be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Osage Tribe of Indians and distributed in accordance with the rules and regulations governing payment of moneys accruing to members of the Osage Tribe of Indians.

SEC. 3. Said appropriation shall be in full, complete, and final settlement of the claim of the Osage Tribe of Indians against the United States arising under the treaty of 1865, above cited.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of said appropriation when made, the fees and expenses of the attorneys of record, in accordance with provisions and percentages in their contract as approved by the Secretary of the Interior May 5, 1931.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill. It seems to appropriate a very large sum.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a similar bill was passed by the Senate in the last Congress, carrying the same amount, with interest. The bill went to the House of Representatives, and the House attached an amendment striking out the provision for interest; but at that time it was too late to get the bill back to the Senate and have it passed.

The theory of the bill is this: A long time ago the Government made a treaty with the Osage Indians, who at that time were wholly illiterate, non-English speaking. The treaty was made in 3 hours, and in the treaty a clause was inserted providing that certain lands of the Osages should be sold, and the proceeds taken for a "civilization fund" to be expended among Indians residing within the United States. The Indians did not have any words in their language which meant "civilization" or "fund", so, apparently, they had no conception of what those words meant. After the land was sold the Government took the money and spent it among the other tribes, and the Osages got only $189. When the Osages learned what "civilization" meant and what "fund" meant, their money was gone; so they presented a claim, and the claim was approved by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and has always been approved by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The Budget Bureau report that the bill is in conflict with their program. Of course all appropriations now are in conflict with their program.

That is a statement of the purpose of the bill. The Osages not having received the money, and the land having been theirs, they are convinced that this money should be appropriated for their benefit.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1504) authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] a question in regard to this bill. I observe that the statute of limitations is waived. The bill is not very clear as to the issues involved and the possible liability of the Government.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask to have the bill go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION AGAINST SOIL EROSION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7054) to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I state to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], who reported this bill, that a number of appeals have been made to me during the past 2 or 3 days—whether they have any merit or not I cannot say—that the bill ought to go over, for the reason that under the $5,000,000,000 appropriation measure which was passed a few days ago there will probably be considerable funds allotted for this particular purpose, and an organization under Mr. Bennett is now functioning, although I do not know the extent of its activities.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, before the objection is made, may I make just a brief explanation, and I believe the Senator will withhold his objection?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. It is quite true that under the work-relief law which has just been enacted a considerable fund is set up for soil-erosion-control work, but the purpose of the pending bill is to coordinate all the different branches of the Government which have been doing soil-erosion-control work in the past, the F. E. R. A., the Forestry Department, and other branches. This bill would create a new agency in the Department of Agriculture for the express purpose of coordinating all these activities, and making the funds to be expended by this particular agency applicable to the provisions of the work-relief law.

The pending bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by the Representative from New Mexico, Representative DEMPSEY. Previous to that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] and myself had introduced a bill in the Senate, and several other bills have been introduced in the Senate and in the House all having the same general purpose.

We have conferred with Director Bennett, the Secretary of Agriculture, and all the department heads interested. A subcommittee composed of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MCGILL], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER], and myself held quite extensive hearings on the bill, and we think it is very desirable to have the bill enacted as soon as possible in order that the organization may be set up and the work be coordinated and that duplication of efforts may be avoided in this very important work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, one of the objections which has been urged to the bill, and it is one which appeals to me, is that it would place this activity in the hands of the Department of Agriculture, rather than in the Department of the Interior. As the Senator knows, there are millions of acres, perhaps nearly 200,000,000 acres, of public land under the control of the Department of the Interior. Some of us have a great deal of confidence in Mr. Ickes; I have, and I should be pleased if his Department had control of this enterprise.

Mr. HATCH. The activity has already been turned over to the Department of Agriculture by Executive order.

Mr. KING. I regard it as a mistake to take away from the Department of the Interior control over the public domain.

Mr. HATCH. The transfer has already been made.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, surveys relating to soil erosion, it seems to me, clearly belong within the Department of Agriculture. I think an analysis of the work to be done would justify that conclusion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I dislike to disagree with the Senator from Arkansas, but with respect to the public domain, instead of a dual control of lands under the public domain, where titles are to be granted and surveys are to be made, there should be some one jurisdiction over such domain, and I doubt the wisdom of placing the public lands under the control of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seems to me the whole problem can better be handled by one department than by two.

Mr. HATCH. All the departments interested, as I have explained, have been consulted. The bill does not change the situation at all. It does create an agency in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. I shall withhold the objection, with the understanding and with the agreement that if upon further examination this afternoon and tomorrow I desire to move to reconsider, the Senator will join in granting the motion, and having the bill restored to the calendar.

Mr. HATCH. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. KING. And that the House of Representatives shall not be notified in the meantime of the affirmative action of the Senate on the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I agree.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "provide", to insert the word "permanently", and on line 11, after the word "protect", to insert the words "public health", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby recognized that the wastage of soil and moisture resources on farm, grazing, and forest lands of the Nation, resulting from soil erosion, is a menace to the national welfare, and that it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to provide permanently for the control and prevention of soil erosion and thereby to preserve natural resources, control floods, prevent impairment of reservoirs, and maintain the navigability of rivers and harbors, protect public health, public lands, and relieve unemployment, and the Secretary of Agriculture, from now on, shall coordinate and direct all activities with relation to soil erosion, and in order to effectuate this policy is hereby authorized, from time to time.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 3, on page 3, line 8, after the word "enactment", to strike out the word "and" and to insert the words "of reasonable safeguards for the", and after the word "of", on line 9, to insert the words "State and", so as to read:

SEC. 3. As a condition to the extending of any benefits under this act to any lands not owned or controlled by the United States or any of its agencies, the Secretary of Agriculture may, insofar as he may deem necessary for the purposes of this act, require—

(1) The enactment of reasonable safeguards for the enforcement of State and local laws imposing suitable permanent restrictions on the use of such lands and otherwise providing for the prevention of soil erosion.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to propose a change in the committee amendment. On line 8 the word "of" in the committee amendment is not correct, and the word "and" should be inserted in place thereof.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 4, on page 3, line 23, after the word "except", to strike out the words "that employees of the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion may be continued without regard to the civil-service laws or regulation and the classification act for a period not to exceed 4 months from the date of this enactment", and to insert in lieu thereof the words "for a period not to exceed 8 months from the date of this enactment, the Secretary of Agriculture may make appointments and may continue employees of the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion, without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations and the classification act, as amended"; on line 12, after the word "technical", to strike out the words "and expert" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "or practical"; on line 13, after the word "knowledge", to strike out the words "connected with any educational or research institution"; on line 14, after the word "be", to strike out the word "jointly"; on line 15, after the word "act", to strike out the words "and by such institution"; on line 23, after the word "act", to strike out the words "and any violation of any such regulation shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $100", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture may—

(1) Secure the cooperation of any governmental agency;

(2) Subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary, except for a period not to exceed 8 months from the date of this enactment, the Secretary of Agriculture may make appointments and may continue employees of the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion, without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations and the Classification Act, as amended; and any persons with technical or practical knowledge, may be employed and compensated under this act on a basis to be determined by the Civil Service Commission; and

(3) Make expenditures for personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the purchase of law books and books of reference, for printing and binding, for the purchase, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, and perform such acts, and prescribe such regulations, as he may deem proper to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, in section 5, on page 4, line 26, after the word "agency", to insert the words "to be known as the Soil Conservation Service", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. The Secretary of Agriculture shall establish an agency to be known as the "Soil Conservation Service", to exercise the powers conferred on him by this act and may utilize the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of sections 202 and 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion, together with such personnel thereof as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, and all unexpended balances of funds heretofore allotted to said organization shall be available until June 30, 1937, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall assume all obligations incurred by said organization prior to transfer to the Department of Agriculture. Funds provided in House Joint Resolution 117, "An act making appropriation for relief purposes" (for soil erosion) shall be available for expenditure under the provisions of this act; and in order that there may be proper coordination of erosion-control activities the Secretary of Agriculture may transfer to the agency created under this act such functions, funds, personnel, and property of other agencies in the Department of Agriculture as he may from time to time determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed by unanimous consent that the bill shall not be sent to the House of Representatives until after tomorrow, so that a motion may be made for reconsideration if any Senator shall desire to make such a motion.

SETTING ASIDE RICE LAKE FOR CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The bill (S. 2532) to amend an act entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota", approved June 23, 1926, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act setting aside Rice Lake and contiguous lands in Minnesota for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota", approved June 23, 1926 (44 Stat. L. 763), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That there be, and is hereby, created within the county of Clearwater, State of Minnesota, a permanent reserve to be known as 'Wild Rice Lake Indian Reserve', which reserve shall include Rice Lake and the following-described contiguous lands: Beginning at the northwest corner of the northeast quarter southeast quarter section 8, township 145 north, range 38 west, and running due east to the northeast corner of southeast quarter section 9; thence south to northeast corner of northeast quarter section 16; thence due east to northeast corner of northeast quarter section 14, township 145 north, range 38 west; thence due south to southeast corner of northeast quarter section 2, township 144 north, range 38 west; thence due west to southwest corner of northwest quarter section 3 of said township and range; thence due north to southwest corner of northwest quarter section 15, township 145 north, range 38 west; thence due west to southwest corner of northwest quarter section 16; thence due north to northwest corner of northwest quarter said section 16; thence west to southwest corner of southeast quarter southeast quarter section 8; thence north to point of beginning, which, excluding the lake bed, contains approximately 4,500 acres.

"SEC. 2. All unallotted and undisposed-of public or Indian lands held in trust by the United States within the area described in section 1 hereof are hereby permanently withdrawn from sale or other disposition and are made a part of said reserve; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to (a) accept in the name of the United States voluntary conditional grants, conditioned only upon the continued permanent use of said lands for the purpose hereinafter stated, and none other, of any lands within said reserved area now held in public, private, State, or Indian ownership; (b) acquire by purchase any of said lands not so conditionally granted at such price as he may deem fair and equitable; or (c) acquire by condemnation any of said lands not acquired by conditional grants or by purchase, so as to vest in the United States for the purposes of this act good title to all land included in any such reserve.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to establish not to exceed three additional wild-rice reserves in the State of Minnesota, which shall include wild-rice-bearing lakes situated convenient to Chippewa Indian communities or settlements, including all lands which, in the judgment of said Secretary, are necessary to the proper establishment and maintenance of said reserves and the control of the water levels of the lakes. The Secretary is authorized to withdraw and acquire, on the same terms provided in section 2 hereof, all lands which, in his judgment, may be necessary for the proper establishment, control, maintenance, and operation of any reserve established under this section.

"SEC. 4. Any reserves established under this act, including the water levels therein, shall be maintained and operated under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Interior, in conformity with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, for the primary purpose of conserving wild-rice beds for the exclusive use and benefit of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota. The said Secretary, upon such terms and conditions as he may deem proper, may enter into an agreement in writing with the State of Minnesota, through its department of conservation, or other proper State agency, for the administration of any reserve created under this act, and for its use for other or different purposes, conditioned only that such other and different uses shall not impair the primary purpose for which said reserve was created and its administration in strict conformity with said rules and regulations prescribed by said Secretary.

"SEC. 5. All costs of establishing the reserves herein authorized, including the acquisition of the lands and the construction of dams or other structures to regulate the water levels, are hereby authorized to be paid by the Secretary of the Interior out of the trust funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota in the Treasury of the United States."

INCLUSION OF HOPS AS A BASIC AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 626) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include hops as a basic agricultural commodity, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding after the word "rice" a comma and the word "hops."

Mr. KING. I ask that this bill go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for the present, at least.

Mr. KING. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. The production of hops is a major horticultural industry in the far West. Hops are grown in Oregon, Washington, and California, and have a very strong appeal to those who are poor and are able to harvest the crop.

I introduced this bill after very many conferences with the hop growers in the West during the last summer and fall. I think I may say that practically 100 percent of the growers of hops are pledged to this measure, and realize that its enactment is vital to the industry.

The bill went before the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and received approval after a very exhaustive study. It received a favorable report from the Director of the Budget, and the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I do not often urge an amendment of the act in the face of opposition, but the hop crop is ready now for cultivation and culture. Spraying time has come, training time has arrived, and if there is to be control of this commodity, the bill should be passed at once.

I have been a loyal supporter of the A. A. A. and of designating any commodity as a basic commodity. It has generally been understood that if the growers of a commodity wanted to come within the provisions of the act, they should have that opportunity, and I plead in behalf of the growers of this commodity, who must have this proposed legislation enacted at once, or there will be a very great loss in carrying on the industry. I have heard of no opposition to the bill. Every report has been favorable, and inasmuch as it is vital that action should be taken, I appeal to the Senator from Utah to allow the bill to be considered at this time. I cannot imagine that anyone in his State would object to it. Hops is a western product. It is a horticultural commodity which affects the women and children in the States where it is grown. It is important and imperative that quick action be taken, and I ask the Senator at this time to permit the measure to be considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, primarily I object to this bill because I do not regard it as properly within the functions of the Federal Government. I think many of the activities of the Agricultural Department denominating certain agricultural commodities as basic have been great mistakes, and that great harm has resulted.

I have received two letters in regard to this measure. I have not them with me, but I will say to the Senator that I have no personal interest in the matter, and I will withdraw the objection if we may have an understanding that upon examining the letters again by tomorrow morning, if I find that I should insist upon the objection, the Senator will be willing that the bill may be restored to the calendar. Then I will have no objection to taking it up at an early date.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator means that he will allow action to be taken on the measure today, and then that there may be a motion to reconsider tomorrow if he desires to object?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is agreed that the clerk will not send the bill to the House of Representatives until after tomorrow, so that if objection shall be made, there may be reconsideration.

Mr. McNARY. I thought definite action was taken; but if the Senator persists in his objection tomorrow, the bill will be restored to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has already been passed.

MYSTIC SHRINE CONVENTION IN THE DISTRICT

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) authorizing the appropriation of funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia June 8, 1935, to June 17, 1935, both inclusive, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, payable wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia, to enable the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to maintain public order and protect life and property in the District of Columbia from the 8th day of June 1935 to the 17th day of June 1935, both inclusive, including the employment of personal services, the payment of allowances, traveling expenses, hire of means of transportation, and other incidental expenses in the discretion of the said Commissioners. There is hereby further authorized to be appropriated the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable as aforesaid, for the construction, rent maintenance, and for incidental expenses in connection with the operation of temporary public-convenience stations, first-aid stations, and information booths, including the employment of personal services in connection therewith during such period.

STABILIZATION OF BITUMINOUS COAL-MINING INDUSTRY

The bill (S. 2481) to stabilize the bituminous coal-mining industry and promote its interstate commerce; to provide for cooperative marketing of bituminous coal; to levy a tax on bituminous coal and provide for a drawback under certain conditions; to declare the production, distribution, and use of bituminous coal to be affected with a national public interest; to conserve the bituminous-coal resources of the United States and to establish a national bituminous-coal reserve; to provide for the general welfare; and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate bill 2481, together with the printed hearings held by the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER subsequently said: Mr. President, with reference to Senate bill 2481, introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], I understand a motion was agreed to, referring it to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, that is true. That is where it should have been referred when it was originally introduced.

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot agree with the Senator. Similar bills have been introduced at previous sessions and have always been referred to and hearings had upon them by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will pardon me, the last investigation, during which there were most extensive hearings, contained in some three volumes, amounting to 4,000 pages, was held by the Committee on Mines and Mining year before last.

Mr. WHEELER. That may be true with regard to year before last; but before that time similar bills were before the Congress, and hearings on the bills were had before the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LOGAN. This bill refers exclusively to mining, the largest industry we have; and if there is any bill which should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining, this is the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am not interested in that. At the moment I am interested only in the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] is not on the floor. He is interested in the bill. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], who presided at the hearings on this bill, is not present on the floor at this moment. It is not fair that a bill in which they have taken such interest, and which is on the calendar, should be sent to some other committee in their absence.

I ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will not wait until the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from West Virginia are on the floor, so that they may be heard?

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator from Montana will agree to have them on the floor when this bill comes up, I have no objection to that. However, I do not think it is unfair to make a motion to refer such a bill to the Committee on Mines and Mining for consideration simply because the author of the bill, or some Senator who is interested in the bill, is not here to look after it.

I do not have the slightest objection to waiting until the measure may be taken up when the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from West Virginia are here; but I assert that I shall most earnestly urge the adoption of my motion. The Committee on Interstate Commerce has held hearings on this bill, but the Committee on Mines and Mining has the right to consider it before there shall be a final report or final consideration of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no interest whatsoever in the bill. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and at his request came to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I was requested to appoint a subcommittee. I did appoint a subcommittee, of which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] was chairman, which held hearings on the bill for something like a month, heard coal operators, heard miners, heard everyone interested in the bill who appeared. Even night sessions were held. In view of the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania is so much interested in the bill, as is also the Senator from West Virginia, I feel it is not quite fair that the bill be taken up and summarily sent to another committee in their absence.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is my information that the order to refer the bill to the Committee on Mines and Mining has been entered by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. If that be true, it would be necessary to reconsider the vote by which that action was taken.

Mr. LOGAN. It is perfectly agreeable to me that that be done. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was ordered referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining be reconsidered, and that the bill may stand on the calendar; and at some other time I shall make a motion to refer it to the Committee on Mines and Mining for consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator for taking that action.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, on the question of propriety of taking that action, I think it ought to be said to the Senator from Kentucky that the bill was reached regularly on the calendar, and when a bill is before the Senate it is subject to any action which the Senate may see fit to take; and it is not the fault of Members who are present that other Members, who are absent and ought to be present, are not in the Chamber to be heard.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator from Texas for his statement, because it is true. The bill was regularly reached on the calendar. It would have been unfair to call it out of order, but that was not done by the Senator from Kentucky. It was reached in its regular order. However, I am sorry I left the impression upon anyone that what I asked to have done was unfair.

Mr. CONNALLY. When a bill is reached in its regular order, it can be objected to and passed over without referring the matter to anyone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks that the vote by which the Senate bill 2481 was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill will be restored to the calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. And I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At the request of the Senator from Kentucky, the bill will be passed over.

BERYL M. M'HAM

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1578) for the relief of Beryl M. McHam, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Beryl M. McHam, who served in Company C, Twenty-sixth Regiment, and Company C, Eighth Regiment, United States Infantry, World War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 7th day of July 1920: Provided, That no pay, compensation, benefit, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] if this bill is similar to the one which was vetoed by the President last year?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes, Mr. President; but the bill has been modified by the committee so as to conform to the veto.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT A. WATSON

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 373) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim of Robert A. Watson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "Justice", to strike out the comma and the words "and for interest upon the amount of such damages at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the date of such importation to the date of the final judgment of the Court of Claims pursuant to this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask if that bill has not been before the Senate and rejected on a number of occasions? Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

HENRY HILBUN

The bill (S. 2252) for the relief of Henry Hilbun was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding there is no official record of his enlistment, appointment, or service in the United States Army, Henry Hilbun, of Laurel, Miss., who, while in France, voluntarily reported to the regimental commander, Three Hundred and Sixteenth Regiment United States Engineers, in July 1918, and requested training; who was accepted and attached by order of the regimental commander to a company of the Three Hundred and Sixteenth Regiment, United States Engineers, for such training; and who, while so attached, actively participated in the St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives and was wounded in action, shall be considered to have served as a member of the United States Army and to have been honorably discharged therefrom on October 10, 1918: Provided, That this act shall confer no rights, past or future, to bounty, compensation, pay, pension, or allowance.

SCHOOL FACILITIES AT QUEETS, WASH.

The bill (S. 1534) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Queets, Wash., in the construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the village of Queets, Jefferson County, Wash., was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of district no. 20, Jefferson County, Wash., for the construction, extension, and betterment of a public-school building at Queets, Wash.: Provided, That the expenditure of any money so appropriated shall be subject to the express conditions that the school maintained by the said school district in the said building shall be available to all Indian children of the village of Queets and Jefferson County, Wash., on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That such expenditures shall be subject to such further conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES IN OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 2148) to provide for the leasing of restricted Indian lands of Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after 30 days from the date of approval of this act the restricted lands belonging to Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma of one-half or more Indian blood, enrolled or unenrolled, may be leased for periods of not to exceed 5 years for farming and grazing purposes, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe and not otherwise. Such leases shall be made by the owner or owners of such lands, if adults, subject to approval by the superintendent or other official in charge of the Five Civilized Tribes Agency, and by such superintendent or other official in charge of said agency in cases of minors and of Indians who are non compos mentis.

OSAGE INDIAN DRUG AND LIQUOR ADDICTS

The bill (S. 2214) conferring jurisdiction on United States district courts over Osage Indian drug and liquor addicts was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the superintendent of the Osage Tribe of Indians shall become satisfied that any person of Osage Indian blood is an habitual drunkard, or an habitual user of narcotics, then it shall be the duty of such superintendent to file a complaint in the United States district court in the district in which such Osage Indian may reside, charging said Indian with being an habitual drunkard from the use of intoxicating liquors, or an habitual user of narcotics; and if the court, after at least 5 days' notice to the person so complained against, shall find that such Indian is an habitual drunkard from the use of intoxicating liquors or an habitual user of narcotics, it shall order that such Indian be committed to some Government institution designated by the court where treatment is given for habitual drunkards, or habitual users of narcotics; and said court shall order and direct that such Indian remain in such institution until the proper authorities thereof shall be of the opinion that he or she is sufficiently recovered from the use of alcoholic liquors, or narcotics, to be able to refrain from the use of such intoxicating liquors or narcotics. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the district courts of the United States to hear and determine such cases, and the judgment of such courts thereon shall be final. The court shall hear and determine said actions without a jury. It shall be the duty of the United States district attorney in the district where such cases are filed to prosecute the same.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall sell, trade to, or dispose of any intoxicating liquors or narcotic drugs to any Osage Indian who has been committed as provided in section 1 above shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment in the United States penitentiary for a term of not less than 1 year nor more than 5 years, and shall pay a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, and such person shall not be eligible to a parole unless said fine is paid, and then only under such rules and regulations as are provided by the Department of Justice of the United States.

OSAGE INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2482) relating to the tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this appears to be a rather important bill. What are the purpose and effect of it?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill was drawn by the Bureau of Indian Affairs after consultation and agreement with the tribal council of the Osage Indian Tribe. The main point in the bill relates to the payment to the Indians of the income on their oil leases. At the present time they are restricted to their income from such leases. This bill provides that if an Indian has as much as $10,000 surplus funds on deposit with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and if his income is less than $1,000 a quarter, the Bureau of Indian Affairs is authorized to take from his surplus an amount sufficient to make up $1,000 per quarter and pay it to the Indian.

That is the most important provision of the bill. The remainder of the bill simply provides for a little change in their business affairs. The bill was drawn, as I stated, to conform to the wishes of the Osage Indian Tribe, and has the recommendation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be paid to each adult member of the Osage Tribe of Indians not having a certificate of competency or his or her pro rata share, either as a member of the tribe or heir or devisee of a deceased member, of the interest on trust funds, the bonus received from the sale of oil or gas leases, and the royalties therefrom received during each fiscal quarter, not to exceed $1,000 per quarter, and if such adult member has a legal guardian, his current income not to exceed $1,000 per quarter may be paid to such legal guardian in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That when an adult restricted Indian has surplus funds in excess of $10,000 there shall be paid such Indian sufficient funds from his accumulated surplus in addition to his current income to aggregate $1,000 quarterly; and in event any adult restricted Indian has surplus funds of $10,000 or less, such Indian shall receive quarterly only his current income not to exceed $1,000 per quarter: And provided further, That upon application and consent of any restricted Osage Indian the Secretary of the Interior may cause payment to be made of additional funds from the accumulated surplus to the credit of any Osage Indian under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Whenever minor members of the Osage Tribe of Indians have funds or property subject to the control or supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, the said Secretary may in his discretion pay or cause to be paid to the parents, legal guardian, or any person, school, or institution having actual custody of such minors, such amounts out of the income or funds of the said minors as he deems necessary, and when such a minor is 18 years of age or over the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, cause disbursement of funds for support and maintenance or other specific purposes to be made direct to such minor. The payments above provided shall be subject to such control and supervision as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem proper. Rentals due such adult members from their lands and their minor children's lands and all income from such adults' investments, including interest on deposits to their credit, shall be paid to them in addition to their current allowances above provided.

SEC. 2. That that part of section 1 of an act of Congress of February 27, 1925 (43 Stat. L. 1008), providing that—

"The Secretary of the Interior shall invest the remainder, after paying the taxes of such members, in United States bonds, Oklahoma State bonds, real estate, first-mortgage real-estate loans not to exceed 50 percent of the appraised value of such real estate, and where the member is a resident of Oklahoma, such investment shall be in loans on Oklahoma real estate, stock in Oklahoma building and loan associations, livestock, or deposit the same in banks in Oklahoma, or expend the same for the benefit of such member, such expenditures, investments, and deposits to be made under such restrictions, rules, and regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall not make any investment for an adult member without first securing the approval of such member of such investment."

be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter the Secretary of the Interior in his official capacity may invest the accumulated funds to the credit of restricted members of the Osage Tribe, after paying taxes of such members, in United States bonds or other bonds guaranteed by the United States Government as to principal and interest. With the consent of adult Indians the Secretary of the Interior may purchase real estate and livestock, such expenditures and investments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe."

SEC. 3. That part of section 17 of the act of May 25, 1918 (40 Stat. L. 561–579), which provides for the change of designation of homestead allotments of Osage Indians to an equal area of their unencumbered surplus is hereby amended to read as follows: "That any and all members of the Osage Tribe may change the present designation of their respective homesteads to an equal area of their unencumbered surplus lands in Osage County, upon application to and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and the members of the tribe whose balances at the Osage Indian Agency are insufficient for the payment of taxes on taxable lands may in the same manner change the present designation of their respective homesteads to an equal area of the unencumbered inherited, purchased, or otherwise acquired lands in Osage County: Provided, That each tract after the change and designation shall take the status of the other as it existed prior to the change in designation, as to alienation, taxation, or otherwise, and that any order of change of designation shall be recorded in the proper office of Osage County."

SEC. 4. That section 3 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. L. 1478) is hereby repealed.

SEC. 5. That no administrator or executor of an estate of an Osage Indian of half or more Indian blood or who does not have a certificate of competency at date of death, shall be appointed except on the written application or approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 6. That section 5 of an act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. 1249), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the State of Oklahoma is authorized from and after the passage of this act to levy and collect a gross production tax upon all oil and gas produced in Osage County, Okla., and all taxes so collected shall be paid and distributed, and in lieu of all other State and county taxes levied upon the production of oil and gas as provided by the laws of Oklahoma, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, through the proper offices of the Osage Agency, to the State of Oklahoma, from the amount received by the Osage Tribe of Indians as royalties from production of oil and gas, the percent levied as gross production tax, to be distributed as provided by the laws of Oklahoma."

CONSOLIDATED HIGH SCHOOL, SHANNON COUNTY, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 1537) to provide funds for cooperation with the school board of Shannon County, S. Dak., in the construction of a consolidated high-school building to be available to both white and Indian children was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the public-school board of Shannon County, S. Dak., for the construction and equipment of a consolidated public high-school building at Pine Ridge, S. Dak.: Provided, That such school shall be conducted for both white and Indian children without discrimination, and that practical training for vocations and home economics be provided, and that the cost of education of white children shall be defrayed by the State and local public-school authorities, in accordance with such agreement or agreements as may be made between the Secretary of the Interior and State or local officials, and any and all sums of money obtained by reason of such agreement or agreements shall be available for reexpenditure for support and maintenance of said school.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2265) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional officers of the Regular Establishment who served during the World War, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

LAND IN SOUTH CAROLINA

The bill (S. 1610) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States a certain strip of land from the State of South Carolina was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States title in fee simple to a certain strip of land and the construction of a bridge across Archers Creek in South Carolina", approved February 14, 1927, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States, free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States, for military purposes, the title to the following-described parcel of land, to be used for a road from Jericho Point to the Marine Corps Reservation on Parris Island, S. C.: Starting at a point on the north bank of Archers Creek, north 64°29′ west, 6,563 feet from monument no. 31 at the marine barracks, Parris Island, S. C., thence north 13°40′ west, 4,605 feet to a point at the mean high-water line near Jericho Point; thence north, 87°39′ east, 204 feet to a point also at the mean high-water line near Jericho Point; thence south, 13°40′ east, 4,565 feet to a point on the north bank of Archers Creek; thence south 76°20′ west, 200 feet to the point of beginning: Provided, however, That the acceptance of such tract of land by the Secretary is made upon the express condition and limitation that such tract shall be used only for military purposes, and when it shall cease to be actually used for military purposes the title and right of possession shall immediately revert to the State of South Carolina without notice, demand, or action brought."

PUERTO RICAN HURRICANE RELIEF COMMISSION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) to abolish the Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission and transfer its functions to the Secretary of the Interior was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission, created by joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rica", approved December 21, 1928, is hereby abolished and all of the functions of the said Commission, together with its employees, records, supplies, equipment, and property of every kind, and unexpended balances of appropriations are hereby transferred to the Division of Territories and Island Possessions, Department of the Interior, to be administered under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That personnel now temporarily assigned to the Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief Commission from the War Department and from the Department of Agriculture shall, without in any way affecting their permanent status in such Departments, continue to serve in their present capacity, but under supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, until June 30, 1935, unless sooner relieved by the Secretary of the Interior, and that the length of such service shall not be continued beyond June 30, 1935, except by special agreement between the Secretary of the Interior and the heads of the other Departments concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar having been completed, the Chair, under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, lays before the Senate, Senate bill 1629.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1629) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by motor carriers operating in interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with amendments.

Mr. WHEELER obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this is a very important bill. I understand the Senator from Montana [Mr.

WHEELER] expects now to explain its provisions. I ask if he will yield in order that I may suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the Chair). Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, in taking up the consideration of Senate bill 1629, for the regulation of trucks and busses, I wish to state that I introduced the bill at the request of the Interstate Commerce Commission or, more particularly, at the request of the coordinator (Mr. Eastman). The bill came before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate, where hearings were held on it for something like 2 weeks, and everyone who had a desire to be heard was heard. Meetings were held every morning, and sometimes in the afternoon.

This bill, in one form or another, has been before the Congress of the United States for 6 or 8 years. On one occasion a bill to regulate busses and trucks passed the House of Representatives, came over to the Senate, and was reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with provisions confining its operations to busses. As I recall, it was directed to be sent back to the Committee on Interstate Commerce by the Senate, for the reason that it did not include provisions for the regulation of trucks. It has been before the Interstate Commerce Committee for elaborate hearings on several occasions.

This particular bill, introduced by me and reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments, has the endorsement of the American Trucking Associations, Inc.; it has the endorsement of many of the shippers; it has the endorsement of the Interstate Commerce Commission; and, in most particulars, it has the endorsement of practically all the State commissions throughout the country. I make that statement, however, with the reservation that in one or two minor details they have suggested that amendments be made, but, generally speaking, the truck industry and all the bus industry of the United States have endorsed the provisions of the bill.

It provides for the regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of common carriers by motor vehicle, contract carriers by motor vehicle, brokers, and private carriers of property by motor vehicle insofar as qualifications, maximum hours of service of employees, and safety of operation and equipment are concerned. This provision, however, is only operative after investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission and if the need is found for such regulation.

Wholly exempted from the bill are school busses solely transporting children and teachers to or from schools, and likewise exempted from the bill are taxicabs, hotel busses, busses in national parks and national monuments, and trolley busses. Furthermore, an exemption is made, unless the Interstate Commerce Commission finds that the law cannot be made to work without its inclusion to some extent, of the transportation of property locally or between contiguous municipalities or commercial zones, as between New York City and New Jersey, and also, for instance, as between Washington and Alexandria, and other contiguous cities where the transportation is regulated by the local governments themselves.

Transportation of passengers in similar localities or zones, provided the several States having jurisdiction regulate the operation, is also exempted and also casual or occasional or reciprocal transportation. In other words, we have exempted from the provisions of this bill the casual or the occasional person who engages in transportation for others, such as the farmer who may take his neighbors' products to market from their farms.

Common carriers must obtain certificates of public convenience and necessity; but all those operating in 1934 are blanketed in under what is known as the "grandfather clause."

All others operating when the act becomes effective can, if they file applications within 120 days, operate until ordered to stop.

Contract carriers must obtain a permit to do a contract business, but all operating in 1934 are blanketed in under the so-called "grandfather clause", and all others operating when the law takes effect have 120 days in which to apply and may continue until ordered to stop by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

All brokers must obtain licenses, but those in business when the act becomes effective have 120 days in which to apply and may continue until ordered to cease.

I am going now to analyze the principal provisions of the bill. The bill amends the Interstate Commerce Act and is designated as part II thereof. A companion bill, which is known as "Senate bill 1632", providing for the regulation of water carriers in domestic and foreign commerce, was originally designated as part II, but owing to the fact that the pending bill was reached first in the executive sessions of the committee, it has been renumbered part II, and all section numbers correspondingly changed.

I might say for the benefit of the Senate that the Interstate Commerce Committee also held hearings on Senate bill 1632, known as the "water carriers' bill", but that bill has not yet been reported out of the committee. I may say, however, that I am hopeful that we may secure action upon that bill before the session shall close.

Section 202 of the pending bill has to do with the declaration of policy and the delegation of jurisdiction.

Subsection (a) contains a comprehensive declaration of policy. As amended, it makes clear that the policy of the Congress is to deal fairly and impartially with transportation by motor carriers and to preserve the natural advantages of such transportation.

There was a fear upon the part of some of the bus and truck operators at first that if they were brought under the Interstate Commerce Commission they would not be dealt fairly with, and that their rates would be raised so as to make it possible for the railroads to get the business now carried on by them, but we specifically wrote into the bill, in the declaration of policy provision, and at other places throughout the bill, that the peculiar features of transportation by truck and by bus should be taken into consideration at all times by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and we put such a provision in the declaration of policy.

The exercise of authority by the Commission under certain sections of the bill is directly related to the declaration of policy and the added provisions with respect to discrimination, preference, and unfair or destructive competitive practices lay a stronger and more definite basis for administrative action.

Paragraph (b), page 3, describes the application of the bill and invests jurisdiction in the Interstate Commerce Commission. The committee amendments broaden the statement to include the operations of brokers, which are regulated by later provisions of the bill, and of persons who as lessors of vehicles or otherwise may engage in transportation as common or contract carriers.

Paragraph (c), page 3, expresses a general policy of noninterference with regulation by the States, except to the extent that such regulation causes undue or unreasonable disadvantage or prejudice to persons or localities in interstate commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I desire to say that I am not clear in my own mind as to the distinction between common carriers and contract carriers. Will the Senator explain the difference?

Mr. WHEELER. A common carrier is one that is engaged in the transportation of goods or passengers for the benefit of the general public. A contract carrier is one who goes out and takes a special job for a special group of individuals or for a particular individual. The regulation relating to common carriers is quite different from the regulation relating to contract carriers. In other words, there is more regulation of common carriers than there is of contract carriers. I shall come to that a little later.

Paragraphs (14) and (15), page 6: The term "common carrier by motor vehicle" includes both regular and irregular route operators and embraces the motor-vehicle operations of rail, water, express, and forwarding companies, except to the extent that these operations are subject to the provisions of part I. To the definitions of both common and contract carriers the committee added language intended to check evasion of the act by bringing within its terms such transportation operations as are performed through the leasing of motor vehicles or other similar arrangements which may constitute either common or contract carriage, according to the particular nature of the arrangements. The language inserted will enable the Commission to strike through such evasions where the facts warrant it.

The bill was drafted originally by Coordinator Eastman and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which transmitted it to Congress. When it came to the committee and after the hearings, the committee took up the bill and spent every morning on it for perhaps a week and went over it in conjunction with Coordinator Eastman, and amended it and liberalized it as we felt it should be.

Paragraph 16, page 7: Attention is called to the fact that the term "motor carrier" includes common carriers and contract carriers and does not include private carriers.

Paragraph 17, page 7: The definition of "private carrier of property by motor vehicle" is transferred by the Committee from a later section and applies to persons transporting their own goods in their own vehicles for commercial purposes. The only regulation to which such carriers are subjected is that with respect to the maximum hours of service and qualifications of employees and the safety of operation and equipment—section 204 (a) (3). Such regulation is conditioned upon a finding, after investigation, of need therefor.

The reason why we put that regulation in the bill was because of the fact that in some instances, as was testified before the committee, private carriers, contract carriers, and common carriers frequently have their employees driving trucks and busses on the road for long periods of time without any effective regulation of any kind whatsoever. It seemed to us that there is really much more cause for regulating the hours of service of the truck drivers, contract, private, and otherwise, and the drivers of these great busses, than there is as a matter of fact for regulating the hours of labor on the railroads themselves. This is for the reason that when an engineer is on a railroad he has a track upon which his train runs; but a truck driver or bus driver is on the open highway, and if he should fall asleep he is not only endangering the lives of himself and his passengers, but likewise the lives of the general public.

Paragraph 18, page 7: The term "broker" was not defined in the original bill. The definition supplied is intended to cover the varied forms which brokerage operations now take. Without provision for the regulation of such operations, the act would be seriously defective.

By "brokers" we mean those persons who are engaged, for instance, in some city in going out and collecting business, and then letting the work out to various carriers, whether contract carriers or common carriers. The experience which the Michigan Commission has had, as disclosed by the testimony before the committee, has been such as to lead the Coordinator to believe that the brokers would have to be regulated and should be regulated because of the fact that otherwise they would completely break down the rate structure and everything else in the carriage of either freight or passengers.

One letter came to us stating that the brokers would solicit the business; that a common carrier or contract carrier by motor truck would come for the business and be told there was no business; that they would wait until the last minute before leaving to go home, and then would be told, "We have some business, but we cannot give it to you except at the very lowest possible rate." In that way they would beat him down in his price. The only person who would get the benefit of it would be the so-called "scalper" or broker and not the shipper.

Paragraph (19), page 7: The definition of "services" and "transportation" is intended to cover all facilities owned and used by motor carriers. The changes made by the committee remove any possibility of a construction which would include the facilities of shippers or others which the motor carriers may use for pickup or delivery of shipments.

Subsection (b): This paragraph wholly exempts from regulation, first, motor vehicles used solely in transporting school children and teachers to or from school; second, taxicabs; third, hotel busses; fourth, vehicles operated by or under the control of the Secretary of the Interior; and fifth, trolley busses.

Provision is also made that regulation shall not apply to what may be termed "intramunicipal" or "occasional" operations "unless and to the extent that the Commission shall from time to time find that such application is necessary to carry out the policy of Congress enunciated in section 202." The first of these two conditional exemptions concerns the transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce within a municipality or between contiguous municipalities or within a zone adjacent to and commercially a part of any such municipality or municipalities, except when such transportation is part of a continuous carriage or shipment to or from a point without such local area. The committee has added an outright exemption of the operations of carriers of passengers in such local areas where such carriers are also lawfully engaged in the intrastate transportation of passengers over the entire length of their interstate route or routes in accordance with the laws of each State having jurisdiction.

At the present time some are regulated by each State. For instance, as between New York and Jersey City, if they are regulated by the State of New York and by the State of New Jersey, then they are exempt from the provisions of the bill. But if there is no regulation of their operations in either State, then the commission would have the right to regulate them.

The purpose of this exemption is to avoid duplication of regulation over bus operations, such as those conducted by street railways. However, the commission is authorized to take jurisdiction, where necessary, over busses operated within a municipality or between contiguous municipalities by motor carriers in interstate service and not so regulated by the States. The absence of such regulation has in some instances created chaotic conditions beyond the control of any State or municipal body. The second conditional exemption provided in the original bill applied to the "casual or occasional transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce for compensation by any person not regularly engaged in transportation by motor vehicle as his or its principal occupation or business." This provision was intended to exempt the operations of farmers and others who occasionally haul for hire, but who do not enter in any important way into for-hire transportation. The addition of the word "reciprocal" and the other change made in this paragraph broaden the exemption in line with suggestions made at the hearings.

Some of the shippers who came before us and some of the smaller individuals thought that the language should be broadened; and in order to cover that we used the word "reciprocal", which they had suggested.

I now come to section 204, page 10, dealing with the general duties and powers of the commission.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds to that portion of the bill, I should like to call his attention to the definition of the word "highway", at the bottom of page 5. The definition is limited as follows:

The term "highway" means the roads, highways, streets, and ways in any State.

Does not this bill apply to the District of Columbia or to the Territories?

Mr. WHEELER. Above, on the same page, in (8), the Senator will notice it is provided that—

The term "State" means any of the several States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is an odd definition. This is a minor matter; but I doubt the wisdom of writing into a statute the definition of a State as incorporating the District of Columbia or the Territory of Alaska.

The word "State" has a well-defined meaning. It does not mean the District of Columbia. Every lawyer recognizes that distinction. Of course, an arbitrary definition like this can be made to include anything the legislature says it includes. How would it apply, for instance, to Alaska? Does the bill apply to Alaska?

Mr. WHEELER. No; as I understand, the bill does not take in Alaska or the Hawaiian Islands. I may say to the Senator that the War Department stated that they thought the provisions of the bill ought to include Hawaii and Alaska. As a matter of fact, I had thought of suggesting an amendment to include Alaska and Hawaii.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that there is hardly justification for giving words an arbitrary and very exceptional meaning. Why not use the words "any State or the District of Columbia"?

Mr. WHEELER. I have no pride of authorship in this bill——

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that.

Mr. WHEELER. But I assume the only reason why it was worded in this way was so that it would not be necessary to repeat "District of Columbia" all through the bill. I do not know any other reason for it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it would be better to repeat words than to give a term an arbitrary definition which is, to say the least, unusual. To say that the word "State" means "the District of Columbia" is repugnant to reason. I pass the matter over, however. I understand fully the theory upon which the definition is based.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well.

Section 204, page 10. General duties and powers of the Commission:

This section confers on the Commission general powers to establish reasonable requirements with respect to service, accounts, records, reports, hours of service of employees, safety of operation, and so forth, of motor carriers, and authorizes the Commission to conduct any necessary investigations, to make orders, rules, and regulations, and to entertain complaints. The provisions requiring special mention are as follows:

Paragraph (a) (1), (2), (3)—the committee amended paragraphs (1) and (2) to confer power on the Commission to establish reasonable requirements with respect to the qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees of common and contract carriers, thus restoring provisions that were in the Rayburn bill, introduced in the Seventy-third Congress. This suggestion came to us, I think, from the chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Suggestions were made to us by some of the labor organizations that we ought to put in the bill at this time provisions specifically limiting the hours of labor; but by reason of the fact that the Commission felt that they would like first to make a study of the matter, and then come back and report to Congress, or be given permission to establish these requirements later, we left it as the Commission suggested, giving them power to make the investigation, and, if and when they found it necessary, to put in effect such rules and regulations as they might deem necessary.

In order to make the highways more safe, and so that common and contract carriers may not be unduly prejudiced in their competition with peddler trucks and other private operators of motor trucks, a provision was added in subparagraph 3 giving the Commission authority to establish similar requirements with respect to the qualifications and hours of service of the employees of such operators. The exercise of this power with respect to the three classes of carriers is intended to be contingent upon the results of the comprehensive investigation of the need for regulation of this kind provided for in section 225. There is considerable demand for the provision of specific hours of service in the bill itself. Owing to the great variety of motor carriers' services and of conditions under which they are conducted, it appeared to the committee to be unwise to go so far at this time. The investigation referred to will permit the Commission not only to develop whether there is need for regulation, but also to establish requirements which are adapted to the special conditions surrounding the different types and conditions of operation. The original bill conferred upon the Commission power to regulate the safety of operation and equipment of common and contract carriers, and in paragraph (3) of this section like authority has been conferred respecting the safety of operation and equipment of private carriers.

Paragraph (5), page 11, authorizes the Commission to avail itself of the cooperation of any research agency of the Federal Government in conducting investigations relating to the safety of operation and equipment of motor vehicles.

(c), page 12. This paragraph is of great importance. It enables the Commission to classify carriers performing special and distinct types of service, such as the hauling of milk, livestock, furniture, petroleum products, newspapers, and so forth, and to vary the regulatory requirements as to rates, records, reports, and other matters in accordance with the nature of the service and the public need. These provisions will promote flexible administration and enable the Commission to avoid imposing unnecessary burdens. It is to the interest of carriers, shippers, and the public that this paragraph be retained.

I think that is an exceedingly important paragraph, because of the fact that the Commission may find, for instance, that persons who are engaged simply in hauling furniture need one kind of regulations or rules that may be prescribed. Another classification may be those who are engaged in hauling oil or gasoline, and a certain type of regulations may be necessary for them. This paragraph gives to the Commission the power to handle those matters.

(d), page 12. This paragraph, which provides for entertaining complaints made by any person, State board, or body politic, or for investigation on the Commission's own initiative, has been amended by the committee to give the Commission power to dismiss complaints which do not state reasonable grounds for investigation and action on its part. This addition will check the filing of complaints where the purpose is solely that of harassing or crippling motor carriers.

It was urged that some of the railroads might come in and file objections and try to harass the motor carriers. This provision was put in so that where there was not a valid reason stated the commission of its own motion might dismiss the complaint, if one person was merely seeking to harass another.

The same provision appears in section 318 of the original bill, but referred only to complaints against contract carriers. By adding the provision to paragraph (c) of this section, the power of dismissal is given general application to any complaints.

Section 205, page 14. Administration:

A basic principle of the bill is that the regulatory bodies of the several States shall share in its administration because of their intimate knowledge of local conditions, their more direct contacts with the carriers subject to regulation, and the relation of such regulation to the use of the State's highways. To that end provision is made for the primary consideration of all important matters by joint boards composed of the representatives of the States wholly or chiefly concerned.

There was some objection to this on the part of some shippers, who felt that the Interstate Commerce Commission should not cooperate in any way with the State commissions; but Coordinator Eastman and the members of the Commission themselves felt that they should cooperate with the local commissions, because practically every State at the present time has local commissions regulating busses and trucks, and they have accumulated much valuable information, and the Interstate Commerce Commission felt that by cooperating with them, and using these various bodies whenever they could, they could straighten out a great many of the details. The complaint which was made against this provision came to a large extent from one or two persons who complained that the present local commissions were dominated by the railroads, and said they did not feel that the local commissions should in any way have anything to say about interstate regulation.

However, let me point this out, that wherever these bodies make recommendations, their recommendations go into effect unless someone objects, or unless the Commission itself refuses to adopt them. That is the practice where not more than three States are involved. Where more than three States are involved, then the Commission sends its own men out to hold the investigation. But it is the judgment of Coordinator Eastman, and I think of the Commission, that, as a matter of fact, if they can get the various State commissions together for joint meetings on these matters, it will have a salutary effect upon the whole situation, and that the States will not feel that the Government is simply trying to usurp all the authorities of the State governments.

The bill contemplates submission of such matters to joint boards where the motor-carrier operation involves not more than three States and the optional use of the joint-board procedure where a greater number is involved. In order, however, to provide against unforeseen contingencies, the bill provides, in section 205 (c), that if legal proceedings should prevent reference to a joint board, the Commission may dispose of such matters as provided elsewhere in section 205.

The proposed plan of administration through such joint boards is criticized by various shippers' representatives as cumbersome and ineffective. It is urged that the States lack adequate facilities, and that it would be difficult to coordinate the action of so many joint boards, composed of a shifting personnel with a local rather than a national outlook. The joint board procedure is not essential in the regulation of motor carriers of passengers, but it most certainly is desirable and should be tried out in the case of truck operations. The work of the Commission can thereby be greatly facilitated and a wholesome tendency toward greater uniformity of State regulation will result.

I might say that I think all of the State commissions desire to have this provision in the bill, and it was upon their suggestion that the provision was included.

The fear that the boards will develop inconsistent policies appears to be unfounded, in that decisions made by them are subject to review by the Commission. One of the criticisms was that three States like Wisconsin, Minnesota, and some other State might get together and set up one policy, while three other States might set up a different one. But all of these things are subject to review by the Commission, and the Commission feels that they will all be coordinated into one uniform system.

Mr. GERRY. May I ask the Senator why the number of States was fixed at three?

Mr. WHEELER. It mentions three States. There could be 2 States or 3 States, according to my understanding of the bill, but if it exceeds 3 States, then the Commission sends out its own representatives, because it is felt that if there are more than 3 States it would be difficult, perhaps, to get them together.

It has been urged also that the constitutions of some States prohibit such cooperation with the Federal Government. If such limitations exist, they are confined to a few States, and in those instances the joint board procedure need not be followed.

Subparagraph (b), page 15, was amended by the committee to remove the approval of insurance policies, surety bonds, and so forth, from among the specific subjects of reference to the joint boards. The bill as it was introduced, as suggested by the Coordinator and the Commission, provided that the joint board should approve all insurance policies, and so forth. The committee struck that out and left it entirely up to the Commission to regulate that matter, because both the shippers and the truck people wanted that provision amended as the committee amended it. This change was made because ordinarily such matters are of a routine nature and can be handled more expeditiously by the Commission. If any necessity for reference of such matters to joint boards arise, such action may be taken under the provisions of this paragraph.

In subparagraph (c), the change in lines 19 to 21, page 17, is made to make it clear that the Commission shall prescribe rules for all joint board proceedings and not solely for joint boards created by it where the States fail to take the necessary steps.

These sections require each common carrier of passengers or property to secure a certificate of public convenience and necessity. Such certificates are to be issued on a finding by the Commission that—

> The applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service proposed and to conform to the provisions of this part and the requirements, rules, and regulations of the Commission thereunder, and that the proposed service, to the extent to be authorized by the certificate, is or will be required by the present or future public convenience and necessity.

This is a provision which is in practically every State law at the present time. There was some objection to it, and a suggestion was made that we should not use the word "future" in connection with "public convenience and necessity", and that we should not use the words "public convenience and necessity." But those words have been adopted by almost every State in the Union where there is a law, they have been interpreted by the courts, and the committee felt that while perhaps some other language might have been just as appropriate, nevertheless, that language having been construed by the courts, it would be unwise for the committee to write some other language in the law which would have to be passed upon by the courts.

All persons furnishing a common-carrier service in 1934 are given certificates as a matter of right on a showing of bona fide operation and submission of an application within 120 days after this section takes effect. Originally the bill required application within 60 days, but a longer period seems appropriate from the viewpoint of both the Commission and the operators. The committee has added a provision that "if such carrier was registered in 1934 under any code of fair competition requiring registration, the fact of registration shall be evidence of bona fide operation to be considered in connection with the issuance of such certificate." This addition was made to facilitate the process of initial registration under the "grandfather clause."

In lines 6 and 8, page 23, the words "continuously" and "continuous" have been omitted in view of the objection that operators who have temporarily ceased operations for reasons beyond their control may be deprived of the benefits of the grandfather clause. For a similar reason the words "in either instance" have been added in lines 9 and 10 of page 23. Where a common carrier is engaged in interstate transportation but conducts his operations solely within a State and holds a certificate from that State, he is not required to apply for a Federal certificate but is otherwise subject to Federal regulation.

The omission in lines 11 and 12, page 24, is made merely to get rid of an unnecessary restriction. In order to protect operators who began business subsequent to the close of 1934 the committee has added a provision in section 206 (b) which permits such operators to continue their operations for a period of 120 days without a certificate and if they apply for a certificate within that period they may continue to operate until a contrary order is made. This is for the purpose of giving anybody who started, for instance, in the year 1935 a period of 120 days in which to file his application, and then until such time as his application was passed on he could continue to operate.

Section 208 (a), page 26, as amended, permits the Commission to attach to all certificates, whether granted under the grandfather clause or otherwise, reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations. In order to meet criticisms that the effect of these provisions would be to check the natural growth of operations if every increase in facilities required authorization by the Commission, the committee has amended section 208 (a) by striking out lines 14 to 16, page 26, and by adding a proviso which permits operators to add to their equipment and facilities as business conditions may require, provided they do not go beyond the route or routes or outside the territory specified in their certificate. There was objection to the provision as it came in by a great many, so the committee amended it to meet the objection.

Paragraph 208 (d), page 27, has been changed to permit bus lines to transport baggage of passengers in separate vehicles, a practice which is sometimes necessary, particularly in connection with charter operations. The Commission is authorized, but not required, to permit bus operators to carry in the same vehicle passengers, newspapers, baggage, express, or mail.

Section 209: Permits for contract carriers by motor vehicle.

Permits are to be issued to contract carriers under substantially the same conditions as certificates are issued to common carriers, except that the granting of a permit, not covered by the grandfather clause, is not made conditional on a showing of public convenience and necessity. In other words, contract carriers in their applications do not have to make a showing of public convenience and necessity.

Applicants are required to show, among other things, however, that the proposed operation, to the extent authorized by the permit, will be consistent with the public interest and the policy declared in section 202 (a). This section has been changed in lines 19–22, page 27, to make clear that the bill applies to the business of contract carriers and not merely to particular operations under the individual contracts.

Section 210, page 30. Dual operation: This section prohibits any person from holding at the same time a common carrier certificate and contract carrier permit, unless for good cause shown the Commission finds that both may be held consistently with the public interest and with the policy declared in section 202 (a). There are instances in which both types of operation can advantageously be conducted by the same operator and without prejudice to the public interest, but the possibility of abuses developing makes it advisable to give the Commission the power to pass on all cases in which it is proposed to combine the two types of operation.

Section 211, page 31. Brokerage license: This section is intended to give the Commission necessary authority to cope with the conditions which have been created by the rise of so-called "brokerage operations." These operations are of many different types. Some are beneficial and others are conducted in a manner which has seriously demoralized the trucking business and to a lesser extent the transportation of passengers. The unreliable broker, acting as an intermediary between shipper or traveler and carrier, frequently resorts to unfair practices which exploit both the carriers employed by the brokers and the shipping or traveling public and employees of the carriers. It is believed that many of the evils of long hours, unsafe operation, and low earnings of motor carriers are attributable to this type of broker.

Paragraph (a) has been amended by the committee to make the regulations proposed more effective. This section requires the broker to obtain a license and makes it unlawful for him to employ any motor carrier that is not the lawful holder of an effective certificate or permit and authorizes the Commission to impose reasonable regulations with respect to accounts, records, and reports. The broker is also required to furnish a bond or other security approved by the Commission for purpose of insuring his financial responsibility and the carrying out of the agreements to provide transportation which he enters into.

Paragraph (b), page 32, sets up conditions for the issuance of brokerage licenses similar to those mentioned above as applying in the granting of contract carrier permits. There is no "grandfather clause" covering brokers who were in operation in 1934, but provision is made for the continuance of operations if application is made within 120 days after this section becomes effective and until the Commission makes an order requiring cessation of operations.

Section 212, page 34. Suspension, change, revocation, and transfer of certificates, permits, and licenses: This section permits the transfer of certificates and permits, subject to such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe. The terms of such certificates, permits, and licenses may be modified upon application of the holder, upon complaint, or on the Commission's initiative, and the certificate, permit, or license may be revoked, in whole or in part, for willful failure to comply with any provision of this part or with any lawful order, rule, or regulation of the Commission made thereunder.

The committee amended that so that if they made this willful failure it could only be revoked after a reasonable time was given to them and they were notified to that effect. There has been a suggestion made to me that it probably should be amended to give them at least a 3-month period in which they could comply with the order. As a matter of fact, I have no particular objection to that suggestion. Neither has the Commission any objection, in my judgment. However, the Commission feels that it is imperative that they do have the right to revoke, because it said that the experience of the State commissions has been that revocation is one of the most effective ways of getting compliance with the law and with the rules and regulations.

Criticism was directed against the power of revocation thus conferred upon the Commission. It was suggested that the effect is to put the future of countless operators wholly in the hands of the Commission, which might act arbitrarily, and that the penalties elsewhere provided are ample to secure compliance. As I just stated, practically all State laws contain similar provisions, and they have been found the most effective means of enforcing regulations. The revocation provisions in the State statutes have not operated to hamper the growth of the motor-vehicle industry. However, it is fair that operators should have warning and an opportunity to comply before any revocation occurs. The committee has therefore amended paragraph (a) to provide that the Commission shall issue an order commanding obedience to any provision of this part or to any rule or regulation of the Commission thereunder which is alleged to be violated, and that revocation shall occur only where there is failure to comply with such an order within a reasonable time.

Section 213, page 35. Consolidation, merger, and acquisition of control: At present most truck operations are small enterprises. However, there are many rumors of plans for the merging of existing operations into sizeable systems. In view of past experience with railroad and public-utility unifications, it is regarded as necessary that the Commission have control over such developments, where the number of vehicles involved is sufficient to make the matter one of more than local importance. This section, therefore, confers on the Commission jurisdiction over all consolidations, mergers, purchases, leases, operating agreements, and acquisitions of control through stock ownership where two or more motor carriers are involved or where a person other than a motor carrier undertakes to acquire control through stock ownership of two or more motor carriers, and prohibits all other forms of unification. An amendment made by the committee makes this jurisdiction applicable, except in the case of rail, express, or water carrier affiliations, only where the total number of vehicles involved is more than 20 (subpar. (e), p. 39).

In other words, we eliminated from this provision such a case, for example, as that of two small operators who might want to get together, and we made it apply only to cases where they had more than 20 vehicles, so that the small operators could get together without the necessity of going through a great deal of red tape with the Commission.

The language of paragraph (a) has been simplified without change in the intent of the original bill, except for a broadening of its scope with respect to contract carriers and operations effected by the substitution of the term "persons" for the term "corporation", as in line 11, page 36.

Carriers by rail, express, or water are permitted to consolidate or merge with motor carriers or to obtain control in any of the ways indicated above, but only on a showing that "the transaction proposed will promote the public interest and enable such a carrier other than a motor carrier to use service by motor vehicle to public advantage in its operations and will not unduly restrain competition." With this limitation, it will be possible for the Commission to allow acquisitions which will make for coordinated or more economical service and at the same time to protect the public against the monopolization of highway carriage by rail, express, or other interests.

Subparagraph (f), page 40, relieves any carrier or person receiving authorization from the Commission under this section from the operation of the antitrust laws.

Section 214, page 40. Issuance of securities: Common and contract carriers, and corporations authorized to acquire control of any such carrier, are made subject to the provisions of paragraphs (2) to (11), inclusive, of section 20 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act, where the par value of securities to be issued, together with that of the securities outstanding, does not exceed $500,000. In the original bill it was proposed to repeal the provisions of the Securities Act, 1933, insofar as that act related to such security issues. The amendment adopted by the committee accomplishes the same intent without repeal by amending section 3 of the securities act so as to exempt securities of motor carriers herein subjected to regulation.

Section 215, page 41. Security for the protection of the public: This section confers power on the Commission to prescribe reasonable rules and regulations governing the approval of bonds, insurance policies, and other surety needed for the protection of the public and the patrons of motor carriers. The changes made by the committee are intended to guard against unreasonable or unworkable requirements. They give the operators the option of self-insurance or of providing policies of insurance in lieu of bonds.

Section 216, page 42. Rates, fares, and charges of common carriers by motor vehicle: This section requires common carriers by motor vehicle to establish and maintain rates, fares, regulations, and practices which are just and reasonable and free from undue discrimination, preference, or prejudice. It authorizes the Commission, on complaint or after investigation on its own initiative, to prescribe just and reasonable maximum or minimum rates, or maximum and minimum rates, and the classification, rules, regulations, or practices thereafter to be observed.

Paragraph (a), as amended by the committee, is confined to common carriers of passengers by motor vehicle. They are required to establish reasonable through routes with other such common carriers and to establish just and reasonable rates and equitable divisions thereof. In the original bill there was a provision for mandatory through routes and joint rates between all motor common carriers and carriers by rail, express, and water. There was substantially unanimous disapproval of this provision.

However, in my judgment, it should have been done; and I think the Congress should have been asked to do it, but many of the small operators were afraid that if this were done it would give preference to the railroads, and therefore they were afraid to ask it. Hence paragraphs (b) and (c) have been introduced by the committee in order to make joint through routes and rates permissive between motor carriers of property and between motor carriers of passengers or property and other agencies of transportation. The Commission is, however, given authority to pass on the reasonableness of any joint rates so established and to adjust the divisions thereof.

Paragraph (g), page 47, gives the Commission authority upon complaint or upon its own initiative to suspend proposed changes in rates, fares, or regulations for an initial period of not to exceed 90 days, and, if necessary, in order to complete the Commission's investigation, for a further period of not to exceed 90 days. Representatives of certain shippers vigorously oppose the power of suspension on the ground that it will seriously cripple the motor carriers and enable the railroads to harrass the small operator. However, the truck operators themselves are anxious to have the protection which the suspension provision will give them against destructive competition within their own ranks. They also realize that if the power of suspension is here eliminated the railroads will, with some justice, seek to be relieved from the power of suspension when reducing rates to meet motor carrier or other competition. The suspension power here conferred is similar to that given in the present Interstate Commerce Act, except that in the latter act the suspension period is 9 months.

It has been suggested that we should not give the power to the Commission to suspend rates. The railroads have also asked, with reference to themselves, that the Commission should not have the power to suspend truck-competitive rates. If in this bill we do not give the Commission the power to suspend motor-carrier rates, it will only be a question of time until the railroads themselves will be coming in and asking the committee and the Congress to remove the power to suspend railroad rates, and if this power is removed we will have cutthroat competition among the railroads; and we will have it among the busses and trucks if we do not give the Commission the power to suspend their rates. However, the Commission has seldom exercised that power in respect to rate reductions.

It was suggested that the Commission should only suspend rate reductions if the rates were below the cost of service; but the Commission recently pointed out that it is almost impossible to find the cost, because the cost of service depends upon so many different elements. It depends upon the amount of traffic the particular truck operators have, and upon so many different elements that it is almost impossible to ascertain them.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the bill define the purposes for which the Commission may suspend rates?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; and it is very specific as to the reasons. The provision relating to that, found on page 47, reads as follows:

(g) Whenever there shall be filed with the Commission any schedule stating a new individual or joint rate, fare, charge, or classification for the transportation of passengers or property by a common carrier or carriers by motor vehicle, or by any such carrier or carriers in conjunction with a common carrier or carriers by railroad and/or express, and/or water in interstate or foreign commerce, or any rule, regulation, or practice affecting such rate, fare, or charge, or the value of the service thereunder, the Commission is hereby authorized and empowered upon complaint of any interested party or upon its own initiative at once and, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such rate—

And so forth.

In the meantime the Commission may suspend the rate pending such hearing. If it does suspend the rate, of course, the rate the carrier has been charging will continue during that period of time. It only suspends the lower rate or the higher rate pending hearing and decision, and the carrier will still go on getting its published rate.

Paragraph (d), on page 44, prohibits unjust discrimination or undue prejudice or disadvantage. The committee has added a provision that this prohibition shall not be construed to apply to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever description.

In other words, some of the truck and bus operators were afraid that the railroads would come in and complain, and we added this provision so as doubly to protect the truck and bus operators.

This provision is added to meet the objection of certain interests that the original paragraph might have been construed so as to make it unlawful for a motor carrier to charge a rate which would place a rail carrier or any other carrier at a disadvantage. This contention is not well founded in our judgment inasmuch as the provisions of this paragraph are substantially the same as those in section 3 (1) of the Interstate Commerce Act, which has been in effect since 1887, and have always been interpreted as covering unequal and unjust treatment by a carrier of its patrons. However, as I said, to make assurance double sure, this provision was added.

Paragraph (i), page 49, sets forth certain elements to be considered by the Commission in the fixing of rates. The wording of this paragraph follows that of the amended section 15 (a) of the Interstate Commerce Act, except that, as an additional protection to the motor carriers, it directs the Commission to give due consideration to the inherent advantages of motor transportation. The intent is to require the Commission to fix truck rates on a basis that, so far as possible, reflects the costs and advantages of the motor service.

Section 217, on page 50, relates to tariffs of common carriers by motor vehicle. This section requires the common carriers by motor vehicle to file and adhere to tariffs which show all rates, fares, and charges for transportation and all services in connection therewith. These tariffs are to be published, filed, and posted in such form and manner as the Commission may prescribe, and the Commission is given full discretion to adjust its requirements to motor-carrier conditions. No change may be made in any tariff except after 30 days' notice, but the Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow such change upon less notice, as it often does in the case of the railroads. It may modify the requirements with respect to posting and filing of tariffs either in the particular instance or by general order applicable to special circumstances or conditions.

Complaint has been made that the 30-day period was too long, inasmuch as some bus operators might want to reduce their rates very quickly in order to meet a certain competitive condition. The provision, however, gives the Commission the power, on a proper showing, even by telegraph, to allow the change to be made in less time. The Commission tell me that under proper conditions they could do it overnight, if the Commission, in their wisdom, thought it was necessary to be done.

As I see it, practically all the criticisms that have been made against the bill have been made on the theory that the Commission was not going to carry out the policies laid down by the measure. There has been a fear upon the part of some people—in my judgment, an unfounded fear—if the administration of this bill were turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission, that Commission might regulate bus and truck transportation in the interest of the railroads and not in the interest of the general public, and that it might not give bus and truck operators a fair deal. It is fair to say to the Senate that the American Trucking Associations, Inc., and likewise the water carriers of the country, have insisted that the Commission should be reorganized and that a bill should be passed reorganizing the Commission if the truck bill and the water-carrier bill should pass, so as to set up in the Interstate Commerce Commission a special division for the handling of each particular kind of transportation. Coordinator Eastman has made recommendation to that effect, and I wish to say to the Senate that I have promised both the water carriers, if their water-carrier bill shall pass, and likewise the bus and truck interests, that I would try to have passed a bill in accordance with the recommendations of Coordinator Eastman.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Unless something of that sort shall be done, is the Interstate Commerce Commission equipped at the present time to administer the provisions of this bill?

Mr. WHEELER. They could handle it, but they would have to set up within the Commission some kind of organization. It really ought to be a separate division of the Interstate Commerce Commission; I do not think there can be any doubt about that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. This bill provides a pretty substantial administrative addition to their responsibilities, does it not?

Mr. WHEELER. It does.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is necessary, or at least desirable, to have the function of regulating these agencies vested in the same body that regulates the other carriers.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Otherwise we might have one policy in force as to a certain class of carriers and an entirely different and conflicting policy in force as to this particular class of carriers.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The whole purpose is to coordinate the effort to regulate and supervise so as to give fair opportunity to each and every class of carriers?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. I might say that I talked this morning with Mr. Farley, who is connected with the water carriers, and was formerly on the Shipping Board and who is now I think receiver for some line of carriers or is engaged in some work of that kind. He said to me—and I do not think I am divulging any secret—he was extremely anxious that the bill to regulate water carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission should be passed, with a provision for a separate division to handle that subject matter, because he said his experience on the Shipping Board convinced him that administrative duties and regulatory functions should not be in the same organization. He said it was inconsistent and impractical and that he himself and many of the shippers were extremely anxious that all the carriers should come under one body, and, as the Senator from Arkansas has pointed out, if we do not have them under one body we will have one commission pulling this way and another commission pulling the other way, and, in my judgment, there will be a chaotic condition.

Section 218, page 52, relates to schedules of contract carriers by motor vehicle.

Contract carriers are required to file with the Commission, publish and keep open for public inspection, in the form and manner prescribed by the Commission rate schedules, or, in the discretion of the Commission, copies of contracts containing the minimum charges of such carriers. Here also 30 days' notice of changes is required, unless the Commission permits changes on less notice. The Commission is authorized in paragraph (a), line 29, page 53, to grant relief from the provisions of this paragraph. This section is so worded as to permit of suitable flexibility and relief of operators from any requirements which may be unduly burdensome and not productive of any good result.

Paragraph (b), page 54, authorizes the Commission to fix the minimum charges and to prescribe the rules, regulations, or practices of contract carriers in order that they may not give any advantage or preference to any such carrier in competition with any common carrier by motor vehicle subject to this part, which the Commission may find to be undue or inconsistent with the public interest and the policy declared in said section (202 (a)). Exercise of this minimum-rate power is essential if present chaotic conditions in the field of motor transportation are to be corrected. The truck operators themselves want this section for their own protection. In their code they tried a cost formula as a basis for fixing minimum rates, and realize the necessity for a provision which will afford reasonable protection from rate cutting.

The committee has added an amendment in lines 21 to 25, page 54, for the purpose of giving greater assurance to the truck operators that, in the making of such minimum rates, the Commission shall consider the costs incurred by contract carriers and the effect of such charges upon the movement of traffic by such carriers and its possible diversion to private operators or other agencies of transportation. The suspension provisions of this section are the same as those which apply in the case of common carriers and the need for them is the same.

Section 219. Receipts or bills of lading: This section makes applicable to common carriers of freight the provisions of section 20 (11) of the Interstate Commerce Act. These provisions require the issuance of bills of lading, prohibit limitations of liability for loss and damage, and authorize the institution of suits against the initial carrier for loss or damage incurred on the lines of a connecting carrier.

Section 220, page 56. Accounts, records and reports: This section gives the Commission authority to require such reports and to prescribe such records as are required for the successful administration of the act. Section 203 (c) permits the Commission to adjust its requirements to the ability of the operators to comply with them. It is realized that somewhat simple accounting and report requirements will be necessary in the case of the small operator.

Section 221, page 58. Orders, notices, and service of process: This section requires each motor carrier and broker to file with the Commission and with the board of each State the name and post-office address of a person upon whom service of notices or orders may be made, and provides that orders of the Commission shall take effect within such reasonable time as the Commission may prescribe, and continue in force either for a specified period or until the Commission's further order.

Section 222, page 60. Unlawful operation: This section provides penalties, in the way of fines only, for violations of the act or the orders of the Commission, and authorizes the issuance of injunctions or other judicial process to enforce obedience.

Paragraph (c), page 61, prohibits rebates or other concessions or attempts to evade regulation by means of fictitious bills of lading, leases, or other devices.

Section 223. Collection of rates and charges: Gives the Commission the right to make rules and regulations for settlement of freight charges.

Section 224. Identification of interstate carriers: This section authorizes the Commission to require motor carriers operating under Federal certificates or permits to display suitable identification plate or plates, the cost of which is to be borne by the carriers. The substitution, transfer, or unlawful use of any such plate or plates is prohibited.

Section 225. Investigation of motor vehicle sizes, weights, etc.: This investigation is required in order to establish the need for Federal regulation of the sizes and weights of motor vehicles and of the qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees of all motor carriers and private carriers of property by motor vehicle. It will, if need is found for such regulation, serve to lay the basis for types of regulation which are adapted to the special and varied conditions surrounding the operations of such motor vehicles. The definition of a private carrier has been eliminated at this point and inserted in section 203 (a) as subparagraph (17).

Section 226. Separability of provisions: No discussion of this section is necessary.

Section 227. Time effective: In view of the difficulties which the Commission and the carriers will encounter in instituting the initial regulation, the Commission is authorized to stay the effective date of any of the several provisions of this act, but not beyond the 1st day of January 1936.

This practically concludes the discussion of the various sections. I have discussed all that are of importance. I appreciate the bill is not perfect, but the committee worked hard on it and we were practically unanimous in reporting it out. No minority report was filed. There was very little dissension over any of the provisions. We tried to modify it as much as possible to take away any fear that might exist in the minds of some that the motor busses and trucks were going to be regulated in the interest of the railroads. I think such fears were absolutely unfounded, although it was apparent that certain propaganda had been carried on for the purpose of stirring up that belief among groups of certain individuals in the United States.

This concludes my statement on the bill. I am ready to proceed if it is desired to continue its consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that so much work is before the committees and before the Senate itself that many Senators necessarily otherwise engaged and absent at this time will want to read the very able discussion made this afternoon by the Senator from Montana. I think, in view of this fact, it might well be the part of wisdom to let the bill go over until another day, although we might consider committee amendments to the bill which are formal in their nature.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana, in a comparatively brief address, has presented what appears to me to be a very clear and impressive analysis of the provisions of the bill. It is gratifying to have that done touching a measure which is of so great importance. I do not know whether there is grave opposition to the measure. There is no disposition to press for quick action, but it seems to me if there are Senators who have studied the subject, and who care to express their views, we ought now to have the advantage of those expressions. In other words, we are expected now to recess until tomorrow, when, for good reasons, there will be a short session, a very short session unless my plans miscarry. [Laughter.]

I wish we might proceed this afternoon. I was informed by one Senator that he desires to address the Senate on the bill this afternoon, but he happens to be absent at the moment. Let us proceed with consideration of committee amendments. Let us get something done.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no quarrel with that program. I think I made it clear a moment ago that I do not want final action taken now. I do not speak of any one in particular. I do not know whether there is opposition to the bill. I am willing to proceed with committee amendments at this time. When it comes to individual amendments and final passage of the bill I shall ask that it go over until another day.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall make no objection if, at the proper time, the Senator states he thinks the bill should go over until another day. However, I think we might proceed with and complete the consideration of committee amendments this afternoon.

Has the Senator from Montana requested that the bill be read for amendment and that committee amendments be first considered?

Mr. WHEELER. I now submit that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Johnson	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	Keyes	Robinson
Austin	Costigan	King	Russell
Bachman	Couzens	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Cutting	Lewis	Shipstead
Bankhead	Dickinson	Logan	Smith
Barbour	Donahey	Lonergan	Steiwer
Barkley	Duffy	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bilbo	Fletcher	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Black	Frazier	McNary	Townsend
Borah	George	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulkley	Gerry	Minton	Truman
Bulow	Gibson	Moore	Tydings
Burke	Glass	Murphy	Vandenberg
Byrd	Gore	Murray	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Guffey	Neely	Wagner
Capper	Hale	Norris	Wheeler
Caraway	Harrison	O'Mahoney	White
Carey	Hastings	Pittman
Clark	Hatch	Pope
Connally	Hayden	Radcliffe

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, on page 1, line 4, after the words "referred to as 'part I'", to insert "is hereby amended by inserting at the beginning thereof the caption 'part I' and by substituting for the words 'this act' wherever they occur the words 'this part', but such part I may continue to be cited as the 'Interstate Commerce Act', and said Interstate Commerce Act", and on page 2, line 3, after the word "part", to strike out "III" and insert "(I)", so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, herein referred to as "part I", is hereby amended by inserting at the beginning thereof the caption "part I" and by substituting for the words "this act" wherever they occur the words "this part", but such part I may continue to be cited as the "Interstate Commerce Act" and said Interstate Commerce Act is hereby further amended by adding the following part (II).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the word "part" in the heading, to strike out "III" and insert "(II)", so as to make the heading read:

Part (II).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Declaration of policy and delegation of jurisdiction", on page 2, line 9, after "Sec.", to strike out "302" and insert "202"; in line 10, after the word "to", to strike out "promote, encourage," and insert "supervise"; in line 12, after the word "to", to strike out "develop" and insert "recognize"; in the same line, after the word "and", to strike out "maintain" and insert "preserve the inherent advantages of, and foster"; in line 14, after the word "carriers", to insert "in the public interest"; in line 15, before the word "adequate", to strike out "provide" and insert "promote"; in the same line, after the word "efficient", to strike out "transportation"; in line 16, after the word "carriers", to insert a comma and the words "and reasonable charges therefor, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, and unfair or destructive competitive practices"; in line 19, after the word "between", to strike out "such carriers"; in the same line, after the word "and", to strike out "other agencies of transportation;"; in line 20, after the word "by", to insert "regulation of,"; in line 21, after the word "and" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "such"; in the same line, after the word "other", to strike out "agencies and the regulation thereof; foster" and insert "carriers; develop"; in line 22, after the word "preserve", to strike out "in the public interest"; in the same line, before the word "transportation", to insert "highway"; in line 25, before the word "cooperate", to strike out "to"; and on page 3, line 1, after the word "thereof", to insert "and with any organization of motor carriers"; so as to read:

PART (II)

SECTION 201. This part may be cited as the "Motor Carrier Act, 1935."

DECLARATION OF POLICY AND DELEGATION OF JURISDICTION

SEC. 202. (a) It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to supervise and regulate transportation by motor carriers in such manner as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of, and foster sound economic conditions in, such transportation and among such carriers in the public interest; promote adequate, economical, and efficient service by motor carriers, and reasonable charges therefor, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, and unfair or destructive competitive practices; improve the relations between, and coordinate transportation by and regulation of, motor carriers and other carriers; develop and preserve a highway transportation system properly adapted to the needs of the commerce of the United States and of the national defense; and cooperate with the several States and the duly authorized officials thereof and with any organization of motor carriers in the administration and enforcement of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 5, after the word "carriers", to strike out "engaged in interstate or foreign commerce" and insert "and to the procurement of and the provision of facilities for such transportation"; and in line 8, after the word "such", to strike out "commerce" and insert "transportation, and of the procurement thereof, and the provision of facilities therefor", so as to read:

(b) The provisions of this part apply to the transportation of passengers or property by motor carriers and to the procurement of and the provision of facilities for such transportation, and the regulation of such transportation, and of the procurement thereof, and the provision of facilities therefor, is hereby vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, after the word "any", to strike out "State. It is not intended hereby" and insert "State, or"; in line 16, before the word "exercise", to strike out "exclusive"; in line 18, after the word "thereof" and the comma, to strike out "and notwithstanding this part, the intrastate operations of motor carriers on the highways of a State shall continue to be subject to the laws of the State regulating such intrastate commerce: Provided, however, That this shall not be construed to prevent the Commission from exercising its authority to protect" and insert "except where and only to the extent that such regulation causes undue or unreasonable disadvantage or prejudice to"; in line 25, after the word "persons", to strike out "and" and insert "or"; and on page 4, line 1, after the word "commerce", to strike out "against undue or unreasonable disadvantage or prejudice caused by any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of motor carriers made or imposed by authority of any State", so as to read:

(c) Nothing in this part shall be construed to affect the powers of taxation of the several States or to authorize a motor carrier to do an intrastate business on the highways of any State, or to interfere with the exercise by each State of the power of regulation of intrastate commerce by motor carriers on the highways thereof, except where and only to the extent that such regulation causes undue or unreasonable disadvantage or prejudice to persons or localities in interstate commerce.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I have been consulted by representatives of the Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners who object to the entire subsection (c) in the form in which it is reported by the committee, and I intend to offer an amendment as a substitute. I desire to suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that possibly it would be better to go ahead with the other committee amendments that are not objected to, and then take up the amendment I wish to offer.

Mr. ROBINSON. Where is the point at which the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to offer an amendment?

Mr. DUFFY. Starting on line 12, page 3, section (c), I propose to offer a substitute for the entire paragraph, which has been considerably changed by the committee amendments, to a very large degree restoring the wording as it originally appeared in the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Would it suit the convenience of the Senator from Montana to pass over those amendments?

Mr. WHEELER. As I understand, the Senator from Wisconsin wishes to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. DUFFY. And insert a substitute.

Mr. WHEELER. Let us go ahead and amend the bill as proposed by the committee, and the Senator may afterward offer his substitute.

Mr. DUFFY. I merely make the suggestion so that I may not be precluded from doing that.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator will not be precluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Definitions", on page 4, line 6, to change the section number from "303" to "203", and in line 9, after the word "association", to insert a semicolon and the words "and includes any trustee, receiver, assignee, or personal representative thereof", so as to read:

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 203. (a) As used in this part—

(1) The term 'person' means any individual, firm, copartnership, corporation, company, association, or joint-stock association; and includes any trustee, receiver, assignee, or personal representative thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 15, after the word "this", to strike out "act" and insert "part", and in line 18, after the word "regulate", to insert "the business of", so as to read:

(2) The term "board" or "State board" means the commission, board, or official (by whatever name designated in the laws of a State) which, under the laws of any State in which any part of the service in interstate or foreign commerce regulated by this part is performed, has or may hereafter have jurisdiction to grant or approve certificates of public convenience and necessity or permits to motor carriers, or otherwise to regulate the business of transportation by motor vehicles, in intrastate commerce over the highways of such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 24, after the word "section", to strike out "305" and insert "205", so as to read:

(4) The term "joint board" means any special board constituted as provided in section 205 of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 6, before the word "broker", to strike out "motor transportation agent or", so as to read:

(7) The term "license" means a license issued under this part to a broker.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to insert:

(9) The term "express company" means any common carrier by express subject to the provisions of part I.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 11, to change the paragraph number from "(9)" to "(10)", and in line 13, after the word "between", to strike out "points" and insert "places", so as to read:

(10) The term "interstate commerce" means commerce between any place in a State and any place in another State or between places in the same State through another State, whether such commerce moves wholly by motor vehicle or partly by motor vehicle and partly by rail, express, or water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 17, to change the paragraph number from "(10)" to "(11)", and in line 19, after the word "between", to strike out "points" and insert "places", so as to read:

(11) The term "foreign commerce" means commerce between any place in the United States and any place in a foreign country, or between places in the United States through any foreign country, whether such commerce moves wholly by motor vehicle or partly by motor vehicle and partly by rail, express, or water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 23, to change the paragraph number from "(11)" to "(12)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 1, to change the paragraph number from "(12)" to "(13)"; in line 3, after the word "by", to strike out "any" and insert "mechanical"; in the same line, after the word "power", to strike out "other than muscular power"; in line 4, after the word "highways", to strike out "for" and insert "in the"; in line 5, before the words "or property", to strike out "passenger" and insert "passengers"; and in line 6, before the word "vehicle", to strike out "motorcycle, or any"; so as to read:

(13) The term "motor vehicle" means any vehicle, machine, tractor, trailer, or semitrailer propelled or drawn by mechanical power and used upon the highways in the transportation of passengers or property, but does not include any vehicle, locomotive, or car operated exclusively on a rail or rails.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 8, to change the paragraph number from "(13)" to "(14)"; in line 9, after the word "undertakes", to insert "whether directly or by a lease or any other arrangement"; and in line 11, after the word "classes" to strike out "thereof" and insert "of property", so as to read:

(14) The term "common carrier by motor vehicle" means any person who or which undertakes, whether directly or by a lease or any other arrangement, to transport passengers or property, or any class or classes of property, for the general public in interstate or foreign commerce by motor vehicle for compensation, whether over regular or irregular routes, including such motor-vehicle operations of carriers by rail or water, and of express or fowarding companies, except to the extent that these operations are subject to the provisions of part I.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 18, to change the paragraph number from "(14)" to "(15)"; in line 20 to strike out "(13)" and insert "(14)"; and in line 21, after the word "agreements", to insert "and whether directly or by a lease or any other arrangement"; so as to read:

(15) The term "contract carrier by motor vehicle" means any person, not included under paragraph (14) of this section, who or which, under special and individual contracts or agreements, and whether directly or by a lease or any other arrangement, transports passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce by motor vehicle for compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 1, to change the paragraph number from "(15)" to "(16)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 3, to insert:

(17) The term "private carrier of property by motor vehicle" means any person not included in the terms "common carrier by motor vehicle" or "contract carrier by motor vehicle", who or which transports in interstate or foreign commerce by motor vehicle property of which such person is the owner, lessee, or bailee, when such transportation is for the purpose of sale, lease, rent, or bailment, or in furtherance of any commercial enterprise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 11, to insert:

(18) The term "broker" means any person not included in the term "motor carrier" and not a bona fide employee or agent of any such carrier, who or which, as principal or agent, sells or offers for sale any transportation subject to this part, or negotiates for, or holds himself or itself out by solicitation, advertisement, or otherwise as one who sells, provides, furnishes, contracts, or arranges for such transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 20, to change the paragraph number from "(16)" to "(19)"; in line 21, after the word "include", to strike out "also" and insert "all"; in line 24, after the word "property", to strike out "including terminal facilities and property" and insert "operated or controlled by any such carrier or carriers and"; on page 8, line 2, after the word "the", to strike out "carriage, receipt, delivery, storage, refrigeration or icing, transfer, and handling" and insert "transportation"; in line 4, after the word "of", to insert "passengers or"; in the same line, after the word "property", to strike out "so transported, and all services" and insert "in interstate or foreign commerce or in the performance of any service"; and in line 6, after the word "therewith", to strike out "affecting the value of the transportation", so as to read:

(19) The "services" and "transportation" to which this part applies include all vehicles operated by, for, or in the interest of any motor carrier, irrespective of ownership or of contract, express or implied, together with all facilities and property, operated or controlled by any such carrier or carriers and used in the transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce or in the performance of any service in connection therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 8, to change the paragraph number from "(17)" to "(20)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 10, to change the paragraph number from "(18)" to "(21)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 6, after the word "section", to strike out "302" and insert "202"; in line 7, after the word "of", to strike out "persons" and insert "passengers"; in line 14, after the word "zone", to insert: "and provided that the motor carrier engaged in such transportation of passengers over regular or irregular route or routes in interstate commerce is also lawfully engaged in the intrastate transportation of passengers over the entire length of such interstate route or routes in accordance with the laws of each State having jurisdiction"; in line 20, after the word "casual", to strike out "or"; in line 21, after the word "occasional", to insert "or reciprocal"; in the same line, after the words "transportation of", to strike out "persons" and insert "passengers"; in line 23, after the word "not", to strike out "regularly"; and in line 24, after the word "as", to strike out "his or its principal" and insert "a regular", so as to read:

(b) Nothing in this part shall be construed to include (1) motor vehicles employed solely in transporting school children and teachers to or from school; or (2) taxicabs, or other motor vehicles performing a bona fide taxicab service, having a capacity of not more than six passengers and not operated on a regular route or between fixed termini; or (3) motor vehicles owned or operated by or on behalf of hotels and used exclusively for the transportation of hotel patrons between hotels and local railroad or other common-carrier stations; or (4) motor vehicles operated, under authorization, regulation, and control of the Secretary of the Interior, principally for the purpose of transporting persons in and about the national parks and national monuments; or (5) trolley busses operated by electric power derived from a fixed overhead wire, furnishing local passenger transportation similar to street-railway service; nor, unless and to the extent that the Commission shall from time to time find that such application is necessary to carry out the policy of Congress enunciated in section 202, shall the provisions of this part apply to: (6) The transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce wholly within a municipality or between contiguous municipalities or within a zone adjacent to and commercially a part of any such municipality or municipalities, except when such transportation is under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment to or from a point without such municipality, municipalities, or zone, and provided that the motor carrier engaged in such transportation of passengers over regular or irregular route or routes in interstate commerce is also lawfully engaged in the intrastate transportation of passengers over the entire length of such interstate route or routes in accordance with the laws of each State having jurisdiction; or (7) the casual, occasional, or reciprocal transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce for compensation by any person not engaged in transportation by motor vehicle as a regular occupation or business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General Duties and Powers of the Commission", on page 10, line 2, to change the number of the section from "304" to "204."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senate has now reached section 204, on page 10, and we are discussing paragraph 1 of section 204. I wish the Senator in charge of the bill would tell the Senate just what it is contemplated to do by that section.

I recall that during the discussions of the committee there were some differences of opinion with respect to fixing maximum hours of service of employees on motor vehicles, and minimum wages. It appears later on in the bill that the N. R. A. is not to apply after this bill shall become law. It also appears that after I left one of the committee meetings that general policy was changed, and I was not in the committee when the final draft of the bill was arranged. I happened to tell one of the Senators that the bill had provided for maximum hours and minimum wages.

I should like the Senator from Montana, if he will, to explain to the Senate why the committee changed the first undertaking.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that I do not think the committee ever adopted the suggestion to which he has referred. As the Senator will recall, what happened was that the labor representatives from the Truck Drivers' Association in New York came before the committee and wanted certain definite regulations with reference to maximum hours of service and minimum wages. Then the railroad brotherhoods appeared before the committee and asked for certain regulations with reference to maximum hours of service. I have forgotten the specific provision they wanted. Then a provision was desired giving the truck drivers the right to have collective bargaining. Since the Wagner bill was pending, and would apply to all industries, it was thought perhaps it was not advisable to write such provisions into this bill; and then, in talking with Mr. Eastman about the matter, we accepted the suggestion of Mr. McManamy, who is chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He suggested the language we have inserted. It seemed to be the view of the Commission that they wanted the power to investigate these conditions, and so, on page 66, the bill provides as follows:

The Commission is hereby authorized to investigate and report on the need for Federal regulation of the sizes and weight of motor vehicles and combinations of motor vehicles and of the qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees of all motor carriers and private carriers of property by motor vehicle; and in such investigation the Commission shall avail itself of the assistance of all departments or bureaus of the Government.

Then we gave them the power, in section 204—

To supervise and regulate common carriers by motor vehicle as provided in this part, and to that end the Commission may establish reasonable requirements with respect to continuous and adequate service, transportation of baggage and express, uniform systems of accounts, records, and reports, preservation of records, qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees, and safety of operation and equipment.

It was felt that the Commission and the committee did not have sufficient information before them to enable them to specify definitely the maximum hours of service. There are regulations in some of the States fixing 12 hours, and in some States 16 hours is fixed as the maximum service, but there does not seem to be in any of the States, so far as we have been able to find, any carrying out of those laws.

I myself thought that the best thing that could be done at this time would be to have the bill passed and then have the Commission to make a study and report its findings back to Congress, because the measure involves many different kinds of carriers, and if we fix at this time hours of service for all kinds of carriers, it will be difficult to enforce them. At least, I did not feel that I had sufficient information upon which I could intelligently say what the hours of service should be or what the pay should be for all sections of the country.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator recognizes, of course, that section 225 on page 66 merely authorizes an investigation. It does not give any authority or any opportunity to fix maximum hours or minimum wages.

Mr. WHEELER. But on page 10, in section 204, the Commission is given the power to establish reasonable requirements with respect to the qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees, and the safety of operation and equipment.

Mr. COUZENS. But I point out what I said before, when I think perhaps the Senator was out of the Chamber for a moment, that further on in the bill there is a provision for removing these activities from the code authorities, and, in effect, this will make employees of an industry of this kind worse off than any other class of employees, because they now have a minimum wage under the codes, and there is no minimum wage provided in the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator. As I read the bill, insofar as the code authorities conflict with the provisions of the bill, then the provisions of the bill shall prevail; but the bill certainly would not now repeal the hours of service provided in the code authority.

Mr. COUZENS. I am not talking about the hours of service.

Mr. WHEELER. It has nothing to do with the wages. As a matter of fact, when we pass a railway labor bill, or a bill regulating interstate commerce, we do not and we cannot fix by law, it seems to me, the rates of wages to be paid to employees. We cannot do it with reference to railroad labor, we cannot do it with reference to truck and bus labor, we cannot do it with reference to any other class of labor. All we can do is to say to them that they can fix the maximum hours. We could specify that it was thought to be wise to do that instead of giving the Commission the power to fix the maximum hours, to specify that the limit of hours should be 12, or 10, or 16, or whatever we wanted to make it. But that is as far as we could go, it seems to me, in legislation of this kind. We cannot fix the rate of wages in a bill such as this.

That is the matter which must be handled by contractual arrangement between the truck operators and their employees. We have given the power to the Commission to regulate the hours of service. If it is thought best to do it in the bill, that is all right with me, but the Commission felt they did not have sufficient information at the present time upon which to base that kind of a regulation and to put it into the law at the present time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana whether it is intended to add anything to the verb "regulate" by inserting in the text, on page 10, the additional verb "to supervise"? He will notice that verbiage in lines 4, 12, and 24. Just what was the purpose of putting into the bill the verb "to supervise"?

Mr. WHEELER. That language is found in all such bills prepared by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was agreed to by those who themselves were to be regulated, and nobody has objected to it. It was for the purpose of giving the Commission the power to supervise and regulate, just as it says.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, I understand, there is no intention to increase the power over such power as is given by the verb "to regulate"?

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask one further question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have said that I have had no opportunity to read the bill through, but in the brief time available I have read page 12, and I admit that I canont understand paragraph (b), lines 1 to 8. What is the meaning of that paragraph?

Mr. WHEELER. It simply means that the code authority will have no effect after the enactment of the bill, where the code authority conflicts with the action taken by the Commission under the law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would not the Senator wish to have a sentence there, or does he wish to leave it as it is? I do not find a complete sentence there.

Mr. WHEELER. There must be a correction in the language which we have marked to be changed, which correction will straighten it out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Striking out the word "which" in line 6?

Mr. WHEELER. We are going to strike out, in line 6, the word "which" and insert it after the word "effective" in line 7. That was a clerical error.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 10, line 9, after the word "records", to insert the words "qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees", so as to read:

(1) To supervise and regulate common carriers by motor vehicle as provided in this part, and to that end the Commission may establish reasonable requirements with respect to continuous and adequate service, transportation of baggage and express, uniform systems of accounts, records, and reports, preservation of records, qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees, and safety of operation and equipment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on line 16, after the word "records", to insert the words "qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees", so as to read:

(2) To supervise and regulate contract carriers by motor vehicle as provided in this part, and to that end the Commission may establish reasonable requirements with respect to uniform systems of accounts, records, and reports, preservation of records, qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees, and safety of operation and equipment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 18, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(3) To establish for private carriers of property by motor vehicle, if need therefor is found, reasonable requirements with respect to the qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees, and safety of operation and equipment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 24, to strike out "(3)" and to insert in lieu thereof "(4)"; and on line 24, after the word "regulate", to strike out the words "motor-carrier transportation", so as to read:

(4) To supervise and regulate brokers as provided in this part, and to that end the Commission may establish reasonable requirements with respect to licensing, financial responsibility, accounts, records, reports, operations, and practices of any such person or persons.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 5, to strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(5)", and on line 7, after the word "several" to strike out the word "existing", so as to read:

(5) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions pertaining to safety, the Commission may avail itself of the assistance of any of the several research agencies of the Federal Government having special knowledge of any such matter, to conduct such scientific and technical researches, investigations, and tests as may be necessary to promote the safety of operation and equipment of motor vehicles as provided in this part; the Commission may transfer to such agency or agencies such funds as may be necessary and available to make this provision effective.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 15, to change the paragraph number from "(5)" to "(6)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 19, to change the paragraph number from "(6)" to "(7)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 1, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(b) The provisions of any code of fair competition for any industry embracing motor carriers or for any subdivision thereof approved pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act or any present or future act amendatory thereof, or supplementary thereto, or in substitution therefor, which shall have no force or effect after this section becomes effective is in conflict or inconsistent with any action under the provisions of this part.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment on page 12, line 6, by striking out the word "which" and inserting the word "which" in line 7 after the word "effective."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, does that clarify the language to the Senator's satisfaction?

Mr. WHEELER. I am just studying it.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that this amendment go over, because I think that even with the modification now presented by the Senator the language of the section is not clear.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask that the amendment be passed over, and we will work it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 12, line 9, to strike out "(b)" and to insert in lieu thereof "(c)"; on line 10, after the word "classifications", to insert the words "of brokers"; on line 11, after the word "or", to insert the word "of"; on line 14, after the word "carriers", to insert the words "or brokers"; on line 17, after the word "carriers", to insert the words "or brokers", so as to read:

(c) The Commission may from time to time establish such just and reasonable classifications of brokers or of groups of carriers included in the term "common carrier by motor vehicle", or "contract carrier by motor vehicle", as the special nature of the services performed by such carriers or brokers shall require; and such just and reasonable rules, regulations, and requirements, consistent with the provisions of this part, to be observed by the carriers or brokers so classified or grouped, as the Commission deems necessary or desirable in the public interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 19, to strike out "(c)" and to insert in lieu thereof "(d)", and on page 13, line 4, after the word "therewith", to insert the words "Whenever the Commission is of opinion that any complaint does not state reasonable grounds for investigation and action on its part, it may dismiss such complaint", so as to read:

(d) Upon complaint in writing to the Commission by any person, State board, organization, or body politic, or upon its own initiative without complaint, the Commission may investigate whether any motor carrier or broker has failed to comply with any provision of this part, or with any requirement established pursuant thereto. If the Commission, after notice and hearing, finds upon any such investigation that the motor carrier or broker has failed to comply with any such provision or requirement, the Commission shall issue an appropriate order to compel the carrier or broker to comply therewith. Whenever the Commission is of opinion that any complaint does not state reasonable grounds for investigation and action on its part, it may dismiss such complaint.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 8, to change the paragraph number from "(d)" to "(e)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 4, to change the paragraph number from "(e)" to "(f)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 9, under the heading "Administration", to change the section number from "305" to "205."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Administration" on page 16, line 7, after the word "section" to strike out "304" and insert "204"; and in the same line after the semicolon to insert "and"; in line 9 after the word "brokers" to strike out the semicolon and the words "and the approval of surety bonds, policies of insurance, or other securities or agreements for the protection of the public, required on the issuance of a certificate, permit, or license, application for which is referred to a joint board:", so as to read:

(b) The Commission shall, when operations of motor carriers or brokers conducted or proposed to be conducted involve not more than three States, and the Commission may, in its discretion, when operations of motor carriers or brokers conducted or proposed to be conducted involve more than three States, refer to a joint board for appropriate proceedings thereon, any of the following matters arising in the administration of this part with respect to such operations: Applications for certificates, permits, or licenses; the suspension, change, or revocation of such certificates, permits, or licenses; applications for the approval and authorization of consolidations, mergers, and acquisitions of control or operating contracts; complaints as to violations by motor carriers or brokers of the requirements established under section 204 (a); and complaints as to rates, fares, and charges of motor carriers or the practices of brokers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 18, after the word "and", to insert "to"; and in the same line, after the word "order", to strike out "thereon under such" and to insert "thereon. The Commission shall prescribe"; and in line 20, after the word "boards", to strike out "as the Commission shall prescribe, or it" and insert "and"; and on page 18, line 1, before the word "operations", to insert "or brokerage", so as to read:

(c) Whenever there arises in the administration of this part any matter that the Commission is required to refer to a joint board, or that the Commission determines, in its discretion, to refer to a joint board, the Commission shall, if no joint board eligible to consider said matter is in existence, create a joint board to consider the matter when referred, and to recommend appropriate order thereon. The Commission shall prescribe rules governing meetings and procedure of joint boards and may, in the event of legal proceedings preventing reference to a joint board, determine the matter as provided in paragraph (a) of this section. Except as hereinafter provided, a joint board shall consist of a member from each State in which the motor carrier or brokerage operations involved are or are proposed to be conducted. The member from any such State shall be nominated by the board of such State from its own membership or otherwise; or if there is no board in such State or if the board of such State fails to make a nomination when requested by the Commission, then the Governor of such State may nominate such member. The Commission is authorized to appoint as a member upon the joint board any such nominee approved by it. If both the board and the Governor of any State shall fail to nominate a joint board member when requested, then the joint board shall be constituted without a member from such State, if members for two or more States shall have been nominated and approved by the Commission. All decisions and recommendations by joint boards shall be by majority vote. If the board of each State from which a member of a joint board is entitled to be appointed shall waive action on any matter referred to such joint board, or if any joint board fails or refuses to act, or is unable to agree upon any matter submitted to it within 45 days after the matter is referred to it or such other period as the Commission may authorize, or if a member shall not be nominated for more than one State (except only when the operations proposed shall be into or through territory foreign to the United States), then such matter shall be decided as in the case of any matter not required to be referred to a joint board. When any proceeding required to be referred to a joint board shall involve operations of a motor carrier conducted or proposed to be conducted into or through territory foreign to the United States, if a single State shall be involved, or if only one State shall make nomination of a joint board member through its Governor or State board, then the Commission, in such case, may receive from that State the nomination of not more than three members and may appoint such nominees to constitute the joint board. Members of joint boards when administering the provisions of this part shall receive such allowances for travel and subsistence expenses as the Commission shall provide. A joint board shall continue in existence for the consideration of matters referred to it by the Commission until such time as its existence may be terminated by the Commission. A substitution of membership upon a joint board from any State may be made at any time by nomination and appointment in the same manner as an original nomination and appointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 21, after the words "under part 1", insert a semicolon and the words "Provided, That, where the Commission, in respect of any matter arising under this part, shall have issued a negative order solely because of a supposed lack of power, any such party in interest may file a bill of complaint with the appropriate District Court of the United States, convened under the Urgent Deficiency Appropriations Act, October 22, 1913, and such court, if it determines that the Commission has such power, may enforce by writ of mandatory injunction the Commission's taking of jurisdiction", so as to read:

(h) Any final order made under this part shall be subject to the same right of relief in court by any party in interest as is now provided in respect to orders of the Commission made under part I: Provided, That, where the Commission, in respect of any matter arising under this part, shall have issued a negative order solely because of a supposed lack of power, any such party in interest may file a bill of complaint with the appropriate District Court of the United States, convened under the Urgent Deficiency Appropriations Act, October 22, 1913, and such court, if it determines that the Commission has such power, may enforce by writ of mandatory injunction the Commission's taking of jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 10, after the words "motor carrier", to insert "or in any carrier by railroad, water, or other form of transportation", so as to read:

(j) No member or examiner of the Commission or member of a joint board shall hold any official relation to, or own any securities of, or be in any manner pecuniarily interested in, any motor carrier or in any carrier by railroad, water, or other form of transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Application for certificate of public convenience and necessity", on page 22, line 20, after the word "Sec.", to strike out "306" and insert "206"; on page 23, line 2, after the word "section", to strike out "310" and insert "210"; in line 6, after the word "operated", to strike out "continuously"; in line 8, after the words "bona fide", to strike out "and continuous"; in line 9, after the word "except", to strike out "in either instance"; in line 16, after the word "within", to strike out "60" and insert "120 days"; in line 17, after the word "this", to strike out "part" and insert "section"; in line 18, after the word "effect", to insert "and if such carrier was registered in 1934 under any code of fair competition requiring registration, the fact of registration shall be evidence of bona fide operation to be considered in connection with the issuance of such certificate"; in line 24, after the word "section", to strike out "307" and insert "207"; on page 24, line 6, after the words "carrier of", to strike out "persons" and insert "passengers"; in line 7, after the word "between", to strike out "points" and insert "places"; and in line 11, after the word "board", to strike out "in any such case the Commission shall have no authority to issue any such certificate", so as to read:

SEC. 206. (a) No common carrier by motor vehicle subject to the provisions of this part shall engage in any interstate or foreign operation on any public highway, or within any reservation under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, unless there is in force with respect to such carrier a certificate of public convenience and necessity issued by the Commission authorizing such operations: Provided, however, That, subject to section 210, if any such carrier or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide operation as a common carrier by motor vehicle in 1934, over the route or routes or within the territory for which application is made and has so operated since that time, or if engaged in furnishing seasonal service only, was in bona fide operation in 1934, during the season ordinarily covered by its operation, except in either instance as to interruptions of service over which the applicant or its predecessor in interest had no control, the Commission shall issue such certificate without requiring further proof that public convenience and necessity will be served by such operation, and without further proceedings, if application for such certificate is made to the Commission as provided in paragraph (b) of this section and within 120 days after this section shall take effect, and if such carrier was registered in 1934 under any code of fair competition requiring registration, the fact of registration shall be evidence of bona fide operation to be considered in connection with the issuance of such certificate. Otherwise the application for such certificate shall be decided in accordance with the procedure provided for in section 207 (a) of this part and such certificate shall be issued or denied accordingly. Pending the determination of any such application the continuance of such operation shall be lawful: And provided further, That this paragraph shall not be so construed as to require any such carrier lawfully engaged in operation solely within any State to obtain from the Commission a certificate authorizing the transportation by such carrier of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce between places within such State if there be a board in such State having authority to grant or approve such certificates and if such carrier has obtained such certificate from such board. Such transportation shall, however, be otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, may I recur to subdivision (b) on page 12? In order to straighten out the language there, it should read:

(b) The provisions of any code of fair competition for any industry embracing motor carriers or for any subdivision thereof approved pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act or any present or future act amendatory thereof, or supplementary thereto, or in substitution therefor, which is in conflict or inconsistent with any action under the provisions of this part, shall have no force or effect after this section becomes effective.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think that clarifies the language.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask that the vote by which the amendment on page 12, lines 1 to 8, inclusive, was agreed to, be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. I now move that the amendment I have suggested to the amendment on page 12, subsection (b), be agreed to.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 19, after the word "require" to insert: "Any person, not included within the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, who or which is engaged in transportation in interstate or foreign commerce as a common carrier by motor vehicle when this section takes effect may continue such operation for a period of 120 days thereafter without a certificate and, if application for such certificate is made to the Commission within such period, the carrier may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operation until otherwise ordered by the Commission"; so as to read:

(b) Application for certificates shall be made in writing to the Commission, be verified under oath, and shall be in such form and contain such information and be accompanied by proof of service upon such interested parties as the Commission shall, by regulation, require. Any person, not included within the provisions of paragraph (a) of this section, who or which is engaged in transportation in interstate or foreign commerce as a common carrier by motor vehicle when this section takes effect may continue such operation for a period of 120 days thereafter without a certificate and, if application for such certificate is made to the Commission within such period, the carrier may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operation until otherwise ordered by the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 5, to insert the subhead "Issuance of certificate"; in line 6, after "Sec.", to strike out "307" and insert "207 (a)"; and in the same line, after the word "section", to strike out "310" and insert "210", so as to read:

"ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATE

SEC. 207. (a) Subject to section 210, a certificate shall be issued to any qualified applicant therefor, authorizing the whole or any part of the operations covered by the application, if it is found that the applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service proposed and to conform to the provisions of this part and the requirements, rules, and regulations of the Commission thereunder, and that the proposed service, to the extent to be authorized by the certificate, is or will be required by the present or future public convenience and necessity; otherwise such application shall be denied.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 2, after the word "Sec." to strike out "308" and insert "208"; in line 3, to strike out "307" and insert "206 or 207"; in line 13, after the words "limitations as to", strike out "the furnishing of additional service over the specified routes, between the specified termini or within the specified territory, and"; in line 16, after the words "extension of the", to strike out "line" and insert "route"; in the same line, after the word "or", to strike out "lines" and insert "routes"; in line 20, after the word "section", to strike out "304" and insert "204"; in the same line, after the word "and", to strike out "(5)" and insert "(6)" and the following proviso: "Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to add to his or its equipment and facilities over the routes, between the termini, or within the territory specified in the certificate, as the development of the business and the demands of the public shall require", so as to read:

"TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF CERTIFICATE

SEC. 208. (a) Any certificate issued under section 206 or 207 shall specify the service to be rendered and the routes over which, the fixed termini, if any, between which, and the intermediate and off-route points, if any, at which, and in case of operations not over specified routes or between fixed termini, the territory within which, the motor carrier is authorized to operate; and there shall, at the time of issuance and from time to time thereafter, be attached to the exercise of the privileges granted by the certificate such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations as the public convenience and necessity may from time to time require, including terms, conditions, and limitations as to the extension of the route or routes of the carrier, and such terms and conditions as are necessary to carry out, with respect to the operations of the carrier, the requirements established by the Commission under section 204 (a) (1) and (6): Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to add to his or its equipment and facilities over the routes, between the termini, or within the territory specified in the certificate, as the development of the business and the demands of the public shall require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 9, after the words "to any", to strike out "point" and insert "place"; and in line 11, after the word "Commission", to strike out "may prescribe" and insert "shall have prescribed", so as to read:

(c) Any common carrier by motor vehicle transporting passengers under a certificate issued under this part may transport in interstate or foreign commerce to any place special or chartered parties under such rules and regulations as the Commission shall have prescribed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 14, after the word "vehicle", to insert "with the"; and in line 15, after the word "baggage", to insert "of passengers"; and in line 16, after the word "mail", to insert "or to transport baggage of passengers in a separate vehicle", so as to read:

(d) A certificate for the transportation of passengers may include authority to transport in the same vehicle with the passengers, newspapers, baggage of passengers, express, or mail, or to transport baggage of passengers in a separate vehicle.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead "Permits for Contract Carriers by Motor Vehicle", on page 27, line 19, after "Sec.", to strike out "309" and insert "209"; in the same line, after the word "No", to strike out "contract carrier by motor vehicle, subject to the provisions of this part" and insert "person"; in line 21, after the words "engage in", to strike out "any" and insert "the business of a contract carrier by motor vehicle in"; and in line 22, after the word "foreign", to strike out "operation" and insert "commerce"; on page 28, line 1, after "such", to strike out "operation" and insert "person to engage in such business"; in line 2, after "section", to strike out "310" and insert "210"; in line 5, after the word "routes", to insert "or"; in line 6, after the word "operated", to strike out "continuously"; in line 8, after "bona fide", to strike out "and continuous"; in line 9, after the word "except", to insert "in either instance"; in line 15, after the word "within", to strike out "60" and insert "120"; in the same line, after the word "this", to strike out "part" and insert "section"; in line 16, after the word "effect", to strike out the comma and insert "and if such carrier was registered in 1934 under any code of fair competition requiring registration, the fact of registration shall be evidence of bona fide operation to be considered in connection with the issuance of such permit"; in line 25, after the word "lawful", to insert "any person, not included within the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, who or which is engaged in transportation as a contract carrier by motor vehicle when this section takes effect, may continue such operation for a period of 120 days thereafter without a permit and, if application for such permit is made within such period, the carrier may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operation until otherwise ordered by the Commission", so as to read:

SEC. 209. (a) No person shall engage in the business of a contract carrier by motor vehicle in interstate or foreign commerce on any public highway or within any reservation under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States unless there is in force with respect to such carrier a permit issued by the Commission, authorizing such person to engage in such business: Provided, That, subject to section 210, if any such carrier or a predecessor in interest was in bona fide operation as a contract carrier by motor vehicle in 1934 over the route or routes or within the territory for which application is made and has so operated since that time, or, if engaged in furnishing seasonal service, only, was in bona fide operation in 1934 during the season ordinarily covered by its operations, except in either instance as to interruptions of service over which the applicant or its predecessor in interest had no control, the Commission shall issue such permit, without further proceedings, if application for such permit is made to the Commission as provided in paragraph (b) of this section and within 120 days after this section shall take effect and if such carrier was registered in 1934 under any code of fair competition requiring registration, the fact of registration shall be evidence of bona fide operation to be considered in connection with the issuance of such permit. Otherwise the application for such permit shall be decided in accordance with the procedure provided for in paragraph (b) of this section and such permit shall be issued or denied accordingly. Pending determination of any such application the continuance of such operation shall be lawful. Any person, not included within the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, who or which is engaged in transportation as a contract carrier by motor vehicle when this section takes effect, may continue such operation for a period of 120 days thereafter without a permit and, if application for such permit is made within such period, the carrier may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operation until otherwise ordered by the Commission: Provided further, That nothing in this part shall be construed to repeal, amend, or otherwise modify any act or acts relating to national parks and national monuments under the administrative jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, or to withdraw such authority or control as may by law be held by the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the admission and operation of motor vehicles in any national park or national monument of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 22, after the word "section", to strike out "310" and insert "210"; on page 30, line 7, after "section", strike out "302" and insert "202"; in line 9, after the words "permit the", to strike out the word "operations" and insert "business of the contract carrier"; in line 10, after the word "thereby", to insert "and the scope thereof"; in line 16, after the word "section", to strike out "304" and insert "204"; in the same line, after the word "and", strike out "(5)" and insert "(6)", a colon, and the following proviso: "Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to substitute or add contracts within the scope of the permit, or to add to his or its equipment and facilities, within the scope of the permit, as the development of the business and the demands of the public may require", so as to read:

(b) Applications for such permits shall be made to the Commission in writing, be verified under oath, and shall be in such form and contain such information and be accompanied by proof of service upon such interested parties as the Commission may, by regulations, require. Subject to section 210, a permit shall be issued to any qualified applicant therefor authorizing in whole or in part the operations covered by the application, if it appears from the applications or from any hearing held thereon that the applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service of a contract carrier by motor vehicle, and to conform to the provisions of this part and the lawful requirements, rules, and regulations of the Commission thereunder, and that the proposed operation, to the extent authorized by the permit, will be consistent with the public interest and the policy declared in section 202 (a) of this part; otherwise such application shall be denied. The Commission shall specify in the permit the business of the contract carrier covered thereby and the scope thereof and shall attach to it, at the time of issuance, and from time to time thereafter, such reasonable terms, conditions, and limitations consistent with the character of the holder as a contract carrier as are necessary to carry out, with respect to the operations of such carrier, the requirements established by the Commission under section 204 (a) (2) and (6): Provided, however, That no terms, conditions, or limitations shall restrict the right of the carrier to substitute or add contracts within the scope of the permit, or to add to his or its equipment and facilities, within the scope of the permit, as the development of the business and the demands of the public may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Dual operation" on page 30, line 24, after "Sec.", to strike out "310" and insert "210", and on page 31, line 6, after the word "section", strike out "302" and insert "202", so as to read:

SEC. 210. No person shall at the same time hold under this part a certificate as a common carrier and a permit as a contract carrier authorizing operation for the transportation of property by motor vehicle over the same route or within the same territory, unless for good cause shown the Commission shall find that such certificate and permit may be held consistently with the public interest and with the policy declared in section 202 (a) of this part.

The amendment was agreed to,

The next amendments were, under the subhead "Brokerage licenses", on page 31, line 9, after "Sec.", strike out "311" and insert "211 (a)"; in the same line, after the word

SEC. 211. (a) No person shall for compensation sell or offer for sale transportation subject to this part or shall make any contract, agreement, or arrangement to provide, procure, furnish, or arrange for such transportation or shall hold himself or itself out by advertisement, solicitation, or otherwise as one who sells, provides, procures, contracts, or arranges for such transportation, unless such person holds a broker's license issued by the Commission to engage in such transactions: Provided, however, That no such person shall engage in transportation subject to this part unless he holds a certificate or permit as provided in this part. In the execution of any contract, agreement, or arrangement to sell, provide, procure, furnish, or arrange for such transportation, it shall be unlawful for such person to employ any carrier by motor vehicle who or which is not the lawful holder of an effective certificate or permit issued as provided in this part: And provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any carrier holding a certificate or a permit under the provisions of this part or to any bona fide employee or agent of such motor carrier, so far as concerns transportation to be furnished wholly by such carrier or jointly with other motor carriers holding like certificates or permits, or with a common carrier by railroad, express, or water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 1, after the word " section ", to strike out " 302 " and insert " 202 ", and in line 2, after the word " denied ", to insert: "Any broker in operation when this section takes effect may continue such operation for a period of 120 days thereafter without a license, and if application for such license is made within such period, the broker may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operations until otherwise ordered by the Commission ", so as to read:

(b) A brokerage license shall be issued to any qualified applicant therefor, authorizing the whole or any part of the operations covered by the application, if it is found that the applicant is fit, willing, and able properly to perform the service proposed and to conform to the provisions of this part and the requirements, rules, and regulations of the Commission thereunder, and that the proposed service, to the extent to be authorized by the license, is, or will be, consistent with the public interest and the policy declared in section 202 (a) of this part; otherwise such application shall be denied. Any broker in operation when this section takes effect may continue such operation for a period of 120 days thereafter without a license and if application for such license is made within such period, the broker may, under such regulations as the Commission shall prescribe, continue such operations until otherwise ordered by the Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subheading "Security for the protection of the public", on page 41, line 12, to renumber the section from "315" to "215"; in line 14, after the word "such", to insert "reasonable"; in line 16, after the word "insurance", to insert "qualifications as a self-insurer"; in line 18, after the word "such", to insert "reasonable"; in line 20, after the word "insurance", to insert "qualifications as a self-insurer"; on page 42, line 1, after the word "property", to insert "of others"; in line 4, after the word "bond", to insert "policies of insurance, qualifications as a self-insurer, or other securities or agreements"; in line 8, after the word "property", to strike out "and/or money"; in line 15, after the word "bond", to insert "policies of insurance, or other securities or agreements", so as to read:

SEC. 215. No certificate or permit shall be issued to a motor carrier or remain in force, unless such carrier complies with such reasonable rules and regulations as the Commission shall prescribe governing the filing and approval of surety bonds, policies of insurance, qualifications as a self-insurer or other securities or agreements, in such reasonable amount as the Commission may require, conditioned to pay, within the amount of such surety bonds, policies of insurance, qualifications as a self-insurer or other securities or agreements, any final judgment recovered against such motor carrier for bodily injuries to or the death of any person resulting from the negligent operation, maintenance, or use of motor vehicles under such certificate or permit, or for loss or damage to property of others. The Commission may, in its discretion and under such rules and regulations as it shall prescribe, require any such common carrier to file a surety bond, policies of insurance, qualifications as a self-insurer, or other securities or agreements, in a sum to be determined by the Commission, to be conditioned upon such carrier making compensation to shippers and/or consignees for all property belonging to shippers and/or consignees, and coming into the possession of such carrier in connection with its transportation service. Any carrier which may be required by law to compensate a shipper and/or consignee for any loss, damage, or default for which a connecting motor common carrier is legally responsible shall be subrogated to the rights of such shipper and/or consignee under any such bond, policies of insurance, or other securities or agreements, to the extent of the sum so paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subheading "Rates, fares, and charges of common carriers by motor vehicle", on page 42, line 20, to change the section number from "316" to "216"; in line 22, after the word "carriers", to strike out "and with common carriers by railroad and/or express and/or water;" in line 25, after the word "passengers", to strike out "or property"; on page 43, line 3, after the word "fares", to insert "and"; in the same line, after the word "charges", to strike out "and classifications"; in line 5, after the word "tickets", to strike out "receipts, bills of lading, and manifests, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation;" and in line 10, after the word "passengers", to strike out "or property", so as to read:

SEC. 216. (a) It shall be the duty of every common carrier of passengers by motor vehicle to establish reasonable through routes with other such common carriers and to provide safe and adequate service, equipment, and facilities for the transportation of passengers in interstate or foreign commerce; to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable individual and joint rates, fares, and charges, and just and reasonable regulations and practices relating thereto, and to the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, the facilities for transportation, and all other matters relating to or connected with the transportation of passengers in interstate or foreign commerce; and in case of such joint rates, fares, and charges, to establish just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof as between the carriers participating therein which shall not unduly prefer or prejudice any of such participating carriers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 15, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(b) It shall be the duty of every common carrier of property by motor vehicle to provide safe and adequate service, equipment, and facilities for the transportation of property in interstate or foreign commerce; to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rates, charges, and classifications, and just and reasonable regulations and practices relating thereto and to the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the facilities for transportation, and all other matters relating to or connected with the transportation of property in interstate or foreign commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 2, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(c) Common carriers of property by motor vehicle may establish reasonable through routes and joint rates, charges, and classifications with other such carriers or with common carriers by railroad and/or express and/or water; and common carriers of passengers by motor vehicle may establish reasonable through routes and joint rates, fares, or charges with common carriers by railroad and/or water. In case of such joint rates, fares, or charges it shall be the duty of the carriers parties thereto to establish just and reasonable regulations and practices in connection therewith, and just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof as between the carriers participating therein which shall not unduly prefer or prejudice any of such participating carriers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 16, to strike out "(b)" and insert "(d)"; and in line 24, after the word "whatsoever", to insert:

Provided, however, That this paragraph shall not be construed to apply to discriminations, prejudice, or disadvantage to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever description.

So as to make the paragraph read:

(d) It shall be unlawful for any common carrier by motor vehicle engaged in interstate or foreign commerce to make, give, or cause any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, port, gateway, locality, or description of traffic in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, port, gateway, locality, or description of traffic to any unjust discrimination or any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever: Provided, however, That this paragraph shall not be construed to apply to discriminations, prejudice, or disadvantage to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever description.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 3, to strike out "(c)" and insert "(e)"; in line 7, after the word "section", to strike out "317" and insert "217"; in line 14, after the word "express", to insert the words "and/or water"; in line 16, after the word "carrier", to insert the words "or carriers"; on page 46, line 3, after the word "routes", to strike out the words "joint classifications"; in line 5, after the word "passengers", to strike out "or property"; in line 6, after the word "vehicle", to strike out the words "or by any such carrier or carriers in conjunction with any common carrier or carriers by railroad and/or express;" so as to make the paragraph read:

(e) Any person, State board, organization, or body politic may make complaint in writing to the Commission that any such rate, fare, charge, classification, rule, regulation, or practice, in effect or proposed to be put in effect, is or will be in violation of this section or of section 217. Whenever, after hearing, upon complaint or in an investigation on its own initiative, the Commission shall be of the opinion that any individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, demanded, charged, or collected by any common carrier or carriers by motor vehicle or by any common carrier or carriers by motor vehicle in conjunction with any common carrier or carriers by railroad and/or express, and/or water for transportation in interstate or foreign commerce, or any classification, rule, regulation, or practice whatsoever of such carrier or carriers affecting such rate, fare, or charge, or the value of the service thereunder, is or will be unjust or unreasonable, or unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential or unduly prejudicial, it shall determine and prescribe the lawful rate, fare, or charge, or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum rate, fare, or charge thereafter to be observed, or the lawful classification, rule, regulation, or practice thereafter to be made effective, and the Commission shall, whenever deemed by it to be necessary or desirable in the public interest, after hearing, upon complaint or upon its own initiative without a complaint, establish through routes and joint rates, fares, charges, regulations, or practices, applicable to the transportation of passengers by common carriers by motor vehicle, or the maxima or minima, or maxima and minima, to be charged, and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 12, to strike out "(d)" and insert "(f)"; in line 18, after the word "express", to insert "and/or water", so as to make the paragraph read:

(f) Whenever, after hearing, upon complaint or upon its own initiative, the Commission is of opinion that the divisions of joint rates, fares, or charges applicable to the transportation in interstate or foreign commerce of passengers or property by common carriers by motor vehicle or by such carriers in conjunction with common carriers by railroad and/or express, and/or water are or will be unjust, unreasonable, inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial as between the carriers parties thereto (whether agreed upon by such carriers, or any of them, or otherwise established), the Commission shall by order prescribe the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers, and in cases where the joint rate, fare, or charge was established pursuant to a finding or order of the Commission and the divisions thereof are found by it to have been unjust, unreasonable, or inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial, the Commission may also by order determine what would have been the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers, and require adjustment to be made in accordance therewith. The order of the Commission may require the adjustment of divisions between the carriers, in accordance with the order, from the date of filing the complaint or entry of order of investigation or such other date subsequent as the Commission finds justified and, in the case of joint rates prescribed by the Commission, the order as to divisions may be made effective as a part of the original order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 14, to strike out "(e)" and insert "(g)"; in line 20, after the word "express" to insert the words "and/or water"; on page 49, line 1, after the word "operation" to strike out "as provided in" and insert "when this"; and in line 1, after the word "section" to insert the words "takes effect" and to strike out "306 (a)", so as to make the paragraph read:

(g) Whenever there shall be filed with the Commission any schedule stating a new individual or joint rate, fare, charge, or classification for the transportation of passengers or property by a common carrier or carriers by motor vehicle, or by any such carrier or carriers in conjunction with a common carrier or carriers by railroad and/or express, and/or water in interstate or foreign commerce, or any rule, regulation, or practice affecting such rate, fare, or charge, or the value of the service thereunder, the Commission is hereby authorized and empowered upon complaint of any interested party or upon its own initiative at once and, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such rate, fare, or charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice, and pending such hearing and the decision thereon the Commission, by filing with such schedule and delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, fare, or charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice for a period of 90 days and if the proceeding has not been concluded and a final order made within such period the Commission may, from time to time, extend the period of suspension by order, but not for a longer period in the aggregate than 180 days beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after hearing, whether completed before or after the rate, fare, charge, classification, rule, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the Commission may make such order with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding instituted after it had become effective. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made within the period of suspension, the proposed change or rate, fare, or charge, or classification, rule, regulation, or practice, shall go into effect at the end of such period: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any initial schedule or schedules filed by any such carrier in bona fide operation when this section takes effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 3, to change the paragraph number "(f)" to "(h)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 13, to strike out "(g)" and insert "(i)"; in line 14, after the words "transportation of", to strike out "persons" and insert "passengers"; in line 17, before the word "transportation", to strike out "circumstances and conditions peculiar to" and insert the words "inherent advantages of"; in line 19, after the word "traffic", to insert the words "by such carriers", so as to make the paragraph read:

(i) In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates for the transportation of passengers or property by common carriers by motor vehicle the Commission shall give due consideration, among other factors, to the inherent advantages of transportation by such carriers to the effect of rates upon the movement of traffic by such carriers; to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient transportation service by such carriers at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service; and to the need of revenues sufficient to enable such carriers, under honest, economical, and efficient management, to provide such service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 1, to change the paragraph number from "(h)" to "(j)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 4, to change the section number from "317" to "217"; in line 6, before the word "public", to strike out the word "the"; and in line 18, after the word "regulation", to insert the word "shall", so as to make the paragraph read:

TARIFFS OF COMMON CARRIERS BY MOTOR VEHICLE

SEC. 217. (a) Every common carrier by motor vehicle shall file with the Commission, and print, and keep open to public inspection, tariffs showing all the rates, fares, and charges for transportation, and all services in connection therewith, of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce between points on its own route and between points on its own route and points on the route of any other such carrier, or on the route of any common carrier by railroad and/or express, when a through route and joint rate shall have been established. Such rates, fares, and charges shall be stated in terms of lawful money of the United States. The tariffs required by this section shall be published, filed, and posted in such form and manner, and shall contain such information, as the Commission by regulations shall prescribe; and the Commission is authorized to reject any tariff filed with it which is not in consonance with this section and with such regulations. Any tariff so rejected by the Commission shall be void and its use shall be unlawful.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 10, to change the section number from "318" to "218"; in line 22, before the word "charges", to insert the word "minimum"; on page 53, line 3, after the word "manner" to insert the following: "but the Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow such change upon less notice, or modify the requirements of this paragraph with respect to posting and filing of such schedules or copies of contracts, either in particular instances, or by general order applicable to special or peculiar circumstances or conditions"; and on page 54, line 2, after the word "section", to strike out the numerals "302" and insert "202", so as to make the paragraph read:

SCHEDULES OF CONTRACT CARRIERS BY MOTOR VEHICLE

SEC. 218. (a) It shall be the duty of every contract carrier by motor vehicle to file with the Commission, publish, and keep open for public inspection, in the form and manner prescribed by the Commission, schedules or, in the discretion of the Commission, copies of contracts containing the minimum charges of such carrier for the transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce, and any rule, regulation, or practice affecting such charges and the value of the service thereunder. No such contract carrier, unless otherwise provided by this part, shall engage in the transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce unless the minimum charges for such transportation by said carrier have been published, filed, and posted in accordance with the provisions of this part. No reduction shall be made in any such charge either directly or by means of any change in any rule, regulation, or practice affecting such charge or the value of service thereunder, except after 30 days' notice of the proposed change filed in the aforesaid form and manner; but the Commission may, in its discretion and for good cause shown, allow such change upon less notice, or modify the requirements of this paragraph with respect to posting and filing of such schedules or copies of contracts, either in particular instances, or by general order applicable to special or peculiar circumstances or conditions. Such notice shall plainly state the change proposed to be made and the time when such change will take effect. No such carrier shall demand, charge, or collect a less compensation for such transportation than the charges filed in accordance with this paragraph, as affected by any rule, regulation, or practice so filed, or as may be prescribed by the Commission from time to time, and it shall be unlawful for any such carrier, by the furnishing of special services, facilities, or privileges, or by any other device whatsoever, to charge, accept, or receive less than the minimum charges so filed or perscribed: Provided, That any such carrier or carriers, or any class or group thereof, may apply to the Commission for relief from the provisions of this paragraph, and the Commission may, after hearing, grant such relief to such extent and for such time, and in such manner as in its judgment is consistent with the public interest and the policy declared in section 202 (a) of this part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 10, after the word "section", to strike out the numerals "302" and insert the numerals "202"; in line 18, after the word "part", to strike out the words "except to the extent, if any, and in such manner, as" and insert the word "which"; in line

19, after the word "may", to strike out the words "deem consistent" and insert the words "find to be undue or inconsistent"; in line 21, after the word "section", to insert the words "and the Commission shall give due consideration to the cost of services rendered by such carriers and to the effect of such minimum charge, or such rules, regulations, or practices, upon the movement of traffic by such carriers"; and on page 55, line 2, after the word "oath", to strike out the words "whenever in its judgment the Commission is of opinion that any complaint does not state reasonable grounds for investigation and action on its part, it may dismiss such complaint", so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) Whenever, after hearing upon complaint or its own initiative, the Commission finds that any charge of any contract carrier or carriers by motor vehicle, or any rule, regulation, or practice of any such carrier or carriers affecting such charge, or the value of the service thereunder, for the transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce, contravenes the policy declared in section 202 (a) of this part, the Commission may prescribe such minimum charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice as in its judgment may be necessary or desirable in the public interest and to promote the policy declared in said section. Such minimum charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice, so prescribed by the Commission, shall give no advantage or preference to any such carrier in competition with any common carrier by motor vehicle subject to this part, which the Commission may find to be undue or inconsistent with the public interest and the policy declared in said section, and the Commission shall give due consideration to the cost of the services rendered by such carriers and to the effect of such minimum charge, or such rules, regulations, or practices, upon the movement of traffic by such carriers. All complaints shall state fully the facts complained of and the reasons for such complaint and shall be made under oath."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 14, after the word "operation", to strike out the words "as provided in section 309 (a)" and insert in lieu thereof the words "when this section takes effect", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) Whenever there shall be filed with the Commission by any such contract carrier any schedule or contract stating a reduced charge directly, or by means of any rule, regulation, or practice, for the transportation of passengers or property in interstate or foreign commerce, the Commission is hereby authorized and empowered upon complaint of interested parties or upon its own initiative at once and, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested party, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice, and pending such hearing and the decision thereon the Commission, by filing with such schedule or contract and delivering to the carrier affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedule or contract and defer the use of such charge, or such rule, regulation, or practice, for a period of 90 days, and if the proceeding has not been concluded and a final order made within such period the Commission may, from time to time, extend the period of suspension, but not for a longer period in the aggregate than 180 days beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after hearing whether completed before or after the charge, or rule, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the Commission may make such order with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding instituted after it had become effective. If the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made within the period of suspension, the proposed change in any charge or rule, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to any initial schedule or schedules, or contract or contracts, filed by any such carrier in bona fide operation when this section takes effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 17, to change the section number from "319" to "219."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 21, to change the section number from "320" to "220."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 9, to change the section number from "321" to "221."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 12, after the word "every", strike out the word "such", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) Every motor carrier shall also file with the board of each State in which it operates a designation in writing of the name and post-office address of a person in such State upon whom process issued by or under the authority of any court having jurisdiction of the subject matter may be served in any proceeding at law or equity brought against such carrier. Such designation may from time to time be changed by like writing similarly filed. In the event such carrier fails to file such designation, service may be made upon any agent of such motor carrier within such State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line —, to change the section number from "322" to "222."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 3, after the word "shipper", to insert the word "consignee", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) Any person, whether carrier, shipper, consignee, or broker, or any officer, employee, agent, or representative thereof, who shall knowingly offer, grant, or give, or solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, concession, or discrimination in violation of any provision of this part, or who by means of any false statement or representation, or by the use of any false or fictitious bill, bill of lading, receipt, voucher, roll, account, claim, certificate, affidavit, deposition, lease, or bill of sale, or by any other means or device, shall knowingly and willfully assist, suffer, or permit any person or persons, natural or artificial, to obtain transportation of passengers or property subject to this part for less than the applicable rate, fare, or charge, or who shall knowingly and willfully by any such means or otherwise fraudulently seek to evade or defeat regulation as in this part provided for motor carrier or brokers, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $500 for the first offense and not more than $2,000 for any subsequent offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 25, after the word "carriers", to insert the words "or brokers"; and on page 62, line 1, after the word "section", to strike out the numerals "320" and insert the numerals "220", so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) Any special agent or examiner who divulges any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of the examination of the accounts, records, and memoranda of motor carriers or brokers as provided in section 220 (b), except as he may be directed by the Commission or by a court of competent jurisdiction or judge thereof, shall be subject, upon conviction in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, to a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 22, to change the section number from "323" to "223."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 17, to change the section number from "324" to "224."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 6, to change the section number from "325" to "225."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 14, after the word "matter", to insert the words "and of any organization of motor carriers."

Mr. WHEELER. On page 66, line 14, the committee amendment is in the wrong place. It should appear after the word "Government" in line 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 66, line 13, after the word "Government", insert the words "and of any organization of motor carriers"; and in line 14, after the word "matter", strike out the words "and of any organization of motor carriers", so as to make the sentence read:

The Commission is hereby authorized to investigate and report on the need for Federal regulation of the sizes and weight of motor vehicles and combinations of motor vehicles and of the qualifications and maximum hours of service of employees of all motor carriers and private carriers of property by motor vehicle; and in such investigation the Commission shall avail itself of the assistance of all departments or bureaus of the Government and of any organization of motor carriers having special knowledge of any such matter.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, after the word "matter", in line 14, to strike out the following:

The term "private carrier of property by motor vehicle" shall mean any person not included in the terms "common carrier by motor vehicle" or "contract carrier by motor vehicle" as defined in this part, who or which transports in interstate or foreign commerce by motor vehicle property of which such person is the owner, lessee, or bailee, when such transportation is for the purpose of sale, lease, rent, or bailment, or in furtherance of any commercial enterprise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 2, to change the section number from "326" to "226."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 8, to change the section number from "327" to "227."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, does the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] desire that the bill go over until tomorrow for final action?

Mr. McNARY. Yes, Mr. President; I think I must adhere to my former expressed view on that point.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is that satisfactory to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, it is.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. In order that I may have opportunity to reflect upon the matter between now and tomorrow, I wish to ask about the references to transportation by water occurring on pages 44, 45, and 46 of the bill, and possibly also on page 47. Is it intended by inclusion of the phrase "and by water" or the phrase "and/or water" to bring the ocean-shipping services within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. Only so far as they are at the present time. We had a separate bill before the committee for the regulation of water carriers on wnich we held hearings, but that bill has not as yet been reported out of the committee.

Mr. STEIWER. Am I correct in assuming that the inclusion of the phrase "and/or water" in the bill now pending before the Senate——

Mr. WHEELER. That simply provides for permissive through routes and joint rates.

Mr. STEIWER. Either by combination of truck and train or by combination of truck and ship?

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. STEIWER. Is that applicable to such service only in intercoastal trade, or is it applicable to other kinds of shipping services?

Mr. WHEELER. It permits all water carriers to enter into such agreements. We had a mandatory provision for through routes and joint rates in the bill, but the shipping interests, the railroads, the brokers, and everybody except the bus lines wanted the mandatory provision taken out, so we took it out in the committee as to everybody except the common-carrier bus lines who must make such arrangements with each other. We made it permissive that the trucks, the railroads, the express companies, and the water lines may make joint rates.

Mr. STEIWER. Is it the Senator's opinion that the permission to which he has referred is more likely to be helpful to the water services than hurtful?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes. It was made only with their approval. The Interstate Commerce Commission cannot force them to make such rates, but if the shipping interests want to make joint rates with some bus company or some trucking company they are permitted to do so.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair), laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations in the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Claro M. Recto, of the Philippine Islands, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, vice Thomas A. Street, resigned.

Mr. HAYDEN (for Mr. McKELLAR), from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the Clerk will state the first business in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Jacob Moore, to be postmaster at New City, N. Y.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That completes the calendar.

TREATY—INTERNATIONAL TRADE IN ARMS AND AMMUNITION

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desired to have notice of the intention to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Executive H (69th Cong., 1st sess), a convention for the supervision of the international trade in arms and ammunition and in implements of war, signed at Geneva, Switzerland, on June 17, 1925.

I now give notice that at the next executive session I shall call up that treaty for action by the Senate.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 16, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 15, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pause in recognition of the kingship of our Lord and Savior. In His earthly life heaven lies mirrored as a radiant sky in the summer sea. We thank Thee that the angels of Thy love have encamped on our right hand and at our left. Enable us to nourish the best aspirations and transmute them into the beatitudes of love, sympathy, and service; these are the distinguishing glory, flower, and crown of manhood. In Thy holy name inspire us with the blessedness of the peacemaker, who lessens strife, heals enmities, and recovers man out of a state of bitterness and hate. Oh, happy is the country whose citizens seek to realize the ideal of good will toward all men. Satisfy us early with Thy mercy, and encourage us with a simple regard for usefulness and a losing sight for applause. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, April 13, was read and approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. UTTERBACK, was called to his home in Des Moines yesterday on account of a death in his family. I therefore ask unanimous consent that he may be excused for the rest of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

SOCIAL SECURITY BILL

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, in the security bill which is now before the Congress, and which is causing so much stir among my colleagues as to the method of creating an old-age-pension set-up, I wish to go on record now in voicing my positive disapproval of the method of paying an old-age pension such as this bill calls for.

The administration is wedded to the payment of a reasonable pension to our aged citizens because of the President's original promise to bring such a law about, but this bill is a "buck-passing bill" and attempts to offer a small amount to the aged conditioned upon this same amount being matched by the State. Anyone knowing the condition of the States of the Union knows that more than 65 percent of these States are more or less insolvent and can in no wise meet this condition precedent; and this being true, such an old-age-pension plan of alleviating the suffering of those who are walking toward the valley without a sufficient amount of money to make them comfortable is, in reality, nothing but a foolish gesture. I desire to go on record at this juncture of the debate on this bill to say that we ought to pass a reasonable old-age-pension bill free from the ties this bill contains or else pass no old-age-pension bill at all. I do not believe in telling those citizens of our country who happen to live in wealthy States that they will be fortunate enough to get their pension because their State is able to match the Government appropriation of $15, while those who live in States not so wealthy, and these are by far the majority States, will not be able to get theirs because their State is not able to match the amount offered by the Government.

This bill should be amended so as to definitely assure our people who reach the age of 60 years and are in need that they will be comfortable and will not be compelled to depend upon local politics to give them that which is righteously theirs. The age should be 60 and not 65.

SECRETARY ICKES ANSWERS LEWIS DOUGLAS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech made by Secretary Ickes this morning in Philadelphia and also to extend my own remarks in connection with his speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, today at 11:15 a. m. the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior and Administrator of Public Works, made a speech before Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa., which was broadcast by the Columbia Broadcasting System, in which he completely answered a speech against the new deal which was delivered by a former Director of the Budget of the United States, Lewis W. Douglas. I ask unanimous consent to insert the speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to extend my own remarks in connection therewith.

I have taken the liberty of headnoting the different paragraphs of the speech. It is as follows:

LEWIS W. DOUGLAS ANSWERED

A month ago Lewis W. Douglas, former Director of the Budget of the United States, had the pleasure that I am experiencing at this moment, of speaking to you on a subject of absorbing public interest. May I say at the outset that my very pleasant association with Mr. Douglas during the time that we were fellow members of the Government not only gave me a very real liking for him personally, but a feeling of profound respect for his ability, his patriotism, and his essential integrity as a man and a citizen. I want to add that in the field of economics and finance Mr. Douglas' attainments are far superior to mine. I have never laid claim to an economic mind. So, in discussing today some of the propositions advanced before this same audience by Mr. Douglas, I do not want to be understood as speaking either with special knowledge or with any assumption of authority.

IMPORTANT QUESTIONS VIEWED THROUGH BLURRED GLASSES OF AVERAGE MAN

I am approaching the questions raised by Mr. Douglas purely from the point of view of the average man. As my justification for so doing I would like to plead that, after all, questions of finance and economics under our democratic form of government must in the final analysis be solved in the interest of the average man by the average man. As a Nation we will go up or down on the basis of our solution as a people of these and allied questions. It would, therefore, do those of you who are students of economics and finance no harm to put on the glasses of the average man, however blurred they may be, and through them seriously look with me at some of the questions in which your welfare and mine are inextricably bound up.

DOUGLAS PROTECTS FEW, DESTROYS MANY—ICKES PROTECTS ALL, DESTROYS NONE

In summing up his very able address to you, Mr. Douglas said: "What is the function of government—to destroy the many for the few or to protect all?" The answer, of course, is implicit in the question which was artfully, although legitimately, put to instill in the minds of his hearers the thought that, of course, the function of government is to protect all and that, in protecting all, one must not depart by so much as the fraction of an inch from those laissez faire economic policies which, if they were not responsible for the dolorous state in which we today find ourselves, at any rate offered no obstacle to the catastrophe that overwhelmed us in 1929, nor since that date, have availed to save us from its consequences.

The penultimate paragraph of Mr. Douglas' address contained this language: "Which is the more brutal? To spend recklessly, extravagantly for the benefit * * * of 10 millions * * * or to spend conservatively for the purpose of protecting the entire population?"

I take it that the "10 millions" referred to by Mr. Douglas constitute the army of unemployed persons in the United States today. I do not know whether his figures are accurate or not. The more or less expert estimate the number of the unemployed variously at from 10 to 12 millions or even higher. But these 10 millions, if we accept Mr. Douglas' figures, do not constitute the total of those who are suffering from unemployment. These 10 millions have dependents, and therefore should be multiplied by not less than 2, if we choose to be ultra-conservative; or, more probably, by 3 or 4, in order to arrive at the whole number of those who are either out of work themselves or dependent upon those who are unemployed. Now I say that the suffering of 20 to 30 millions of people, even out of a total population of 126 millions, is not lightly to be ignored by a Government whose function, according to Mr. Douglas' eloquent peroration, is "to protect all." Be it observed that Mr. Douglas exhorts us to protect the 126 millions, even if his 10 millions have to be sacrificed, by some method that he hints at but does not explain. Listen again to his rhetorical question which is worth repeating: "Which is the more brutal? To spend recklessly, extravagantly for the benefit * * * of 10 millions * * * or to spend conservatively for the purpose of protecting the entire population?" Be it noted that Mr. Douglas apparently thinks we are "benefiting" people if we merely refuse to permit them to die of hunger or privation.

DOUGLAS SAYS HELP PEOPLE, BUT, BUT, BUT

By what method would Mr. Douglas "protect the entire population?" He does not say. What effective step does he suggest that we take in this emergency besides giving up enervating hot baths? The record is silent on this point. Mr. Douglas' address was full of admonitions. We mustn't do this; we mustn't do that. Don't, don't, don't; and especially don't let our hearts grow commiserate as we contemplate the miseries of the ten millions of unemployed. If he made a single affirmative suggestion of a policy designed to correct or even to ameliorate the distressful condition in which we today find ourselves, it escaped my notice. Deep student that he is of economics and of government, he offered us no alternative remedy. Undoubtedly, if he had known what we might do in order to set satisfied feet on the path of economic recovery, he would have told us.

PEOPLE'S CREDIT USED TO PROTECT PEOPLE

We have heard much of balancing the Budget. We have been told many times, and never more forcefully than by Mr. Douglas, that an unbalanced Budget will not only destroy our currency but will undermine our liberties. No one will dispute that these dreadful forebodings may turn out to be true prophecies if our Budget is too seriously unbalanced over too long a period. And yet, in the absence of any statement from Mr. Douglas as to what measures he would adopt to bring about economic recovery, I am wondering whether, if it is the function of government, as he says, "to protect all", we are not justified in drawing somewhat upon our credit to provide at least a minimum of food and shelter for our unemployed and to restore motion to the idle wheels of industry through the employment of labor on useful public works.

AN INDIVIDUAL WILL NOT STARVE BEFORE DRAWING OUT OF OWN CAPITAL—WHY SHOULD NOT NATION ADOPT SAME POLICY?

Suppose any one of you should fall upon evil days; you lose your job or you have a long period of illness. No longer do you have an income to support you, but happily when you were able to work and had work to do you laid something aside. It is your reasonable expectation that your unemployment will be only temporary. In such circumstances what do you do? Do you heroically say to yourself: "Since I have no income I will not eat; I will not call in a doctor; I refuse to unbalance my budget; I firmly decline to cut down my surplus in the savings bank; I am chockfull of the old virtues; I prefer to die heroically rather than to pay for food or medicine out of my capital"?

PRESENT POLICY OF GOVERNMENT WOULD BE PURSUED BY ANY SENSIBLE, SANE BUSINESS MAN

Or take a business, even a great one. During its days of prosperous activity, if it is a well-managed business, it does not pay out all of its earnings in dividends to its stockholders or even in salaries and bonuses to its officers. It accumulates a surplus. A period of depression comes and the business is faced with the choice of losing its customers, of discharging all of its trained personnel or of drawing upon its reserves. Is there any doubt what this business will do even under our laissez faire economic system? Not the slightest. The officers and the directors will reason that reserves were accumulated just to tide over such a situation as this.

GOVERNMENT NOW DOING WHAT AN INDIVIDUAL WOULD DO

Even if the individual temporarily out of employment, or the corporation for the time being fallen upon hard times, has no savings, each will use his credit in such circumstances as I have described up to the limit of that credit. There is no thought of insisting upon a balanced budget either for an individual or for a private corporation in times when income has temporarily ceased, if there are reserves or credit to draw upon. Yet it is demanded in many quarters that the Government in a time of national calamity refrain from doing what an individual or a business concern does as a matter of course when misfortune comes.

PROPER FOR INDIVIDUAL OR BUSINESS INSTITUTION, PROPER FOR NATION

After all, a nation is an aggregation of individuals. No sane man would advocate an unbalanced National Budget as a permanent policy. Such a course would in time produce all of the dire results foreseen by Mr. Douglas. But I insist that it is just as proper for a nation in such a time as this to draw on its reserves and its credits, if necessary to save its people from starvation and bring about economic recovery, as it is for an individual to draw on his reserves and his credit in order to tide himself over evil times. That is what reserves are for. That is what credit is for. In this connection may I say that I may not agree with Mr. Douglas that even such a crisis as this will not justify an unbalanced Budget, but I am in hearty accord with his remark that "man has a peculiar ability to lose his sense of proportion."

GOVERNMENT DOING WHAT PRIVATE BUSINESS WOULD DO

Mr. Douglas insists that a Government Budget is unbalanced if expenditures over and above the amount matched by income are its total expenditures in any one year exceed its income, even if the capital expenditures. In other words, he would not permit any investment in permanent improvements by the Government unless it is charged against income. Yet he suggests no such rule for the individual or for the private corporation. Rarely, if ever, does a private business pay for capital expenditures out of income. It uses its income to meet current expenses, to pay interest and dividends, and even to build up a reasonable surplus. The practice of many corporations in the past has been to issue new securities against large surpluses and give those securities as stock dividends to its stockholders. When it contemplates an additional plant, the average corporation raises the necessary funds by selling its securities. Rarely, if ever, is a capital expenditure budgeted by a private business concern as a current expense to be met by current income.

Just why American business men, who boast themselves to be the ablest in all the world, should not insist upon keeping their own capital expenditures within current income when they demand that the Government do so, is something that my average mind is unable to grasp.

ALL AGREE THAT EMPLOYMENT MUST BE FURNISHED

Mr. Douglas and those who think along the same lines with him are in complete agreement that in order to pull ourselves out of this depression we must give people who are able and willing to work an opportunity to do so. To do this requires the investment of capital, particularly in the heavier industries. Their reasoning seems to be along this line: Business must be stimulated; only the investment of money can stimulate business; banks and private individuals possessing funds refuse to invest; the Government alone has both the money and the will to stimulate business; therefore the Government must not spend any money for this purpose but, on the contrary, must keep strictly within its Budget.

GREATER CIRCULATION OF MONEY NECESSARY—LOGICAL FACTS MUST BE FACED

This line of reasoning, in addition to its absurdity, would seem to me more inevitably and inexorably to lead to the destruction of the America that you and I have known and loved than the course that the Government is pursuing, which is that of stepping into the breach and, to some extent at least, making an effort to stimulate business and thus bring about economic recovery. Exponents of laissez faire as well as those who advocate the policy now being followed by this administration under the leadership of President Roosevelt are in perfect agreement as to the necessity of a greater circulation of money if there is to be a business recovery. The new deal, however, is not afraid to follow through to the inevitable conclusion that if private capital will not perform its functions, public capital must and will. We will not adopt a defeatist attitude. We decline to run away from logical facts. If the circulation of money alone will restore health to the economic system and only the Federal Government is both able and willing to provide that money, then the Federal Government must and will provide it.

HALF OF NATIONAL DEBT CARRIED OVER FROM WAR

Those who would balance the Budget at once without regard to consequences seem to forget that if our national debt is considered large at the present time it is largely so because the administrations during our prosperous years following the war adopted a policy of tax reduction rather than one of vigorous debt reduction. It should be kept in mind that about half of our national debt has been carried over from the war. Failure to reduce this indebtedness as rapidly as it should have been done during the days of plenty appears to have been overlooked as one of the causes of a present unbalanced Budget.

INCREASED EXPENDITURES WILL CAUSE INCREASED TREASURY RECEIPTS

The Budget balancers also ignore the fact that expenditures for capital improvements result in increasing the whole level of incomes, and therefore broadens the tax base, which is the foundation for Treasury revenues. That this is true, there can be no doubt. Treasury receipts for the first quarter of 1935 were 21.6 percent higher than for the corresponding quarter of last year and income-tax payments were from 35 to 40 percent higher.

BALANCING BUDGET NO MORE IMPORTANT THAN MORALE OF AMERICAN PEOPLE

There are many other factors to be considered in this situation that are just as important as an immediate balancing of the Budget. Not the least of these is the morale of the American people. To my way of thinking, it is more important in these times to preserve the morale of the people than it is to balance a set of books.

MONEY IS THE BLOOD OF THE BODY POLITIC

There is still another way of looking at this problem. The reservoir of money in the country must be tapped for lifeblood to infuse into the veins of industry in order to combat the pernicious anemia from which it has been suffering. There are two sources through which this lifeblood can be obtained; one is private capitalism and the other is the Federal Treasury. If one source is clogged, then, if the patient is to be saved, the other outlet must be resorted to. After all, in theory, does it make a great deal of difference which faucet is turned on in order to get this money into circulation? It is the same money regardless of its depository. It is the wealth of America, the accumulation of the brawn of the workmen of America, as well as of the brains of the capitalists of America.

DOUGLAS FAVORS POLICY FOR BUSINESS THAT HE OPPOSES FOR GOVERNMENT

Mr. Douglas, from the remarks he made here, is no more reconciled to the public-works program of the Federal Government than he was as Director of the Budget. He says, "The huge obligations entered into on account of public works, even if no further appropriations for public works are made, will continue for many years to constitute tremendous drains on the Federal Treasury." Imagine a board of directors of a great corporation declaiming against the expenditure of money for the building of a badly needed fabrication plant because the obligation, if entered into, "would constitute a tremendous drain upon the resources of its treasury." This is not merely laissez faire; it is economic sclerosis. Needed or useful capital expenditures constitute assets and not liabilities. And at what better time can capital be put into permanent improvements than in a time of depression when building is comparatively cheap and the employment of men will contribute to economic recovery?

If an investment in a permanent improvement constitutes an economic burden, then no addition to plant equipment would ever be justified. As a matter of fact, the pursuit of this doctrine to its logical conclusion would inhibit not only additions to the plant, but the initial building of the plant itself. It would mean that a man should not deposit money in a bank because the banker might lend it to an industrialist to increase the operating capacity of his factory. The only sound course to pursue would be to tie it up in the traditional sock and hide it under the mattress.

SPENDING FOR PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS HELPFUL

Many billions of dollars could properly be spent in the United States on permanent improvements. Such spending would not only help us out of the depression, it would do much for the health, well-being, and prosperity of the people. I refuse to believe that providing an adequate water supply for a municipality or putting in a sewage system is a wasteful expenditure of money. Any money spent in such fashion as to make our people healthier and happier human beings is not only a good social investment, it is sound from a strictly financial point of view. I can think of no better investment, for instance, than money spent to provide education and to safeguard the health of the people. Sound and well-trained minds in sound bodies would add more to the actual prosperity of this country, measured purely in money values, than anything I can think of at the moment.

COWARDICE OF PRIVATE CAPITAL FORCED PUBLIC-WORKS PROGRAM

It need not be explained again that the Government embarked on the public-works program because of the cowardice of private capital and its refusal to come out from under the bed. Something had to be done about the depression if we were ever to shake it off. And fortunately the great majority of the people wanted to do something about it. They wanted to march out and engage the enemy in hand-to-hand conflict. President Roosevelt had the same impulse, and immediately after his inauguration he set out to engage in mortal combat as insidious and as relentless a foe as a champion has ever faced.

Among the measures promptly advocated and as promptly put into effect under the National Industrial Recovery Act was a program of public works. Without an organization, without a plan, with no precedents out of the past to guide it, the Public Works Administration, launched almost overnight, was charged with the duty of expending the enormous initial sum of $3,300,000,000, to which amount $400,000,000 more were added under the deficiency appropriation bill of 1934.

NO FAVORITES—POLITICS EXCLUDED

In spite of inevitable delays, due to the strangeness of the task, the necessity of building up a strong organization capable of handling the job and the difficulties on the part of local governmental bodies in overcoming legal and financial obstacles in actually putting the money to work, the program has been carried out with due speed. No favorites have been played in the expenditure of these funds. Politics have been rigorously excluded. As competent and qualified a staff as can be found in any private organization was built up on the basis of character and ability alone.

NO SCANDAL—GRAFTPROOF—PROMPT PROSECUTIONS

The money has been allotted without any scandal reflecting on the Government. We have regarded these funds as trust funds and we have surrounded their allocation and disbursement with every possible safeguard. We have never hesitated to expose any intended misuse of this money or to cause the heavy hand of the law to be laid upon those who attempted to make an improper use of it. Our vigilance has brought to the bar of justice a number of men, Democrats as well as Republicans, some of them holding high public office, with the result that the country is thoroughly persuaded that the public-works fund is as graftproof and is as efficiently managed as it is possible for a human institution to be.

P. W. A. SPENDING $3,700,000,000 IN 2 YEARS WHILE PRIVATE CAPITAL NORMALLY SPENDS 11 TO 15 BILLIONS ANNUALLY

No fair-minded person would expect that the expenditure of $3,700,000,000 on public works by the Government would employ as many men or accomplish anything approaching the beneficial results of the customary annual expenditure in this country on construction prior to 1929. The total volume of construction work in normal times in the United States is not definitely known, but various experts have estimated that in the peak years of the 1920's from 11 to 15 billions of dollars were spent each year. Yet captious critics have sneeringly accounted P. W. A. a failure because its comparatively small appropriation spent over a 2-year period did not have the same stimulating effect on business and industry as did an annual sum many times greater during the predepression years.

MILLIONS GIVEN EMPLOYMENT MAKING NEEDED AND PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS

Yet I know that as a result of P. W. A. 109,600,000 man-weeks of employment have already been provided. Of the 19,000 P. W. A. projects, 17,000 have been completed or are under construction, with 11,500 of them actually finished and in use. On practically all of the remainder, contracts have been let and construction is ready to go forward. Over 2,000,000 persons have had direct employment at the sites. Many millions more, employed in mills, factories, quarries, forests, or in transportation services, have benefited indirectly.

SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS—GOVERNMENT MAKES MILLION CLEAR PROFIT

Mr. Douglas must know, but he did not tell you, that many of our projects are self-liquidating; that more than a billion dollars will be returned to the Government with interest, and that the Government is protected by collateral on approximately three-fourths of the reimbursable amount. Nor did he make it known to you that already P. W. A. has sold approximately $75,000,000 worth of bonds taken by it to secure advances on construction projects at a profit to the Government of more than a million dollars.

NOT ENOUGH MONEY AVAILABLE FOR P. W. A.

In view of the record, it is, of course, absurd for anyone to say that P. W. A. has been a failure because it has not taken men off of relief rolls and put them onto pay rolls. The real difficulty has been that not enough money has gone into the Federal P. W. A. program. You cannot do the work of fifteen billion dollars a year with three billion seven hundred million spread over 2 years. Some people either expected too much or they cannot forego even a poor opportunity to criticize.

DRIVING FORWARD TOWARD PEACE, PROSPERITY, AND HAPPINESS OF PEOPLE

Lacking divine power, the Administrator could not perform a loaves and fishes miracle. Fortunately, Congress has just made an appropriation for the continuation of the public-works program. The country may be assured that we are not turning backwards. We are not even halting in our tracks. We are driving straight forward, our hands on the plow, following the furrow that we hope and believe will turn the soil for such a harvest as will add to the peace, prosperity, and happiness of the people.

TAKING THE PROFIT OUT OF WAR

Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, in this address, mentioned the fact "administrations during our prosperous years following the war adopted a policy of tax reduction rather than one of vigorous debt reduction."

It is not generally known that the administration of President Woodrow Wilson adopted a policy that would have drafted war profits to pay the cost of the World War, had not succeeding administrations changed this policy.

If the tax rates that were adopted to pay the cost of the World War had continued in effect, and the Andrew Mellon tax-reduction bills in favor of big business and war profiteers had not been adopted, our Nation would not likely have been in debt a penny on June 30, 1927, and would in all probability have had a surplus in the United States Treasury of $1,542,197,000.

Instead of making the war profiteers pay the cost of the World War as contemplated by President Woodrow Wilson, the Republican administrations of Harding and Coolidge, under the complete domination and control of Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, caused the tax-reduction bills to be enacted, which resulted in Andrew W. Mellon and the other war profiteers escaping the payment of a just obligation and caused the Government to have a public debt on June 30, 1927, of $18,510,000,000, instead of a billion and a half dollar surplus.

MELLON WAS IMPEACHED

Andrew W. Mellon is the same Secretary of the Treasury that I brought impeachment charges against in January 1932. The Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives heard the charges for a week. At the hearing he was represented by counsel who could not defend him because the facts were conclusive that he was holding office in violation of the law and had so held such office in violation of the law since March 4, 1921; that he had used the office to benefit himself, his companies, and his family. Since the charges could not be answered he very quickly resigned and accepted a less important office in a foreign country. He resigned under fire. Evidently it was unpleasant to him to be compelled to resign under such conditions but that was the only thing he could do to save himself and the Republican Party. If the investigation had continued he would have been impeached and indicted. Since he had no defense to the charges it was improbable that he would have escaped punishment. The exposé would have destroyed the Republican Party. These hearings are printed in two volumes.

HONESTY OF DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATIONS VS. DISHONESTY OF REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATIONS

It is interesting to note the absence of graft and corruption during the World War when billions of dollars were spent and the absence of graft and corruption of officials appointed by President Roosevelt during the present administration while billions of dollars more are being spent, in connection with the wholesale stealing and racketeering during the three Republican administrations between the administrations of President Wilson and President Roosevelt.

THE BILLIONS WILL BE HONESTLY EXPENDED

There will probably be isolated cases of dishonesty among the various people who have been and who will be intrusted with the expenditure of the billions of dollars during the present administration, but they will be promptly and vigorously prosecuted just as Mr. Ickes has said in his address. It is my sincere belief that honest and capable people will continue to administer the expenditure of these large amounts and that no corruption or dishonesty will ever occur among these high officials who are responsible.

REPEAL OF EXCESS PROFITS TAXES

The following table discloses the information in regard to the payment of the national debt before June 30, 1927, and is self-explanatory:

Estimate of additional revenue that would have been derived under the income and excess-profits tax rates of the year 1918 continued in subsequent years, with effect upon the public debt by the application of such additional revenue thereto

SOLDIERS' BONUS

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes so that I may correct an error concerning myself appearing in an extension of remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 11.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN], under the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD concerning an analysis of the vote in the House of Representatives on the question of paying the adjusted-service certificates and American Legion secret executive committee meetings, among other things, at the top of page 5466, said:

> Mr. John Thomas Taylor, the legislative representative for the American Legion, who claimed that the Vinson bill was so strong in the Senate where he never asked anyone to introduce it, resides in the Sixth District of Pennsylvania. His own Congressman voted against the payment of the adjusted-service certificates.

I happen to represent the Sixth District of Pennsylvania. I met Mr. Taylor once and understand he resides in the Seventh District of Pennsylvania, so well and ably represented by my esteemed colleague, Mr. DARROW.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I want to apologize to the gentleman for making that mistake. I am glad it was no worse than it is. However, it is true that the gentleman who represents the district in which Mr. John Thomas Taylor resides did vote against paying the adjusted-service certificates?

Mr. STACK. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. PATMAN. So I had only the number of the district wrong?

Mr. STACK. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman would not expect a Representative like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW] to vote for an inflationary bill, such as the Patman measure?

Mr. STACK. Replying to the gentleman's question, may I say that I am not going to crawl into the gentleman's mind or into the mind of Mr. DARROW to find out what either of the gentlemen will do. I cannot do that. I am not infallible. I am human like the gentleman. However, answering the gentleman's question further, I deny there is any inflation in that bill.

Mr. RICH. Whenever we start the printing presses of this country to printing money it is very much like General Johnson's statement in reference to Father Coughlin. It will be "funny" money.

Mr. STACK. I yielded only for a question.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, what is before the House? The gentleman was talking so low that no one over here could hear him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STACK. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], personally I think that when the Patman bill was passed by this House it was a direct answer to Mr. Roosevelt's appeal on March 4, 1933, to chase the money changers out of the temple.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is doing the interrogating here, is a banker. I wonder what he thinks of the bankers' paper money they have been issuing since 1864?

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the final vote on the Patman bill was 318 for.

Mr. STACK. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. With a final count of 318 votes for a Democratic measure like the Patman bill, and only 70 votes against it, the gentleman would not expect such an old-guard Republican like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW] to be one of the 318 who voted for it, would he?

Mr. STACK. Why, I would rather not say what I would expect. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] was invited to Philadelphia, the quondam citadel of Republicanism and Toryism, on Saturday, April 27, at which time over a Nation-wide hook-up the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] will tell the country why he thinks the Patman bill is the best bill and a real recovery measure; and, Mr. Speaker, we will be glad to have you up there or any other Members who desire to come.

THE LAND OF QUIVIRA

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, what is the condition of the country today? The banks have money on deposit, but do not know how or where to loan it. The Treasury of the United States now has more gold and silver in its vaults than it has ever had in its history, but with less currency outstanding than before.

The following table, as prepared by the United States Treasury Department on April 9, 1935, indicates the changes in the amount of the various kinds of currency, standard silver dollars, subsidiary silver, and minor coin outstanding on February 28, 1935, as compared to March 31, 1933:

	Mar. 31, 1933	Jan. 28, 1935
Silver certificates	$376,185,525	$598,926,983
Treasury notes of 1890	1,213,500	1,183,874
United States notes	265,827,482	262,883,448
Federal Reserve notes	3,621,438,735	3,118,678,960
Federal Reserve bank notes	17,191,008	93,693,187
National-bank notes	878,807,515	822,800,465
Standard silver dollars	28,346,934	31,176,351
Subsidiary silver	258,284,125	288,930,954
Minor coin	112,219,848	122,917,162
Total	5,559,514,672	5,341,191,389

Not only less paper money, but even the gold money has been withdrawn from circulation. To be sure, more Government bonds have been issued by the Government, but this gold has no longer any relation to them. At the same time we have many owners of both farm and city properties who need help and cannot get it either from the banks or the Government. While at the same time we have all kinds of extravagant spending schemes indulged in by the Government and more people both on the relief rolls and on the Government pay rolls. All this money either in the banks or in the Treasury should be the lubricant with which to run the business machinery in this country, and without which friction prevents it from operating. Business in general has been going around in circles, trying to find the straight road of confidence that will ultimately lead to business recovery and that state called prosperity.

It is stated by economists that the only way for business to expand is for an expansion of bank credit. This no doubt plays a great part in modern business, but it always has strings tied to it and is subject to manipulation. At present, credit is timid because of too much governmental interference. If you had a million dollars today to invest in some business, what would you invest it in? You would not know because of the uncertainty of its being regulated out of existence by the Government.

Many years ago there was an explorer who lived in Spain, by the name of Coronado, who went out to find the land of Quivira and the fabled "seven cities", where the streets were paved with gold. We thought we had discovered the land of Quivira when we gathered up all the gold and put it in the Treasury of the United States, and then we thought miracles would occur when we cheapened it. Both of these steps we were given to understand by the "wise men of the East" would not only be the stars to signal confidence but would save us from the heretics of unsound money and guide us to the promised land.

The first step, that was when the Government confiscated all the gold, merely transferred the private hoarding of gold to Government hoarding of gold. The second step, the cutting the content of the gold in the dollar, or cheapening the gold, had no effect in this country, because the gold was impotent. All that gold is good for at this time is in relation to foreign exchange, and as we have little or no foreign trade, it is not now necessary for that purpose. No longer is the currency of this country or are its bonds redeemable in gold, therefore all this gold has no use at this time, and might as well been dumped into the Atlantic Ocean or deposited on some desert isle.

On the other hand, much good might have come from both of the above-mentioned steps, and the promised land of better times reached if we had proceeded in the direction in which we started, if this gold had been used as a base upon which the Government had issued the necessary currency. When the gold content of the dollar was lowered, that is, when the gold was cheapened with no expansion of the currency, there was no longer any need for the Government to corner all the gold and further prohibit its circulation and possession by individuals. We could then have gone back to the gold standard. All that I have said concerning gold would likewise apply to silver if it had been confiscated by the Government along with the gold. Instead of establishing a sound currency on the basis of gold, we have established a huge indebtedness based upon unsound and speculative taxation.

Notwithstanding the announced monetary purpose behind the move to confiscate all the gold in this country, I sometimes wonder if the Government officials who initiated this movement did not have in mind the security it would give the Government to possess all of this gold in case of a revolution or in case of war.

In my judgment we should either proceed on a sound currency expansion based upon the gold and silver we have or else return this gold and silver into the channels of trade and commerce; and we should, I believe, remonetize silver and provide for its free and unlimited coinage.

A. A. A. AMENDMENTS BENEFICIAL TO ALL PRODUCERS AND TO ALL ACTUAL CONSUMERS

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made Saturday afternoon by Chester Davis on the proposed amendments to the A. A. A.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if the speech is not one that requests Congress to give authority to extend the A. A. A., then I do not object.

Mr. AYERS. It does.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, a great deal of propaganda has been coming to Members of Congress in opposition to the bill commonly known as the "A. A. A. amendments bill." We Members from the agricultural areas know that this propaganda is inspired by the powerful organization of middlemen in their efforts to continue profiteering from both ends—from both the producers and the consumers. To the farmers who have given this bill serious consideration and to the Members of Congress from agricultural areas, there is no doubt as to the inspiration of the propaganda against this bill. But for the others, I know and you know, Mr. Speaker, that the facts should be laid before them.

The interests of the producer and the actual consumer, in the production and the ultimate consumption of agricultural products, are the same insofar as this amendments bill is concerned.

Mr. Speaker, the Honorable Chester C. Davis, who so ably administers the Agricultural Adjustment Act, explained the purpose of this bill last Saturday in a radio address over a coast-to-coast hook-up, in a more enlightening manner than I have yet heard. He hit the nail right on the head. He did not mince any words. He placed the responsibility of this propaganda opposition where it belongs—upon the "two-end profiteers."

I am sure Mr. Davis' remarks will be enlightening to every Member of Congress and to all readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous-consent request granted me, I include Mr. Davis' speech, which is as follows:

A PLEA FOR EQUALITY

I appreciate deeply this opportunity to speak to the farm families of the United States as guest of the American Farm Bureau Federation, on their hour today. Even more, I feel the responsibility that became mine when I accepted this invitation. For in the time at my disposal today I am going to state, as clearly and as simply as I know how, a few of the problems now confronting agricultural adjustment, and lay before you the significance of some of the moves now under way which, if successful, will sharply limit, if not actually end, the new force in government which has been set up for the use of farmers in the protection of their own industry.

HISTORY OF A. A. A.

The Adjustment Act was passed 23 months ago yesterday. It had its inception when a band of serious men, battle-scarred leaders of organized agriculture in the United States, met in Washington to recommend to the new administration the legislative basis for a new American agricultural policy. Those men were not theorists or dreamers. They had led in every stage of the post-war battle for agricultural equality; they had gone through successive efforts to end the inequalities that were draining the lifeblood from the American farms.

These men knew that the job was no easy one. Prices to farmers were lower, then, than any of them had ever experienced before, yet these low prices—the 12-cent corn, 30-cent wheat, $2.60 hogs, and 5-cent cotton—had not moved into consumption, either here or abroad, all that the farmers had grown. There was no ready export outlet for surplus stock as there had been before the war when the United States was a debtor nation, or after the war when we were lending billions abroad to enable other nations to buy from us while they were building their farm production back and expanding it. You know that story, you have heard it many times before.

These men also saw that while farmers had maintained their full production practically at the 1929 level, their prices had been driven down to 60 percent below 1929 prices; manufacturing industries, on the other hand, had held their prices up to an average level not far below that of 1929 by cutting the volume of their production nearly 60 percent below the 1929 volume. These men knew that six and a half million farmers could not expect to compete with corporate organization for a living share of the Nation's income; and they asked the Federal Government to supply the implement through which the farmers could effectively cooperate. The Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed substantially along the lines of their recommendations.

Farmers have operated under that act for nearly 2 years. Over 3,700,000 contracts with individual farmers, producers of eight of the basic commodities defined in the act, are in effect today. Based on these contracts, supplemental income is pouring out to the farms as it is derived from processing taxes, while the gigantic cooperative effort of these farmers toward a balanced production is aiding to establish and maintain prices for the basic crops nearer to that fair exchange value laid down in the Adjustment Act as desirable for the farmers and best for the entire Nation.

These original sponsors of agricultural adjustment believed that they had blue-printed a mechanism that would be Nation-wide in its application. There were adjustment programs financed by processing taxes for the producers of the great staple crops; and there were marketing agreements backed by license powers in the act for the producers and sellers of whole milk, and of fresh and canning fruits and vegetables and other special crops.

Nearly 2 years of experience have shown up defects in the original provisions of the Agricultural Act. Congress had given the administrators of the act a job to do, in cooperation not only with the producers of wheat, and cotton, and corn, and hogs, and tobacco, but with the farmers of the diversified regions of the Northeast, the dairy belt, and the coast fruit and vegetable States as well. But in some respects the commitment of the job was not clearly backed up by definite provisions which could be used to make the act speedily and effectively workable for the Nation as a whole.

AMENDMENTS ARE TOOLS TO MAKE A. A. A. SUCCESSFUL

Senator ELLISON D. SMITH, the veteran Chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, stated the case the other day. He said: "We have given you a job to do; now we have to give you the tools to do it with."

That explains, in short, why bills are pending in both the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, which, if enacted, will amend in some particulars the Adjustment Act. Some of the amendments relate to the broad adjustment programs for the crops that are named as "basic" in the law; some of them relate to the marketing agreements and licenses. It is around the latter amendments, I regret to say, that a great deal of controversy has arisen; controversy and an astonishing amount of misunderstanding and even misrepresentation of the powers and principles involved in the amendments.

INTENT OF A. A. A. IS TO SERVE FARMERS

The administrators of the Agricultural Adjustment Act believe that Congress intended the law to serve the farmers of one section of the country as well as those of another. As it stands, so much is missing from the brief outline of marketing agreements and licenses in the original act that the Adjustment Act stands like a square table with legs at only three corners—the leg that should support the diversified agriculture of the Northeast, the Pacific Coast States, and the whole-milk producers for the large cities is shown by experience to be too weak to support that corner. Until it is strengthened by a clear statement of powers and limitations with respect to marketing agreements and licenses, the whole table is unsteady.

ALL FARMERS MUST COOPERATE

Farmers of the wheat, cotton, tobacco, and livestock regions may say, "We don't need to use the marketing agreements and licenses; why, then, do those particular amendments concern us?" To them I say, "They concern you in just this way: Unless the act can be made fully effective as a national instrument, serving the 2,000,000 farmers who grow special crops or milk, then, with support from that group missing, the whole act is in danger."

I don't know whether it will be possible in these few minutes to clear away all of the underbrush that has been growing up around these amendments, but I want at least to try. Just what do the amendments provide, and what is the shooting all about? Here are some of the main points.

One amendment provides a way in which stocks of a commodity, on which special Government loans have been extended, may be turned back to the farmers in return for reduced plantings in subsequent years. This is essential if the commodity loans, such as have been made on corn and cotton, are to continue as part of the national agricultural policy. Opponents of the amendments, particularly the organization to which I will refer later, have gone so far as to tell the country that under this amendment we will be asking the cotton farmer to take wheat in return for his adjustment, or the corn farmer to take bales of cotton. Such a statement, of course, is too ridiculous to require extended comment.

Another amendment of some significance will authorize future contracts to be based on adjustment of acreage without requiring reduction, as the act now does. This would provide for judicious increases from the low acreages necessary in 1933 and 1934 when main effort was to work down surpluses that had accumulated before the act was passed. It is in line with the policy of keeping the Adjustment Act flexible to meet changing conditions as they develop.

AMENDMENTS WILL HELP EXPORT TRADE

The House draft of the legislation would broaden the power to promote export sales of surplus crops and their products; certain revenue changes also are set forth in the draft before the House committee, including one that directs us to use two new factors in farmers' cost of production in calculating the parity or fair exchange price of a commodity, the new factors being average per acre interest and tax payment on farm real estate. Another provides that the processing tax may be increased within limits to offset exemptions from the tax for charitable purposes and upon processing by State institutions.

Up to date the provisions I have mentioned have not drawn the fire of concentrated opposition. That opposition has been centered upon the licensing sections, which would enable the producers of whole milk and the miscellaneous crops not susceptible to treatment in the usual adjustment program to operate effectively through marketing agreements. Let me emphasize the point that these special crops constitute the means of livelihood of 2,000,000, or nearly one-third, of the farmers of the United States.

I think I should make it perfectly clear that our present act contains a very brief authorization for the Government to enter into marketing agreements with processors and handlers of farm commodities in order to help carry out the declared policy of the act, which is to assist farmers to establish and maintain fair prices for farm commodities. The present act also—and this is something which I believe the business interests of the country do not clearly understand—has already placed power in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture to license all handlers of agricultural commodities and to revoke their licenses if they do not comply with the terms and conditions thereof. The trouble is that Congress in the original act did not explicitly state that the terms and conditions of a license might be such as would carry out the marketing plan set forth in the marketing agreement. That omission, incidentally, has been raised in court action against one of the farm marketing plans with respect to whole milk.

BENEFICIAL EFFECT OF LICENSING FEATURE

We have suggested, and the pending amendments provide, that licenses may be issued under three conditions:

First. To eliminate unfair practices and charges (and in this respect the license provision is identical with the language of the existing law);

Second. To insure the carrying out of a marketing agreement when the agreement has been entered into by more than 50 percent of the specific class of handlers or processors of the particular commodity whose cooperation is necessary to make the marketing agreement work; and Third. As a reserve power limited by every proper safeguard against abuse in order to carry out a marketing agreement even though a majority of the handlers of the specific commodity within the area covered by the agreement may not have signed it.

In the third use of the licenses we come down to the crux of the difficulty—the point on which the shooting is centered. We have advised the leaders of Congress that if marketing agreements are to work, there must be a final reserve power in the act to declare a marketing plan in effect and to secure its operation by uniform licenses affecting only those shippers or handlers or buyers, or canners, or processors whose cooperation is necessary to carry out the plan. We did not ask for authority to go one step further, and we have asked that this be limited by requiring the approval of the President before the license may be issued, by permitting its use only where no other practical method of accomplishing the purposes of the act for the producers can be devised, and by requiring that at least two-thirds of the producers of the commodity affected must consent to the plan before it is put into effect.

EXPLANATION OF MARKETING AGREEMENTS

Now, I think before I consider the objections that have been raised against that third class of license I ought to take time to explain just what a marketing agreement is and how it functions.

In the first place, the marketing agreements we have entered into have all been limited to a definite and restricted region or area in which a particular commodity is grown and marketed under substantially identical conditions. The Boston or the Chicago milk sheds, the Florida, the California, and the Texas citrus-fruit regions, the California cling-peach region, illustrate the type of area and commodity I am talking about.

The object of each agreement is to secure fair returns upon their products for the producers within the area it covers. The means to accomplish this objective varies with the region and the commodity. With whole milk, we have simply attempted to establish a fair minimum price below which the dealers cannot buy milk, and to insure to each producer his fair share of the whole-milk market he normally helps to supply.

With fresh fruit, the means chosen may be to regulate shipments to the several markets at a rate which the markets can take at a reasonable price, and to prorate the shipments equitably and fairly. Management of the marketing plans usually rests in an industry board composed equally of representatives of producers and of the particular industry, whether shippers, or canners, or processors, whose cooperation is necessary to make the plan work, with an odd man, either chosen by the combined groups or appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

In most cases the business groups concerned show a willingness to cooperate with the producers in the development of a marketing plan. The danger is that if that reserve power to which I have referred, is not expressed by Congress, the middleman has the final veto power when we sit down with him and the producers to work out the marketing plan. Frankly, we are out to help the producers develop marketing plans for their special crops that will stabilize their business and their income. We believe it is of primary concern to the Nation that this be done. The middlemen sometimes are not as interested in that objective as the farmers are. If a small group is in position to say, "no", then without reserve power I have mentioned, the plan ends. We can go no further.

When we sit around the table with the interested business groups and with the growers to develop a marketing plan, we want to be able to back the growers up with adequate powers. If those powers are expressed, I believe we are in position to say from our experience that we will rarely be called upon to use them. That power simply puts the growers in infinitely better bargaining position than they are without it.

PRODUCERS AND CONSUMERS INTERESTED ALIKE

A few illustrations will show why these marketing agreements and license provisions are important to the Nation. If we are to go ahead with a program to put a firm plank under the hard-working men who produce the whole milk for our city markets, we must be in position to hold up the Federal end of a cooperative effort with the State governments, which will require dealers to pay an agreed fair price to the producers. If this cannot be done, there is nothing to stop the dealers at any time from going out and locating cheaper supplies of milk to bring in and break the market. It has often been done.

I am advised that about 25 percent of the grapefruit from Florida this year has sold on the auction markets of the big cities at prices that failed to meet the direct out-of-pocket costs of picking, packing, and marketing the crop, leaving nothing whatever to pay the grower for his crop on the tree.

If the citrus grower in Florida can average a half a cent apiece on the tree for his commercially marketable oranges, he can become again a strong economic factor in this Nation—a buyer of American goods. Middlemen's charges, including transportation, are a fixed charge on his fruit, amounting to three times as much as the grower gets when he is securing a reasonable return. Even when the orange grower gives his fruit away on the tree the cost to the consumer in New York City stays up. It makes very little difference in the consumer's cost whether the grower receives a fair price or whether he gets nothing, but it makes all the difference between success and bankruptcy to the grower.

What I have said about oranges and milk applies equally to potatoes in Maine or Idaho and to fruits and vegetables and dozens of other commodities all over the Nation. We want to be in position to turn this thing around so that the farmer can start with a fair return. We believe that is what Congress intended. We believe that the proposed amendments are vital to its accomplishment.

MIDDLEMEN OPPOSE AMENDMENTS

Now, I want to spend some time on the nature of the opposition that has developed to these amendments and the manner in which the opponents have been working. I recognize, of course, that every business man has a perfect right to oppose any act pending in Congress or any proposed policy of an administrative office. No one questions that or is disturbed by it. During the past 6 months I believe I have discussed the principles of the legislation now pending with representatives of every important food-handling industry in the country. I do not believe the heads of these industries are as concerned over the amendments as some recent activities indicate. These business groups, however, do show a remarkable capacity for cooperation with each other—a capacity which certainly is not equaled in the agricultural ranks.

MISLEADING PROPAGANDA AFLOAT BY MIDDLEMEN

These amendments now before Congress are being fought by every means the groups of middlemen can command. Leading the fight is an organization called the "Agricultural Industries Conference." They have exerted pressure to stop the amendments; they have flooded the country with exaggerated and misleading propaganda intended to confuse farmers and consumers and get them working against their own interests. But just who makes up this Agricultural Industries Conference is not known. It is a powerful and an active group, working for the interests of middlemen; but so far it has kept the identity of those it represents carefully concealed from the public. It puts out quantities of propaganda to the newspapers and elsewhere, attacking the A. A. A. amendments; but the propaganda is anonymous, as though those who put it out had something to conceal.

This organization—the Agricultural Industries Conference—has apparently inspired a concerted effort to cause the publishers of weekly and daily newspapers and periodicals throughout the country to believe that their advertising revenues are in some way endangered by the pending amendments. Newspaper publishers ought to know, and do know, that the purchasing power of the farmers in their territory is absolutely essential to their advertising revenue. To these publishers I want to say, first, that the proposed amendments to the act do not broaden in any way any possible powers of the Department of Agriculture over advertising; second, that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has taken no steps inimical to advertising and has steadfastly refused to do anything which might be construed as an attempt to restrict the freedom of the press through the control of advertising expenditures; and, third, that the operation of the Agricultural Adjustment program has been accompanied by large increases in expenditures for advertising throughout the country.

NO LICENSE ON RETAILERS

I have been amazed by the extent to which these organized propagandists have apparently convinced the retailer, the grocer, and the butcher that in some manner these pending amendments propose to license them and to regulate their business. Now, as a matter of fact, except as the great centralized dairy interests and consolidated grocery concerns buy directly from the farmers, and handle their products in large quantities, these licensing powers would not apply to the retailer at all. The Department of Agriculture certainly has no desire for power to issue and administer licenses just for the sake of licensing. Any marketing plan that has developed for a particular commodity in a particular region would concern itself with that stage of processing or handling through which the commodity passes where the fewest possible number of business units would be required to cooperate.

MIDDLEMEN INSPIRE LETTERS TO CONGRESS

I think Congress has rarely seen a flood of propaganda as one-sided as that which has swept upon it since these amendments were proposed. There is plenty of evidence that this propaganda has been deliberately stimulated.

For example, two batches of multigraphed letters from certain parts of New York and Brooklyn came to my attention the other day. Each batch contained about 150 letters. All the 300 or more letters were addressed to the President. All the letters in each batch were identical, and all had apparently been run off on the same machine on the same date, April 4. Many persons had signed each of the two letters.

One set of the letters urged repeal of the processing tax on cotton. The other set purported to protest against the A. A. A. amendments in the pending House and Senate bills. But in referring to the Senate bill, the letters all protested not against S. 1807, containing the A. A. A. amendments but against S. 807. This, as it happens, is an entirely unrelated measure granting an honorable discharge from the Army to a Y. M. C. A. secretary who had served in France as a chaplain. So far as a quick check of the New York City directory could identify the individuals, they are employees including janitors, porters, clerks, and officials of one textile corporation in New York City. The two batches of letters show that the attack on the processing tax and the amendments is being directed from identical sources. It is a double-barreled attack designed to undermine the act.

CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE ARE DECEIVED

Word came to me from Oregon that representatives of one of the large national food companies whose name is a household word in every home had called up every little chamber of commerce in the State, urging them to rush in telegrams to the members of the Senate and House Committees on Agriculture in opposition to these pending bills which the chambers of commerce had never even seen. Obviously, these people who had been influenced to send in letters and telegrams of protest were not in position to know what they were protesting about.

This organization, the Agricultural Industries Conference, has done a very thorough job. Sometimes I wonder if they have not overdone it. As I see it, the consumer is just as much interested as the farmer in what has taken place. After all, middlemen's charges, including transportation, take about two-thirds of the consumer's dollar, leaving only about one-third on the average for the farmer. I wonder if this intense activity on the part of some of the zealous spokesmen for middlemen's interests will not serve to concentrate the attention of both the consumer and the farmer on how that two-thirds of the consumer's dollar is divided up where it goes.

ATTACK ON AMENDMENTS IS DIRECTED AT ACT

The attack on the A. A. A. amendments is actually an attack on the act itself. It is part of a concerted movement against the whole farm program. That general movement includes the attempt to knock out the processing taxes, which are the financial basis of the entire benefit payment plan of getting farmers parity prices. The movement against the amendments and the processing taxes—which are in effect the farmer's tariff—is fostered by the same processing and handling interests which sought to prevent adoption of the original act. Some of those behind the great lobby fighting the amendments have opposed every important piece of legislation sought by the farmers for the past 20 years.

ACT AND AMENDMENTS ARE FOR FARMERS

In the last analysis, what the farmers of America are working through is an Agricultural Adjustment Act, not an act for middlemen or processors. The act is the culmination of the farmers' long fight for economic equality. But this fight will not really be won until the act is strengthened so that it can be available to all the farm groups in the United States as an instrument for attainment of the economic rights declared by Congress to be theirs.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7260, with Mr. MCREYNOLDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, what I have to say shall be extemporaneous, and I hope to touch most of the numerous titles of the bill. Practically every Member who has spoken on this bill up to this time has prefaced his remarks with a statement to the effect that this is the most important measure that Congress has considered during his incumbency or has ever considered. I do not know that I want to go that far, but I think I can go this far with safety: I think this is the most far-reaching piece of legislation we have considered in the 10 or 11 years I have been here. I do not know that it is the most important, because that is a relative term; but when I say far-reaching, I mean it is far-reaching in the fact that it is going to be permanent.

We passed not long ago what we have since known to be the famous "N. R. A. or the N. I. R. A." law. This may have been a very important piece of legislation, and no doubt was important; but it is not necessarily permanent. According to Hugh Johnson, sometimes it is from earth to egg and sometimes it is from egg to earth; and according to other dignitaries, it is necessary while others prophesy its early repeal. The same thing is true of the big recovery relief act, which we passed a few days ago. This calls for $5,000,000,000 to be turned over to the President, and it was very important, inasmuch as no legislation appropriating any such colossal amount has been enacted heretofore, and I hope we will never have a President who will even ask for that much money in the future, much less demand it. However, it is not permanent legislation and we are surely not going to appropriate that much every year.

This legislation when it is once enacted, if it is of any value at all, it is of value by reason of its permanency, or at least its promise of permanency.

We are launching on a program, several titles of which call for the cooperation of the States. If they cooperate this will be permanent. The title with respect to old-age pensions is to be put into effect in cooperation with the States; in fact, every individual title of the 10 or 11 titles of this measure is permanent, it is far-reaching, and is going to be with us in the next year and in the next Congress and in the next generation, unless sooner repealed.

This is why I say we ought to be careful about it. I think it is safe to say that the overwhelming sentiment of this Congress is in favor of doing something by way of economic security.

I think we Republicans, whether we have wanted to come to it or not, and for one I have for many years been willing and anxious to come to it, have been forced to the conclusion that the world moves on, that progress is the watchword and forward do we range. If this is the case I do not think there will be any trouble at all about passing in this session of Congress without any partisanship, a large percent of this legislation. Most of this legislation is just like immigration and various other great problems we have to contend with in the Congress. They are not factional, they are not partisan, neither are they sectional. They take into consideration the welfare of the entire Nation.

Insofar as this bill provides for the furtherance of public-health measures it is neither factional nor political. If we were to consider that phase of it and if we went back to its origin, I do not doubt we would find it was passed by this Congress under Republican administrations. Appropriations for public health is probably more clearly for the general welfare than any of these titles. In the same way, I feel sure, you could go back to the origin of the provision with respect to rehabilitation and I think you would find that the original rehabilitation act was passed under a Republican administration.

I cite these facts only to show you that we ought to approach this great problem in a nonpartisan way as far as possible, because we are going to launch this measure in this session of Congress and after 1936, no doubt, we will have a Republican President in the White House and therefore it means a lot to the Republicans as well as to the Democrats. We have got to legislate for the future and not for today only.

The Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee worked on this bill just as assiduously as did the Democratic members. Their contributions to the bill by way of discussion and suggestion were as beneficial as those of the Democrats. I wish to pay a tribute to the distinguished Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I may say that never in my experience in Congress have I seen a more fair-minded or a more courteous or a more gentlemanly chairman than our distinguished chairman. [Applause.] He did not break his rule in the handling of this measure, not in the least. He conducted the affairs of the committee in a most honest, upright, and fair manner; and in the consideration of this measure I want the Republicans especially to know this bill was considered just as assiduously by the Republican members of the committee, and we gave it just as consistent and persistent and religious attention as did anyone else.

Leaving myself out, many contributions were made by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee that found their way into the language of this bill. These Republican members, in summing up their ideas of the bill, have prepared a report designated as "minority views." This report does not bind any individual members, neither does it bind the Republicans as a group, but it sets out to you succinctly what the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee think would be a fair general statement.

I agree with the first part of the report submitted by the Republican membership of the Ways and Means Committee. I maintain that this bill separates itself into two general categories:

First. Those which spring from the desire of the Federal Government to provide economic assistance to those who need and deserve it.

Second. Those which are based upon the principle of compulsory insurance.

In the first group are—

Title I, granting aid to the States in meeting the cost of old-age pensions;

Title IV, granting aid to the States in caring for dependent children;

Title V, granting aid to the States in providing for maternal and child welfare; and Title VI, granting aid to the States in providing for public health generally.

Many people in this country deserve assistance of the Government, both State and National, and they are not "charity" people. They deserve it because the iron hand of vicissitude has rested heavily upon them, on many occasions for which they are in no way responsible. There is truth in the statement that the Government, both State and National, owes something to some people. Naturally it does. The Government feels its obligation, and it feels it wants to pay this debt. What is one of them? One of those debts is to pay old-age pensions to those who approach the setting sun of life without sufficient means to provide themselves decently, and another one is to grant aid of the States for the care of dependent children. Let me go into that briefly. I will not discuss old-age pensions at length, because that subject has been discussed here by many Members. I have been in favor of old-age pensions for years. I helped procure for Ohio the law under which that great State now operates. Ohio has probably the most modern old-age-pension law of any of the States, and I have for years advanced State legislation for Ohio that would result in better care for widows whose husbands have been taken away leaving children who must either be separated from the mother or the mother must receive aid. I think every child is entitled to the care of its mother if she is at all worthy. Not many of those who have spoken have said much about title IV, which grants aid to States for the care of dependent children. Several States have laws dealing with this subject. They handle it in different ways—each State has its own plan. We should have some provisions like that in the Federal law. We should incorporate all these beneficent legislative proposals into one plan or group so that the Government could reach out its long arm to help all worthy groups. We are trying to stabilize this business of helping dependent children. We are trying to pass a law here that will be a model for the States, and we are asking for State contribution, we are asking that each State set up its own organization.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I understood the gentleman to say this is already in the law, that is, Federal participation in caring for dependent children. The gentleman does not mean that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No; I did not mean quite that, that we have the set-up made; but I mean it relates to the rehabilitation of children, and we have the germ of that on the statute books.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. We have certain child-welfare provisions on the statutes, but they do not cover this particular phase at all.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I did not intend to give the impression that we already have ample and sufficient legislation. I wanted to leave the impression that in this program of rehabilitation and child welfare, all of these correlated together, and the germ has been planted a long time. It has grown to fruition in the shape of legislation for rehabilitation, and in several of the States it has grown, but in no State has this thing developed systematically, it has never developed as a tree would, well rounded. It has developed under hard circumstances. Take the great State of Ohio, that great commonwealth of which we are all proud. We have a law there that deals with the blind, but it is poorly administered. We have not any provision in this bill with reference to the blind, and I hope when we come to the amending of the bill that some such provision will be put into it, because it also springs from this same inclination to do something for those who need to have something done for them.

The Republican membership on the Ways and Means Committee have by their report favored the enactment of title I, the old-age-pension title, and title IV, the provision for the assistance and care of dependent children.

Title V grants aid for maternal and child welfare. The Republican membership has unqualifiedly endorsed this title and the Republican Party endorses it and we will not yield to anybody, regardless of partisanship, to lay his unhallowed hand on this proposal and claim this legislation is now his own, that it is original with him. It is not legislation that belongs to any party. This is legislation that has sprung up out of a desire of the people of this country to have the Federal Government participate and help out the States in this grand and wonderful work. The same is true of title VI, which deals with public health.

I hope that every provision that I have mentioned, which has been endorsed by the Republican group, finds its way into this legislation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I yield gladly to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has referred to the minority views on this bill. Personally I was favorably impressed with the statements set forth, but somewhat disappointed to find in the report one phrase, which I will call to the gentleman's attention:

> We favor such legislation as will encourage States already paying old-age pensions to provide for more adequate benefits, and will encourage all other States to adopt old-age-pension systems.

And I now read the sentence, to which I refer:

> However, we believe the amount provided in the bill to be inadequate, and favor a substantial increase in the Federal contribution.

Does the gentleman believe, in view of what he knows about the whole question and the condition of the country, that the Government could stand a heavier burden than is imposed by the terms of this bill as drawn?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should say, in answer to the gentleman, that he realizes the word "substantial" is a far-reaching word. Being a good lawyer, the gentleman knows that the word "substantial", as used in the law, means "reasonable."

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman actually favor an increase of Federal contribution?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman desires my position, I can tell him. I think that at this time $15 is a fair approximation, but there are some States and municipalities which pay much more than that amount. Suppose there is a municipality which wants to pay a maximum of $30, then it will take the Federal contribution of $15, which will make a total of $45. That community pays in the ratio of 2 to 1, as compared to what the Government will pay. Some other community can barely match what the Federal Government contributes. Therefore, that makes an inconsistency and unfairness to some municipalities or States. However, I think the maximum of $15 is a fair maximum now. After we have tried this law out for a year or two and we find that there are municipalities which would like to pay more, then it can be increased. I am perfectly willing to increase this to $20, but why not start it within reach of the weaker States?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. COX. The gentleman would not favor a Federal grant to a State whose financial condition was bad, in one amount, and then give a greater amount to a State that was prosperous, would he?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. COX. In other words, the gentleman favors uniformity in whatever is done on the part of the Federal Government, does he not?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This bill up to the $15 is only a voluntary maximum. A State can provide for $5 a month, and the Government would only put up $5 a month. So that the bill already provides a sliding scale. That is for the benefit of the weaker communities. I think that is a wise thing, because there is no use breaking the back of a weak individual in order to test the strength of a strong one.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. With reference to the minority report, in which it is stated that the minority favors a substantial increase in the Federal contribution, is it not possible to find considerable revenue by increasing the inheritance taxes, which might be applied for this purpose?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Oh, I think the gentleman knows the answer to that question without asking me.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. THOM. Was the gentleman's attention called to a letter from an Ohio doctor with reference to the aid granted for crippled children, pointing out that in Ohio the money is distributed through counties, instead of through the State, and that possibly the language of this law, compelling the matching of funds by the State, might exclude relief in the State of Ohio?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. I do not recall having received such a letter. I may have done so. But I do not know how that would exclude relief in Ohio. As the gentleman knows, we need some changes in our Ohio laws. For instance, in a great State like Ohio we should provide some system whereby the various agencies set up for relief should be coordinated. I do not mean that our agencies are inefficient in their own line of work, but in a great Commonwealth like Ohio, where there are many large municipalities and much revenue, the small county should not be thrown out on its own responsibility. It ought to be taken care of. It ought to get some relief from some of the larger counties. This thing ought to be systematized. If I thought this bill would not help the State of Ohio to round out the assistance to her poor people better than it does today, I would not be for these provisions of the bill. The State of Ohio probably does more today than a great many other States, but it does not do as well as it can do. I hope that these different titles will be of great benefit to that great State.

Mr. THOM. But the question I was interested in was this: Is it a fact that in Ohio the money for the crippled children is provided by the counties instead of the State?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know the full details of how that is carried on. The best work done in Ohio, that I know of, is the rehabilitation done under the Federal rehabilitation law, in cooperation with the local authorities. They took charge of a great many crippled children that I know of, and the counties in that way are encouraged to extend themselves to the limit, as well as the county agencies. It is supervised generally by the organization in Columbus, which I think gets its organization from Washington.

Now, let me proceed. As I stated before, the Republican Membership, has by its reports, indicated how it stands on these different measures. I am not trying to say how any individual Member is going to vote or how I am going to vote, but I think it would have been wiser if this legislation had been divided into two categories. There are many Members, both Republicans and Democrats, who believe as I do on that proposition. If we had provided in one bill the relief that I have heretofore indicated, that would all have been consistent. It would all have been right along one line. But there has been added to this bill many other matters. This bill really had its origin in nothing but the upwelling charity of the American people as it is demonstrated by the actions of representatives in Congress and by people generally. Everybody is human and reacts to human impulses, regardless of whether he is a Senator, or the President, or what not. So I say to you that all of these various titles except two had their origin from that inclination, and we ought to recognize that. If it had been carried out along those lines, then we would not be overwhelmed with trouble about a lot of questions that will come up with regard to these other titles. There are many Members of Congress, regardless of politics, who feel just exactly as I feel about this. If they had had their own way, if they had not been lashed into line, if they had not been under pressure, they would not have agreed to this. I am not criticizing them. I recognize that when you are part of a political group you have to go along to some extent; you have to be loyal; but there comes a time when that goes too far absolutely. When more than loyalty is demanded then tyranny begins. It is out of line with your common sense. It is going too far now. We should remember that we are legislating for posterity and not for the 1936 elections.

It is out of line with your own judgment; it is out of line with your own reason, and we ought to stop.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to my friend and colleague from Ohio.

Mr. MARSHALL. Does not the gentleman also think it would have been wiser to have divided the bill still further and separated the old-age-pension titles from the compulsory insurance titles in this bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman is exactly right in that.

The next paragraph of the report deals with the question of unemployment insurance. I shall proceed to a discussion of that at this time. I am not here to try to force my views on you as the views of the committee. I know there are members of the committee and other Members of the Republican branch of the House—for instance, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MARSHALL], who interrogated me a moment ago—who maintain that it would have been better to keep all these insurance matters by themselves. I favor the principle of unemployment insurance and have favored it ever since it has gotten to be a question of vital importance to the people. I do not want to refer to personal experiences too much in my remarks, but in Ohio we have a workmen's compensation law that is looked up to by all the States as a model. It is looked up to by those who administer that law in the United States as a model, and it was selected as a model upon which the Congress of the United States built its workmen's compensation law for the District of Columbia. I had a more or less prominent part in perfecting the Ohio law and in preparing the District of Columbia law. It is a fine thing in principle. Why should not industry carry its load? It should carry its load of injuries that come to its employees; and no State, where they have adopted this type of protection, would abandon it now—I think I am safe in saying that practically every State in the Union has a workmen's compensation law. It has long since passed the stage of experimentation—none of these States would give it up.

There is a relationship between unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation, but there is a very wide difference. Now, this very wide difference, no doubt, will be developed here by some of those who are opposed to this proposition. I am not opposed to it. I do not know whether it is wise to enact it now; I am not so sure about that, but if we are going to enact it, I hope it works itself out, but I think you will find it will not work itself out with quite the harmony with which the old-age-insurance provisions will work themselves out; it will not work itself out with the harmony with which these other titles will work themselves out. But be that as it may, if it is enacted we shall do the best we can by it, cure its mistakes and defects as they arise, and improve its good qualities as we see them develop. I propose to vote for the bill with that proposition in it; I will accept it, as I said before, in the hope that good will result from it.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I want to ask the gentleman a question. On last Friday when I addressed the House I said that we appreciated the fine cooperation which the Republican members of the committee gave to the study of this legislation, and especially do I want to mention, in this connection, my friend who is now addressing the House, and as I understand from his discussion here the gentleman from Ohio is not opposed to the principle of any of the titles in this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Oh, yes; I am. I am opposed to the provisions of title II and title VIII, but I have not come to them yet.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. The gentleman is opposed to the principles underlying the provision for old-age benefits?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman, I think, is making his statement to suit himself. I am just opposed to that principle in this bill. I do not want it qualified.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Is the gentleman opposing it as a general proposition?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I oppose it generally and specifically, if that will help the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the gentleman will yield further I want to pursue my line of thought a little further, and ascertain from the gentleman from Ohio whether he is opposed to the principle underlying title II, which is old-age benefits, and title III, which deals with unemployment compensation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I cannot answer the gentleman "yes" or "no", because I maintain that title III is not identical with title II.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. No; it is not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There are principles involved in title III which are not involved in title II.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I appreciate they are two distinct subjects, but I am asking the gentleman whether he is opposed in principle to either of these titles.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I have stated definitely that I was opposed to title II and opposed to its accompanying title VIII; but I am not opposed to title III. I doubt, however, whether this is the proper time to enact it. I think it would be better if it were separated and put in a bill by itself away from these other provisions so it would have a fair chance and so it would operate on its own steam, so we could find out its weaknesses if it has any and improve its merits if it develops any.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to my genial Democratic friend from the Kentucky mountains.

Mr. MAY. I think the gentleman from Ohio has expressed one thought that is almost universal in the House of Representatives, and that is the proposition that all these various subjects ought to have been separated in this legislation so that if a Member wanted to vote for old-age pensions, although opposed to some other title in the bill, he would have the opportunity to vote for it without having to vote for or against all the other titles in the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman has the right idea, and I think he has expressed the overwhelming sentiment of the House except that based on partisanship. It is unfortunate that this overwhelming sentiment is not permitted to crystallize into legislation without White House intervention. I congratulate my Kentucky friend for the attitude he is taking.

Mr. MAY. In the consideration of the unusually large appropriation bill we had a double-barreled proposition where we had to vote for both relief and public works. This matter should be presented to us in such a way that we could vote against one proposition without voting against all of them.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; I agree most heartily with the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. I think that practice ought to stop and the Members should be given a chance to vote for the things that they want to vote for. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I agree with the gentleman, and that has been the practice of this administration from the time of the enactment of the Economy Act down to the present time. I am glad that the Members applaud the statement of my Democratic friend, and I hope that those who applaud will vote that way when we move to separate these titles later. The policy of the administration has been to join unpopular measures with popular measures and to thereby compel the passage of unpopular measures on the strength of a popular measure. When are you on the Democratic side going to rise up and say that you are Democrats? When are you going to rise up and say that you have in your system some blood of John C. Calhoun and those other distinguished Democrats who stood up for State rights? Are you going to continue to allow State lines to be eradicated? Are you going to let the Chief Executive transcend the rights of the legislative branch? When are you, with your majority of 3 or 4 to 1, going to wake up? When are you going to strike off the yoke? I am glad that one Democrat from the mountain section has risen and given a reason for the faith that is within him. It is seldom that any Democrat stands up in this House and eulogizes Andrew Jackson. Democracy today is not what it used to be.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman will remember that I voted against the rule for the consideration of the large appropriation bill because I wanted these things separately considered.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. ARNOLD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ARNOLD. Under the rule under which this bill is being considered, have not the Members of the House the right to vote up or down every single proposition in the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; they have.

Mr. ARNOLD. And they have that right with reference to every title separately?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I say that the gentleman is advancing that as a compliment to his party. The gentleman has no right, and the Democrats as a whole have no right, to claim any compliment for reporting out this bill under an open rule. Why? Because you did not dare report it out any other way. That is the reason. A canvass of your own Members showed that you did not dare vote out a closed rule. You were forced to bring this bill out under an open rule, and that is the kind of rule that should always be brought upon the floor of this House for the consideration of any important measure. If a gag rule had been offered, it would have met the opposition of a united Republican vote and of a large group of Democrats who occasionally venture far enough to yet say their life is their own.

Mr. ARNOLD. I understood the gentleman to say that the Members of this body had to take this bill as a whole with these several titles. I know the gentleman does not mean to make that statement when we have the right to vote out any section or title of this bill and we also have the right to consider and adopt any germane amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not think the gentleman heard all of my discussion, because I stated the ultimate result and the ultimate effect was due to partisanship. That is what I say now.

Mr. Chairman, I proceed to the last paragraph of the report, which deals with title II and VIII. I may say that those on the Democratic side will not take advice from me, and I do not want to inflict my advice on the Republican side, but it is my opinion titles II and VIII should come out of this bill. They have no business in there. They are being linked with these other popular titles and will be forced to passage if possible. It is an encroachment upon a public sentiment that wells up from the finest impulses of the American heart.

It is purely a business transaction loaded upon charity, you may say, and has no real relation to these other bills. You Democrats ought to rise up in your might and strike out these sections, because future generations, if these titles are stricken, will rise up and call you blessed. I am a friend to this legislation, and I have no hesitancy in saying that the legislation would be much improved. When the people find that you have saddled upon old-age pensions and these poor mothers and these weak and crippled children these objectionable titles, they will demand to know the reason why. They will be entitled to know.

There was testimony before the committee to the effect that in one section of the country one-half of the births in that section were unattended by a physician, and who would refuse to continue a work now being done to relieve that situation. I have voted for this principle several times. Now, let us make it a part of our permanent national policy.

Why do you load on this bill an insurance matter? Titles II and VIII are strictly matters of insurance. Under these titles a wage earner is compelled to take this compulsory insurance whether he wants to take it or not. These two titles have been a thorn in the side of the administration, the "brain trust", and the Democratic Members. In the Ways and Means Committee they have done their best to remove their unconstitutional features, but they have failed. Verily a leopard cannot change his spots. Under these titles the Government is put into the insurance business on a tremendous scale. The following table illustrates that under this bill it is estimated that by 1970 the receipts into this insurance fund will reach over two thousand million annually and that the insurance fund will have a reserve of nearly thirty-three thousand million. This figure is so large that the human mind can hardly comprehend it. Why not wait until we can see our way clear before we venture on these untried courses?

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, the report filed by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee says not a word about the constitutionality of these titles no. II and no. VIII. I presume this omission is a studied omission on their part. They seek thereby to keep from the Membership the fact that this question gave them more worry than all the rest of the bill put together. In many sessions of the committee, arguments were advanced to show that these titles are unconstitutional. Why has nothing been said about that matter on the floor of this House? Why did not the chairman of the committee address himself for a few minutes at least to the constitutionality question? I will tell you why. It is because he knows and the committee knows that when the Supreme Court comes to interpreting this measure, the Supreme Court may look as it generally does to the discussions had in committee and to the committee reports as to what was said, and to what is said in the debates on the floor of the House. If I do not say anything else on the floor, I want to say that one Republican at least rose up in his weak way, and to the best of his ability, and protested against this procedure and wants the records here to show of these numerous protests as to the unconstitutionality of these titles. I want this to be positive in the RECORD. Let the Supreme Court know, if it does read the RECORD of Congress on this proposition, that one individual rose and said that he doubted the constitutionality of this bill, and that the facts are that great fear has been expressed by many members of the committee in this respect.

In support of my position, may I say that this bill first came to the Congress for consideration in the form of the Lewis bill. Later Mr. DOUGHTON, the chairman of the committee, introduced an identical bill. Many changes have been made in the bill since then. When we first commenced hearings on it, the "brain trusters" and the administration spokesmen and even Miss or Mrs. Perkins thought it was in perfect form, but there have been more changes made and more legislative carpentry done upon it than any other bill that has gone through this Congress that I know anything about. They have changed it in many ways. These provisions covered by titles II and VIII that were once all together have been taken out and separated. This was done after weeks of hearings for no other reason than that they were afraid of the test as to its constitutionality.

Mr. Chairman, the constitutionality of these two titles is going to depend on this point: Are they related or are they separate? I would like to have those Members who are not lawyers remember that that is going to be the constitutional test, namely, are titles II and VIII related? If they are not related in any way, then this bill is probably constitutional. If they are related, then the question arises, what about the relationship and how does the relationship interfere with its constitutionality?

How did the committee or the group who wrote this bill interpret this proposition? Let me tell you how they interpreted it. They put the provisions of these two titles together. They put the tax provision and the appropriating provision together, and the Attorney General's Office no doubt passed upon it. They no doubt thought it was constitutional.

If you will look at the report you will find there are 500 or 1,000 names of distinguished people who appear to have collaborated in the preparation of this bill. The list includes dozens of prominent and near prominent persons, and many unheard-of persons. No doubt all were capable and unselfish. In this list were many professors.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I was about to ask, how did the "brain trust" and the Attorney General interpret this measure? Here is the way they interpreted it. They connected them together and after we had been in session about 7 weeks and when we went to work to draw it up, what happened? We have a man here who works for us in the Congress who is not a Member of the Congress, a man who works as the head of the Legislative Reference Bureau. Do you know what he told us? He told us that a lot of this bill was unconstitutional, and do you know who is entitled to the credit for drawing up this last bill? It is not the Attorney General; it is none other than Mr. Beaman, and I here and now nominate Mr. Beaman for the Attorney Generalship of the United States. He ought to be down there, because he is the man who told them what to do. They have tried the best they could to separate these propositions so that title VIII could pass the test as a taxing title and so that title II could be acceptable as an appropriating title and would be free from constitutional objections.

Mr. Chairman, title II and title VIII are not separate in the new bill, and let me show you why. They may be physically separate but they are one in spirit. Under title II you will find what? You will find that all the exemptions under title II are just exactly as under title VIII. See pages 14 and 46 of the new bill. And all the taxes levied under title VIII and all the designations and classifications under title II are carried in title VIII, word for word. See pages 46 and 14 of the new bill. There is not a line taken out. They are just exactly alike. Why are the majority Members so careful not to make the slightest reference to the connection between titles II and VIII. The beneficiaries under title II are the identical persons taxed under title VIII.

In a brief filed by the Attorney General they cite a lot of decisions, but this brief appears nowhere in the record of the proceedings of the committee; neither do the long speeches, consuming nearly 2 days by representatives from the Attorney General's office. I maintain that titles II and VIII should be stricken from the bill because they do not aid the more important provisions of the bill, but are a weight on the bill. I also maintain that these titles are unconstitutional because title VIII is not a tax-levying title but is in reality a part of the plan to put compulsory annuities into effect, and that title II depends absolutely upon title VIII for its premiums. I further maintain that title II invades the rights of the State and that there is no constitutional provision granting Congress the power to legislate in the manner sought in title II.

In the Attorney General's brief he seeks to establish the proposition that the courts in passing upon the validity of a statute which on its face purports to be a tax measure will not consider the question whether the motive of the legislative body was some other than that to raise revenue. He cites as proof of his contention the case of Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wall. 533) and McCray v. United States (195 U. S. 27, 59).

Neither of these cases is exactly in point, for in both of these cases the statute in question bore every evidence on its face of being a taxing statute. The court in each of these cases held that it was not concerned with the motive of the legislative body provided the statute on its face recited its proposition clearly. In neither of these cases was there any accompanying sections that were dependent upon each other. In this bill that we are now considering, title II is absolutely of no consequence without title VIII. And title VIII is inserted in the bill for no other purpose than to furnish the premiums with which to operate title II. These two titles, taken together, put the Government into the insurance business. That is their purpose. Title VIII is not a revenue-raising section but it is the means by which premiums are forced from the wage earners of the country without their consent.

They cite the case of United States v. Doremus (249 U. S. 86) as a case proving the same point. That case is not in point with what is sought to be done in this bill, for in that case the law was attacked on the ground that the regulations seeking to enforce the revenue-collecting feature of the law were unconstitutional. The court held that the law in question was on its face and in fact a revenue-raising measure and that was its principal purpose. It further held that the regulations sought to be declared illegal were legal regulations in that they assisted the taxing authorities to enforce the taxing provisions of the statute.

They also cite the case of Manano v. Hamilton (292 U. S. 40). On page 46 the following language, which refutes their contention, appears in the opinion, which is a very short one:

> The statute here under review is in form plainly a taxing act, with nothing in its terms to suggest that it was intended to be anything else. It must be construed, and the intent and meaning of the legislature ascertained, from the language of the act, and the words used therein are to be given their ordinary meaning unless the context shows that they are differently used.

In this brief the following language appears:

> The conclusion is inescapable that the motive of the Congress in enacting a law which, on its face, purports to be a revenue measure, is immaterial and will not be considered by the courts in passing upon its validity.

This is not a correct proposition of law. There is an abundance of authority to prove that such a proposition is entirely too narrow and restricted. In fact, it is not a fair conclusion for a partisan even to deduce from the cases cited.

There is an abundance of cases decided by the Supreme Court which holds that the Court is much concerned with the real purpose of any law the constitutionality of which is brought in question before the Court. In the Child Labor case as reported in Two Hundred and Fifty-ninth United States Reports, page 20, Chief Justice Taft, in holding the law unconstitutional, says:

> In the light of these features of the act, a court must be blind not to see that the so-called "tax" is imposed to stop the employment of children within the age limits prescribed. Its prohibitory and regulatory effect and purpose are palpable. All others can see and understand this. How can we properly shut our minds to it?
> It is the high duty and function of this Court in cases regularly brought to its bar to decline to recognize or enforce seeming laws of Congress, dealing with subjects not intrusted to Congress but left or committed by the supreme law of the land to the control of the States. We cannot avoid the duty even though it require us to refuse to give effect to legislation designed to promote the highest good. The good sought in unconstitutional legislation is an insidious feature because it leads citizens and legislators of good purpose to promote it without thought of the serious breach it will make in the ark of our covenant or the harm which will come from breaking down recognized standards. In the maintenance of local self-government, on the one hand, and the national power on the other, our country has been able to endure and prosper for near a century and a half.
> Out of a proper respect for the acts of a coordinate branch of the Government, this Court has gone far to sustain taxing acts as such, even though there has been ground for suspecting from the weight of the tax it was intended to destroy its subject. But, in the act before us, the presumption of validity cannot prevail, because the proof of the contrary is found on the very face of its provisions. Grant the validity of this law, and all the Congress would need to do, hereafter, in seeking to take over to its control any one of the great number of subjects of public interest, jurisdiction of which the States have never parted with, and which are reserved to them by the tenth amendment, would be to enact a detailed measure of complete regulation of the subject and enforce it by a so-called "tax" upon departures from it. To give such magic to the word "tax" would be to break down all constitutional limitation of the powers of Congress and completely wipe out the sovereignty of the States.

Also in the case of Hill v. Wallace (259 U. S., 66), the following language appears in the opinion of the Court:

> It is impossible to escape the conviction, from a full reading of this law, that it was enacted for the purpose of regulating the conduct of business of boards of trade through supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture and the use of an administrative tribunal consisting of that Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General. Indeed the title of the act recites that one of its purposes is the regulation of boards of trade.
> The manifest purpose of the tax is to compel boards of trade to comply with regulations, many of which can have no relevancy to the collection of the tax at all.
> The act is in essence and on its face a complete regulation of boards of trade, with a penalty of 20 cents a bushel on all "futures" to coerce boards of trade and their members into compliance. When this purpose is declared in the title to the bill, and is so clear from the effect of the provisions of the bill itself, it leaves no ground upon which the provisions we have been considering can be sustained as a valid exercise of the taxing power.

I should like to go further into the discussion of this feature of titles II and VIII of this bill, but I hope I have said enough to impress you with my sincerity and with the fact that this is a very important matter and that you should give it your best attention. I think it is as much the duty of the Attorney General to give both sides of these matters careful consideration as it is our duty to do so. I do not think he is justified in taking a partial position. I am glad that the people of the country yet have a right to look hopefully to the Supreme Court as one branch of the Government that will give consideration to both sides of any case. Title VIII is not a revenue title. This whole bill is not a revenue bill. It is an economic-security bill. Sometimes I think that Mr. CONNERY, of Massachusetts, is absolutely right when he insists that there is some question whether this bill should ever have been considered by the revenue-raising committee and that it might properly have been referred to the Labor Committee to consider it from the standpoint of its being an economic-security bill. I should like to ask the Democratic leaders who are members of the Rules Committee why they found it necessary to bring this bill up for consideration under a special rule if the bill is rightfully a revenue bill? We all know that a revenue bill properly reported from the Ways and Means Committee is a privileged bill, and it is not necessary for a special rule to be ordered for the consideration of a privileged bill.

My friends, I repeat that title I and title VIII were one and the same in the minds of those who conceived this measure. They were one and the same in the original bill. They have been separated by letter and word, but they are one in spirit. Who is it that has not heard that great sentence, "The letter killeth but the spirit quickeneth and maketh alive"? When the Supreme Court comes to interpret this bill, if it becomes a law, I am thankful for the faith that the American people yet have in that high tribunal that it will give heed to the spirit of legislation as well as to the letter.

Under our theory of government the State is the real nucleus of power and authority. Some people have the mistaken idea that government is built up from the family community and the township to the county and from the county to the State and from the State to the Nation. This is not the case. Originally we had 13 States. These States passed their own laws providing for their lesser subdivisions of counties, townships, and municipalities. These 13 States also gave up a sufficient of their own sovereignty to establish a Federal Government. The States built down to the lowest unit and the States built up to the highest unit. The Congress of the United States can enact only such legislation as is permitted under the Constitution. Why harm and hinder these great programs of economic security, with which we all agree, by attaching to them provisions that load them down with uncertainty as to merit, as to justice, and as to constitutionality? I beseech of you that you give these far-reaching propositions the thought and consideration that true, patriotic citizens should give who have no other purpose in mind than the best interests of the Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN].

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has tried to lead the House to believe that this is not a tax bill, that it is not a revenue bill, and therefore the Ways and Means Committee did not have jurisdiction over it. The gentleman knows better than that. He sat with the committee for 8 weeks, and he knows that among the provisions of the bill is an imposition of a 5-percent tax, which brings it within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. His contention is so absurd that I am astonished.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman does not contend that the spirit of the bill is a revenue bill?

Mr. CULLEN. The spirit of the law or the bill provides for a tax, and therefore the jurisdiction was rightly in the Committee on Ways and Means.

Now, in regard to his statement about the titles, no individual Member is denied the right to vote for any particular title, and therefore that argument falls to the ground. Of course, the bill has been changed. Whenever you have structural legislation, you must make changes to meet conditions. The main principles of the bill are preserved. The gentleman from Ohio participated in all the hearings. He loaned the committee his wisdom, ability, and experience to perfect the bill, and yet he comes here and says that we have to go down the line with our party. The gentleman would have to go down the line with his party if the shoe was on the other foot.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman knows that there is not a line in it from the two distinguished gentlemen who prepared it; the gentleman knows that that was thrown out, and you had to send out and get another.

Mr. CULLEN. Thanks to the wisdom of the committee, some things were thrown out and it was built up again. The gentleman was one of the minority, and the committee had the benefit of his information, his experience, and his wisdom. The gentleman says that this security legislation is a party question. That is the most absurd thing I ever heard of.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is nothing strange about that, for a committee in executive session to call in advice from those in the Government service.

Mr. CULLEN. Certainly, you are right, Mr. McCORMACK. They sat in and participated and suggested things about the construction of it. The minority said, "We will not vote against it", but they did cast a half a vote against it by voting "present."

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman found out yet when the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee made up their mind to vote against title II?

Mr. CULLEN. After they had several conferences in which I am led to believe they did not always agree. It would not be surprising if some of the minority would vote for the bill in its entirety, including title II.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not want to let the facetious remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] go unchallenged. There might have been some discord among the Republicans about title II and title VIII, but the gentleman knows that all through the discussion the members of the minority opposed that, and, furthermore, the gentleman knows that there are members on his side who opposed this proposition. The gentleman from Massachusetts was not always in unison with that measure.

Mr. McCORMACK. The views of the gentleman from Massachusetts were substantially incorporated when the so-called "voluntary annuity" was reserved by the committee for further study.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Chairman, in the statement that I am about to make in regard to this legislation, I respectfully ask not to be interrupted until the conclusion of the statement.

The economic-security bill which is now before us for final consideration is one of the most important pieces of legislation which have come before the House for many years. Nearly a year ago, on June 8, our great humanitarian President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, transmitted a message to Congress advocating social-security legislation, and shortly thereafter he created by Executive order a committee whose purpose was to make a comprehensive study of the many complicated factors in industrial life which lead to dependency and destitution, and make proper recommendations for overcoming such causes of insecurity.

While we are now considering old-age and unemployment-insurance legislation it is nevertheless not entirely new to the country because it has been advocated by fraternal organizations, and particularly the Eagles.

Our great President himself advocated it when he was Governor of the State of New York, at which time he was already thinking of the masses of the people of our country.

Insofar as Congress is concerned, this is pioneer legislation of a humanitarian character, and the bill reported to the House by the Committee on Ways and Means is based upon the recommendations of the President in his message to both Houses of Congress on January 17 of this year.

The Ways and Means Committee, to whom the President's recommendations for security and unemployment-insurance legislation were referred, held extensive hearings on the bill and after 8 weeks of intensive work the committee reported a bill to the House which, in my opinion, is as near perfect as possible. The committee gave the most thorough study to every phase of this important subject of social-security and unemployment insurance.

The economic-security bill presents the most substantial evidence to date that our twin objectives of recovery and reform are found in an inseparable unity of purpose and action. While the horror of the depression is still fresh upon our memory, we are taking decisive steps to shake off its lingering aftermath, to prevent its recurrence, and to set up safeguards for those who may suffer in the future from economic forces beyond the control of the individual.

Old age, unlike unemployment, is a natural consequence that descends upon mankind everywhere with unfailing regularity. Therefore the bill treats this problem primarily on a national basis. It sets up a Federal system of compulsory old-age insurance, which will provide at least the minimum requirements for health and decency to every worker who has reached 65 years of age. At the same time, the measure is careful to make special provisions for workers who are now so near the retirement age that they will have no chance to insure themselves by their own contributions.

Another important feature of this bill is the provision for unemployment insurance. There is no reason why the worker unemployed through no fault of his own should be more neglected than machinery that is idle during the slack season. There is no justification for giving the man who has grown old and tired in the performance of his life's work no consideration for his efforts. The day has passed when the wealthiest nation in the world can remain the most delinquent in its treatment of the most pressing of all social questions.

The proposed legislation is not confined to old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. Federal subsidies are provided to help the States in caring for dependent children, in promoting maternal and child welfare, in aiding the crippled, and in advancing public health. While most of this money is to be allocated among the States on a dollar-for-dollar matching basis, there is enough flexibility to safeguard the poorer localities which are unable to help themselves.

Of course, it must be realized that the bill does not represent the zenith of perfection in social-security legislation. But considering that we are venturing into a region that heretofore has been practically unexplored by the National Government in this country, the bill does embody a step forward that is almost unparalleled in its boldness and scope. We are breaking the ground for a structure in which economic wisdom and humanitarian impulses shall be blended in perfect proportion to protect millions of our citizens from undernourishment during their formative years, from privation in their prime of life, and from destitution in their old age.

The President emphasized his belief that the Economic Security Committee had evolved a program that would appeal to the sound sense of the American people.

It had not attempted the impossible—

He said—

nor has it failed to exercise sound caution and consideration of all the factors concerned; the national credit, the rights and responsibilities of the States, the capacity of industry to assume financial responsibilities, and the fundamental necessity for proceeding in a manner that will merit the enthusiastic support of citizens of all sorts.

Another principle, the President said, was that the actual management of the plan, except possibly in the case of old-age insurance, should be left to the States, subject to standards established by the Federal Government. He held, however, that the financial management of funds and reserves should be retained as a trusteeship by the United States Treasury.

Legislative proposals to carry out these principles were incorporated in the bill, which has been worked out in collaboration with the men and women who compiled the social-security report for the President as well as the Ways and Means Committee.

The President stressed the importance of State legislation, and to this end asked the speediest action by Congress.

In that connection I might say that Governor Lehman, of New York, which is also my State, advocated the adoption of social-security and unemployment legislation modeled on the bill now pending in Congress. I am happy to state that both the Assembly and Senate of the New York Legislature has approved such a measure, and it is now before the Governor for signature.

In view of New York's record as to the adoption of all social legislation, it is not surprising that this should be the fourth State in the Nation to adopt unemployment insurance. I believe that only Utah, Wisconsin, and Washington preceded New York.

There are other proposals pending in the Congress on this subject, yet in my opinion it is wise for us to proceed cautiously and carefully in this initial legislation. Therefore, I believe that the bill before us is a step forward in the direction of economic-security and unemployment insurance and the careful study that it has received in the hands of the Ways and Means Committee, led by that rugged and sincere personality, Chairman DOUGHTON, who guided us through this complex problem, I sincerely hope and trust when the debate is closed on this bill and when we proceed to the 5-minute rule, that the House in its wisdom will keep it intact in every particular and pass it just as it has come from the Ways and Means Committee and uphold the hands of our great President in the adoption of this humane legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is correct in saying that this legislation is not new in America, and he should also include foreign countries which adopted it and where it is working successfully.

Mr. CULLEN. Yes. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

[From a speech by Charles W. Eliot, president of Harvard, Faneuil Hall, July 4, 1911]

A declaration of independence, if it were written now, would among other things set forth that every citizen in a free State has an inalienable right to that amount of employment which will yield for him and his family a decent living; that every worker has a right to be insured against the personal losses due to acute sickness, chronic invalidism, injuries through accident, and the inevitable disabilities of old age.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I enter this discussion with a full appreciation of the lack of time to explore fully the values of this bill, and that it is only possible to touch upon some of its ruling considerations. I ask my colleagues under such circumstances to excuse me from answering particular questions, which might be better deferred, I think, until we come to a minute consideration of the bill.

It was my privilege for the first time to visit the lands of our ancestors in 1931. The depression was already upon us. When I returned, friends were always asking, "LEWIS, how did you find things in Europe?" My answer was that in Holland, Belgium, France, and Switzerland at that time conditions seemed to be about their normal, but that in Germany and Great Britain, notably, their conditions of unemployment resembled those within the United States, with this important difference: The agony was taken out of it for the working men of Germany and Great Britain by their social-insurance systems. Over there I found the Prime Minister did the worrying, and why should he not? Who, more than the Prime Minister, the government of a country, was responsible for the unemployment which prevailed?

Has it not been a matter of state policy for a century throughout western civilization for governments to encourage the scientists, encourage inventors by granting exclusive patent monopolies, and here in our own land even to organize large corporations, resembling a state in their characteristics rather than the individual, for the purpose of mass production? And all to what end? We all know—to advance the common welfare, as they saw it, by reducing the labor costs which govern the prices of products to the American people. And their policy has succeeded. Even in 1929, 2,000,000 persons willing and able to work were vainly crying for the privilege. Yes; these governmental policies have succeeded, and this success means that 8 men now can do the work for which 10 men were required half a generation ago.

Now we have to thank the scientist, the inventor, and the engineer for their great achievements, and we do thank them. In the long run, doubtless, it is desirable that the work of the world should be accomplished with a minimum of labor. But allow me to affirm, with all the earnestness of my nature, it is only desirable provided certain fundamental conditions are not violated. One of those conditions is the right of a human being to earn his living in the sweat of his face. [Applause.] The world does not owe a man a living, I grant you, but as surely as a God rules the heavens, it does owe him a chance to make a living! [Applause.]

And when by adopting such policies the Government has deprived him of that chance, and when the Government's help is asked to save him from starvation—is that help to be regarded as compensation or sneeringly referred to as a dole? Do we take property from our people without compensation? Yet these rights of the worker have been taken away, and this measure is only a partial recognition of the right of the disemployed to compensation and equality before the law.

EQUALITY BEFORE THE LAW

What do we mean by equality before the law? We are very proud of the principle in this country. The fathers in one of your home towns find it necessary, we will say, to cut a new street across from one avenue to another, but the owner of the property objects. His father died there, he says, he was born there, he wishes to die there too.

However, the city fathers answer that the welfare and convenience of that community must prevail over his individual sentiment, and they evict him from the premises and tear the building down. But mark you, they do not evict him until they have given him just compensation for the rights of property taken away.

Ladies and gentlemen, other countries have long preceded us in granting these disemployed workers some compensation in the moment of their needs and their suffering. Shall we deny them here, in the country of Washington, like equality fore the law?

UNEMPLOYMENT CHRONIC

I fear the unemployment to which I have referred represents a chronic condition. I know it is more pleasant to think of it the other way.

There are two kinds of inventions, one that reduces the amount of employment and another which increases it. Unhappily, the emphasis is being placed on inventions and methods reducing employment. Let me give two concrete examples that will suffice. You have, for example, in the work-increasing field, the automobile, with the great road-building activities accompanying it. In the other field I refer to there is the ditch-digging machine that is said with two men to displace as many employees, perhaps, as a hundred. Now, if those inventions fell like rainfall, if they came equally, they would compensate each other. If, like the sexes, there was some power to say, "One little boy, one little girl; one little girl, one little boy", then in the throw of nature an equilibrium would result, and we perhaps might not be so seriously minded about our great problem.

But unhappily the emphasis, I say, is placed on the work-reducing inventions. In the shops and great factories of our country you will find a suggestion box where the worker, however humble, is invited to contribute his suggestion about plant improvement, reducing expenses here, simplifying processes there, all of them working to reduce the gross employment necessary. To what has it led? We had 2,000,000 unemployed when the depression came on in 1929. Later augmented by the break-down of business confidence, it reached the terrible proportion of 12,000,000. It is said now to be at 6,000,000. I say I regard this condition of unemployment as chronic. I fear if the laissez-faire policy is still to obtain, we will come out of the depression with at least 4,000,000 of willing, competent persons unable to secure an opportunity to earn their living by their own labors.

Indeed, ladies and gentlemen, we are developing a new class in the United States. It consists of the men and women who, at 45 years of age, have reached the age limit of employability. I christen them "America's untouchables." Such is the competition between labor for an opportunity to labor, that gladiatorial qualifications now are required for the candidate who is seeking a job. But the American workshop is not a gladiatorial arena, even if it often does require as great courage and personal sacrifice equally tragic.

THE EMPLOYMENT ASSET

Have we not as thinkers and lawmakers come to the point in our path when we must look upon the employment asset as the most important asset in our lives, and as a great social responsibility? Of course, I know that the employer may not always regard it that way.

His thought has not been sufficiently directed to it. He is naturally disposed to look upon the employment attribute of his factory as he looks upon the physical property itself—like his own house—and as if he owned it wholly. But he does not own it wholly. The employment attribute belongs as well to the human beings who must exercise it in order to live. Our industrial order, like the industrial orders which have preceded, must accept its obligation to meet the primary needs of the human race dependent upon it. Previous systems have not denied such duties. Under the feudal system a place was found for the humblest villein. Even under slavery, the owner did not deny his obligation to feed and clothe and doctor the slaves, no matter what might happen to crops or to markets.

LEGAL SANCTIONS AND THE RIGHT TO WORK

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, there is an absent chapter in our treatment here today. The bill does not err by excess of provisions—it errs by a serious omission. Before we have done full justice in this subject and have acted in full wisdom toward it, legal sanctions must be provided for a man's right to work. The industrial order must give him his fair share of the employment available. It must abnegate the privilege of turning thumbs down on the father at 46. Each worker must be given his day in court with full legal remedies provided to effectuate this right to work, just as they are provided for all the forms of property. [Applause.]

How does it happen that this right to work that nobody has ever disputed in the history of the world—a moral right as fixed as the foundations of society—will not secure a single wageworker a loaf of bread tomorrow or save his family from eviction? How does it come that all kinds of property, property in cats, dogs, cows, or anything imaginable, is provided protection through the processes of the courts and nothing in the way of legal defense is provided this worker for his inalienable right to work?

I do not charge any conscious class discrimination against the lawmaker for the discrimination between property rights and this personal right to work. But I do fear the worker has been the victim of an unconscious class bias.

THE GENERAL WELFARE

I only have about 10 minutes remaining, and I shall go to the Constitution and our general welfare.

The general welfare—the aged grandma, and the aged grandpa long turned away from the mills, the disemployed workmen, now do they relate to this general welfare? My answer is that the causes of their deprivation, as well as unemployment, are general in character. They are not local or personal causes.

By " general welfare ", I mean what the makers of the Constitution meant—interstate welfare. I mean that portion of the public welfare over which the State can exercise no competent legislative power. Wherever the causes and their effects are not both circumscribed within a single State so as to be reached by the processes of its courts or by the mandate of its lawmakers, they are interstate in character. Our unemployment conditions are certainly interstate and can be said to be often international in character. So I say to you that we have a general or interstate welfare problem before us in our subject today.

Now, how about the Constitution on the subject of such general welfare? I do not need to say to you, I am sure, that the general welfare is one of the triology of great objectives mentioned in its preamble as the purpose of the Constitution. But it also received much more specific attention. I am glad to see Virginia faces here today, for I have now to refer to names and incidents that ought to arouse a feeling of pride in the Virginia breast.

When the Virginia delegation reached Philadelphia, somewhat ahead of the delegations from other States, they prepared a plan for a Constitution. General Washington headed that delegation. Governor Randolph, Mr. Madison, and, I think, also Mr. Mason were members. What did they propose with regard to this subject? I read now from the preamble of the Virginia plan:

Resolved, That the articles of confederation ought to be so corrected and enlarged as to accomplish the objects proposed by their institution; namely, common defense, security of liberty, and general welfare.

But how attain this general welfare? Well, the plan provided " that the Congress should enjoy the power to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent."

In other words, Mr. Chairman, when the subject matter transcended the powers of the State because of its geographical inability to reach both cause and effect, they recognized a general or interstate subject. In such cases the Federal Government should enjoy legislative power to act. Obviously these great makers of the Constitution, Mr. Chairman, were far from intending to leave a vacuum in the Constitution as to the field of legislative subject matter on which the State was geographically incompetent to act. They left no such vacuum in the judicial power to act where plaintiff and defendant reside in different States. The intention of the Convention was completely manifest: That the sum total of the powers of the State legislature plus the power of the National Legislature should equal the sum total of the powers of the colonial legislature and the House of Commons before their separation. Why not? The Virginia plan in this respect was voted on favorably a number of times in the Convention.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair reminds the gentleman from Maryland that he has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Maryland.

THE GENERAL WELFARE CLAUSE

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. I thank the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL]. What did the Convention do? The Washington, or Virginia, plan with regard to this matter became the general welfare clause in the Constitution. And now, Mr. Chairman, I have to call your attention to a most important accident in the history of the Constitution. As you read the Washington Convention copy of the Constitution of September 12, just 3 days before final signature, you will find that the welfare clause was preceded by a semicolon at the end of the clause on taxation. That is, the taxation and welfare clauses were separated by a semicolon. I read:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises—

to pay the debts, provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

I am reading from the printed intra-Convention copy of George Washington, who was President of the Convention. The copy was turned over to a copyist to write out in hand on parchment for engrossment, and then a mistake occurred. A comma was substituted for the separating semicolon. I want to affirm here that the journal evidence indicates that members of the Convention signing the final Constitution 3 days after were entirely unadvised of the displacement of the semicolon by a comma.

There was no Convention print of the copy they signed. The engrossed written document was read to them like documents are read to us here from the desk. Of the semicolon they were conscious. Printed copies were before the Members carrying the semicolon. They had no copies of the Constitution they signed.

And now, Mr. Chairman, may I continue the exposition by quoting from a dialog with Senator NORRIS and the late Senator Walsh in the Judiciary Committee of the Senate:

Senator WALSH of Montana. If I understand the question of the chairman right, the idea in his mind is that it is equally as well when you put a comma there, it is equally as well set apart from what goes before as though there was a semicolon there, and if the clause "to provide for the payment of debts and general welfare" is a modification of what precedes, you should not have either a comma or a semicolon.

Mr. LEWIS. Exactly so. The erroneous comma is meaningless as a modifier unless you interpolate some phrase like "in order." Of course, no interpolation whatever would have been admissible had the semicolon remained. If the comma be read to mean "and", as the history of the subject requires, then a distinct legislative power is carried.

The CHAIRMAN. The contention is this, as I understand it, that where you have a comma there it is the same as though it read like this:

"Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises 'in order' to pay the debts."

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. That is the contention that is made by the contractionist.

The CHAIRMAN. "And provide for the common defense and general welfare."

If that were true, then the authority to pay debts, provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States would be limited to the powers given in the first part of the sentence, to wit, to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises. Is that the contention?

Mr. LEWIS. That is the contention and the purpose of the interpolation of the contractionists who would destroy this clause as a power.

Senator WALSH of Montana. As I understand you, Mr. LEWIS, you contend it should be construed as though Congress had power to lay and collect taxes, imposts and excises; that Congress shall have the power to pay the debts of the United States; that Congress shall have the power to provide for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States?

The other contention is that Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, imposts and excises "in order" to pay the debts and provide for——

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to me to get the last construction you would have to take the comma out. What is the use of the comma?

A NECESSARY POWER

Mr. Chairman, I think it is clear that with comma or semicolon the clause was intended as a power, and that Congress may "provide for the general welfare" not merely through the levying of a tax but by other logical and legitimate methods; for example, the prescription of justiceable rights and duties generally. It is true that such a power is applicable to but a limited part of the total field of legislative subject matter. But when applicable it possesses characteristics and properties like the postal clause, enabling the lawmaker to fully control the subject matter. The break-down of the principle of competition in farming and coal mining which calls for a limitation of the production of such products, the equal right of competent men to work and to a share of the Nation's employment, all subjects which the separate State is organically unable to encompass for geographical reasons are examples of interstate subjects, the evils of which may run into catastrophes if an equal interstate power to treat them be denied.

Ladies and gentlemen of the House, we are at the crossroads of history. The State is incompetent to act. Either the people have power to act through their general government or we fail in our generation. Once before we were at these crossroads. It was on the subject of slavery. The statesmen of that day found an adjustment in the Missouri Compromise Act. But the act was declared void; there was no authority under the flag, it was said, to deal with that problem, and a sword was placed in every man's hand. Ladies and gentlemen, if authority is now denied us, if it is declared that on our problems of the general welfare there is a like vacuum in the legislative authority, down into the vacuous chasm may fall the proud structure of our dual form of government, to arise—if arise we can—not as a Federal Republic but as some soviet or fascist power with all our honored State lines effaced forever.

Mr. Chairman, there are a half dozen industrial countries of the world like Germany, England, and the United States that are facing now—I shall not say the most ominous, but I will say the most difficult problem the human family has ever had to face. Shall this our American House of Commons enjoy the same privilege of dealing with those subjects enjoyed by the other parliaments of the world, or shall we, in a contractionist spirit toward our beloved Constitution, deny its healing hand to suffering humanity? Yes, indeed; we face the cross roads. Do not give trust to a policy of drift and fortune. It may lead us further down into the swamps of human suffering and despair. We have examples of how neglect to act has brought indescribable misery to the human race. Look into the Empire of India with its submerged millions. Behold it as the possible future of your own children. And so warned, let us, my colleagues, take the path that leads forward to the uplands of justice and social security. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire this time to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question, because I, as well as all other Members of the House, have listened with interest to the masterful manner in which the gentleman has presented this subject. I simply wish to say to the membership that my able colleague [Mr. LEWIS] went into the mines at the age of 9 years and knows the problems of the worker. He understands what it means to earn a livelihood by the sweat of his brow. I believe the Members of the House should know the fact. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX].

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Chairman, I want to preface my remarks with the statement that, in my judgment, the amended Doughton bill, H. R. 7260, will pass the House of Representatives by a large number of votes. I say "amended" because I believe there will be worth-while amendments offered and adopted. I have amendments that I desire to offer and other Members have amendments which they desire to offer. I am sure that the Ways and Means Committee, which has given so freely of its time and used so much of its efforts and energies to report a bill to the House that might be practicable and workable, will view these meritorious amendments in the same spirit which they are offered.

Mr. Chairman, I unhesitatingly state that I am in somewhat hearty accord with the purposes of the 10 titles of this bill, under which its various provisions are fully covered. I think we are all in accord with the main objectives of the bill, namely, no. 1, old-age pensions; no. 2, compensation for the unemployed; no. 3, governmental aid to mothers and their dependent children; and no. 4, governmental aid and financial assistance for the protection, conservation, and maintenance of the public health. I think it is generally admitted by the sponsors of the bill that it is by no means perfect.

Mr. Chairman, I think that they generally admit, as we all do, that this bill does not in any manner or means adequately or satisfactorily solve the problems which we seek to solve. However, we all admit that this is a beginning. We admit that unless more effective provisions, such as increasing the amount of old-age pensions, finding additional sources of revenue, and increasing in the end unemployment compensation, this legislation will eventually fall by its own weight. But, having made a start and having struck the goal which we seek, I am sure that the Congress and those to follow in its path will think of progress and that they will go forward instead of backward. I think that we Democrats may say that the enactment of this legislation is not only a redemption of the pledges of our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, but that it is also a redemption of the pledges of the Democratic Party, and, further, we are giving a favorable answer to millions of distressed farmers, distressed wage workers, small business men, independent producers, and war veterans, all of whom will be benefited directly and indirectly by the passage of this humanitarian legislation.

I think that we all admit that the cost of this legislation will rapidly increase year by year, not only because of the natural and rapid increase in the number of persons 65 years of age and over, but because of the very fact that thousands and hundreds of thousands of individual incomes have vanished and have been wiped out by this recent and prolonged depression, and by the further fact that the enormous concentration of wealth and money in this country has made it impossible for the sons and daughters to longer support their parents as was the custom in the past.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a table giving the figures on the number of aged people over 65 years.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield to me for a brief time?

Mr. TRUAX. I will yield for a question.

Mr. KNUTSON. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BURCH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman stated a moment ago that this legislation is a fulfillment of a pledge in the Democratic platform.

Mr. TRUAX. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. It reads as follows:

We advocate unemployment and old-age insurance under State laws.

Mr. TRUAX. That is what we are doing. We are cooperating with the States and furnishing half of the money.

Mr. KNUTSON. You are detouring in doing it, though.

Mr. TRUAX. Well, we are bridging the gap that was created by the failure of the Republican Party to do anything at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. May I suggest that we did not need any pensions when we were in power, because everybody had jobs.

Mr. TRUAX. I cannot yield further, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are other plans for old-age pensions that have received Nation-wide publicity and have been somewhat freely discussed by Members of this House. One of the plans which is nationally known, is the so-called "Townsend plan."

Under the old Townsend-plan bill, which was introduced, some twenty to twenty-four billion dollars per year was required to finance it. This bill was to be financed by a sales tax.

I have always been unalterably opposed to the imposition of any sales tax whatsoever, because all sales taxes are successful attempts to shift the tax burden from the rich to the backs of the poor.

George White, Governor of Ohio, 1931–35, was commonly known as "Sales Tax George." He was adamant and unyielding in his chosen role of special anointer to and for the rich. He called the Ohio State Legislature back repeatedly, browbeat them, wore their resistance down until in the end he obtained a 3-percent sales tax. Voters of Ohio exhibited their resentment and enmity by defeating Governor White for United States Senator in the August 1934 primaries. Former Gov. Vic Donahey, known as "Honest Vic", and a lifelong opponent of sales taxes, defeated Sales Tax George to the tune of 2 to 1.

Certain features of the Townsend plan are highly meritorious and worth the support of any Member of this Congress. The plan to retire men at the age of 60, remove them from active participation in industry, thus making room for unemployed men of younger ages is most commendable. The age limit of 65 fixed in the Doughton bill is undesirable and not entitled to favorable consideration by the real friends and supporters of equitable old-age pension legislation. I heartily favor reducing the age limit in the Doughton bill to 60 years.

The provisions in the Townsend plan which provide for an immediate spending of all pensions received within 30 days is admirable and one designed to place money immediately in circulation with its corresponding increase in the Nation's buying power. The pensions received by recipients under the Townsend plan would mean a considerable amelioration of the hardships and tragedies of unemployment. Idle men in the crafts, the carpenter, the painter, the steel worker, common laborer, could be gainfully employed in useful work. The butcher, the baker, the hardware man, the garage proprietor, the automobile salesman, all would be benefited by payment of old accounts, new purchases, and services. The whole idea involved here is quite the antithesis of the practices and purposes of the greedy and selfish and idle rich whose sole aim, whose sole ambition in life is to amass more and more and more of filthy lucre.

We are now informed that under the provisions of the new bill which has been substituted by Representative MCGROARTY for the original Townsend plan that the amount will be reduced to $50 per month instead of $200. In the event of enacting this plan into law the system would be pay as you go. No debts, or tax-exempt bonds would be needed. Recipients of pensions would receive the money only as it was collected from the taxing sources. This plan of financing certainly has much to commend, and in the event of failure to tax wealth and to tax incomes the way they should be taxed might well be considered. Certain it is that such a plan would restore a vigorous purchasing power among the very classes with whom purchasing power is nonexistent. The revolving-fund idea is not only new, it is unique. Instead of hoarding money it undertakes a real redistribution of money.

As a member of the Committee on Labor, I may say that I was one of seven who voted to report favorably the so-called "Lundeen workers' bill."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TRUAX. For a question; yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. What would that cost per year in taxes?

Mr. TRUAX. I have no idea, I may say to the gentleman from Washington, probably $3,000,000,000 per year. [Laughter.]

I will state to the gentleman, however, that the best feature of the Lundeen bill is the provision to tax wealth and all incomes in excess of $5,000 per year. Any gentleman who has an income of $5,000 per year and who is unwilling to contribute his share to keep the unemployed and the old people who have no income or no property, is unworthy of the respect of clear-thinking men and women, and I am sure the gentleman from Washington does not belong to that class. [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TRUAX. Not just now. Let me first complete my statement.

SOCIAL SECURITY

I repeat and summarize certain statements made earlier in my remarks:

The enactment into law of old-age pensions, unemployment compensation, protection for mothers and dependent children, and the preservation of public health will mark another milestone in the battle for human rights waged by President Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Seventy-fourth Congress.

It is admitted by the sponsors of the bill that it does not adequately meet the situation or solve the problem. It is a beginning, however. I would amend the bill so that recipients would receive $30 to $50 per month at the age of 60, $75 at the age of 65, and $100 at the age of 70, rather than the $15 proposed. I would reduce the age limit from 65 to 60 years. Applicants for pensions should not be subjected to a property test or be blackjacked into signing a pauper's oath. Instead of taxing the public or issuing additional tax-exempt bonds to raise the extra funds as advocated here, they would be obtained by a capital tax levy on the millionaires, proper taxes on inheritances, gifts, and excessive incomes.

Unemployment is due not only to the depression but to tremendous concentration of wealth in the hands of a few, massed industry, and the mechanistic age. I heartily approve of unemployment compensation. The cost should be borne, however, by the large industrialists who profit by the sweat and toil of wage workers. The exemption of agricultural workers in this bill is unjustifiable and indefensible. Farm workers are entitled to the same consideration as given industrial workers.

Certain features of the Townsend plan are highly meritorious and worth the support of all. The plan to retire men at the age of 60, removing them from active participation in industry, is most commendable. The revolving plan for spending all pensions within 30 days is admirable and one designed to place money immediately in circulation. Instead of hoarding money it undertakes a real redistribution of money. The whole idea involved here is quite the antithesis of the practices and purposes of the greedy and selfish idle rich; namely, the hoarding of more money and wealth.

As a member of the Committee on Labor I voted to report favorably the Lundeen unemployment, old-age, and social-insurance bill. Unemployment compensation provided for in this bill is $10 per week for the head of a family and $3 per week for each dependent child, certainly not an excessive nor extravagant amount. The Lundeen bill is self-financing in that it provides for the levying of sufficient taxes on all gifts, inheritances, and incomes over $5,000 per year.

The contents of the bill are covered in 10 titles. In title I the Federal Government proposes to match an amount equal to that contributed by the States for old-age pensions. The annuity system, commonly known as "old-age benefits", is provided for in title II, becoming effective to people who have reached the age of 65, benefits beginning in 1942. The amount of the benefits is to be determined by the amount of wages formerly received by the annuitant, and does not take into consideration the actual need of the recipient. In title III we cover the administrative costs of State unemployment-compensation systems by grants in aid to the various States.

It is a well-known fact that dependent children are one of the big factors in forcing unemployed fathers to the bread lines and relief lists. In title IV we provide Federal assistance to the States so that they may properly give direct aid to these dependent children. The Federal Government furnishes one-third of the total amount used in the State for this humanitarian purpose.

In my State of Ohio we know something about so-called "mothers' pensions", which is really a misnomer. In title V we are making grants to States for assistance in the vocational rehabilitation of crippled and disabled children. The funds to be used are upon a 50–50 basis between the State and Federal Government. Serving as a member of the Ohio State Board for Vocational Rehabilitation for a period of 6 years, I am happy to endorse this feature of the social-security program in the highest possible terms. In title VI we provide for grants in aid to the States for developing their public-health services. In Ohio the department of health is under the personal direction of the Governor. The director of public health is a member of the Governor's cabinet. The Federal Government proposes to continue its Public Health Service, and particularly in its investigatory work, with every effort at its command.

The social-security board created under title VII is to be an independent agency within the Department of Labor. There is much difference of opinion here as to the merits of this plan or the advisability of having a wholly separate and independent agency in charge of the administration of this broad and far-reaching program.

Under title VIII we levy an income tax determined by a certain percentage of wages, starting with 1 percent in 1937 and increasing to 3 percent by 1949. Unfortunately and unwisely, in my judgment, the bill exempts domestic servants and agricultural laborers. I can find no justifiable reason for these exemptions, particularly as relating to farm workers. Certainly the farmer and the farm hand are entitled to every consideration and every protection that may be given to workers in manufacturing industry. Agriculture is the mast wheel of the world. Accelerate the motion of it but the slightest and the smaller wheels will double their velocity.

By the provisions of title IX we levy an excise tax on employers of 10 or more individuals with the same exceptions as noted in title VIII; the amount of the tax to be levied will be determined by 1 percent of the wages payable for 1936 and increasing to 3 percent by 1938. The operative date of this levy will be January 1, 1936, and is payable 1 year later. For those employers who have already contributed to State unemployment funds under State unemployment compensation laws, credits against the tax will be allotted up to 90 percent of the amount contributed.

Title X merely outlines the general definitions of the bill and the various and sundry provisions applying thereto.

OBJECT OF THE BILL

The bill has four main objectives:

First. Old-age security, or "old-age rewards", as I choose to call them.

Second. Unemployment compensation.

Third. Protection for mothers and welfare of their dependent children.

Fourth. The protection, preservation, and betterment of public health.

I repeat, this country has approximately 7,500,000 men and women aged 65 and over. Of this number, practically 1,000,000 are dependent upon relatives, the public, or the Government for support and maintenance. The large majority of these unfortunates are on Government relief. The number of aged persons over 65 will increase in the future not only because of the rapid natural increase of persons of this age but also because of the fact that thousands of older workers now gainfully employed will never be steadily employed again, the wiping out of the life savings of thousands of worthy persons nearing old age and astonishing inability of sons and daughters to no longer support their parents. At this point I introduce a table from the United States censuses giving startling figures with respect to old-age dependency:

TABLE I.—Actual and estimated number of persons aged 65 and over compared to total population, 1860 to 2000

Year	Total population	Number aged 65 and over	Percent aged 65 and over
1860	31,443,000	849,000	2.7
1870	38,558,000	1,154,000	3.0
1880	50,156,000	1,723,000	3.4
1890	62,622,000	2,424,000	3.9
1900	75,995,000	3,089,000	4.1
1910	91,972,000	3,958,000	4.3
1920	105,711,000	4,940,000	4.7
1930	122,775,000	6,634,000	5.4
1940	132,000,000	8,311,000	6.3
1950	141,000,000	10,863,000	7.7

Twenty-six States have already adopted old-age-pension laws. The plan outlined in this bill is one not to tear down nor destroy these State plans already in existence but to grant them aid and assistance by matching the amount of compensation that has already been provided for in these States.

It is admitted by the sponsors and framers of this bill that the legislation contained in the bill does not in any manner or means adequately or satisfactorily solve the problem. It is nothing more than a beginning, and unless other and more effective provisions, such as increasing the amount of compensation monthly and seeking additional sources of revenue, the legislation may fall of its own weight. Certain it is that the cost of old-age pensions will increase by leaps and bounds and that the only source of new revenue is the tapping of predatory wealth, the taxing of swollen fortunes, and proper limitations on huge individual incomes. Let the rich of the country, the plutocrats of the Nation, the millionaires, and the billionaires finance the cost of this vital and necessary legislation. If the plan proposed in this bill is enacted into law, by 1960 it would cost the State and Federal Governments $2,000,000,000 a year. I introduce a table listing the States which have old-age-pension laws, together with statistics relating to same.

So that the cost of old-age security may not become too burdensome in the years to come, and so that the aged may look upon this endowment as a human right, and not as a governmental gratuity, we establish through the mechanics of this bill a system of old-age benefits or annuities. These annuities are to be paid out of the Federal Treasury, and all administrative details will be handled by the Federal Government. The benefits provided are in proportion to the wages earned. Adjustments are available which tend to favor the lower-paid employees and those approaching old age. Benefit payments start at $10 and reach a maximum of $85 per month. It will act as an automatic equalizer on the old-age-pension funds and in future years it is believed that the funds provided for old-age pensions by State and Federal Governments will be reduced by $1,000,000,000 annually.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

During the World War there were practically no unemployed workers. From 1922 to 1929, 8 percent of industrial workers were unemployed. In 1930 to 1933 more than 25 percent of industrial workers were unemployed. Eighty percent of all the families now on Government relief are there because of unemployment. Unemployment is due to not only depressions and panics but also to the tremendous concentration of wealth, capital, and money, massed industry, and the mechanistic age. The steam shovel, the tractor, the road grader, the huge concrete mixer, the cigarette robot displace permanently thousands of workers. Here, unquestionably, shorter hours, less days per week, and at the same weekly wage level as was formerly received for the longer-hour day and week, must prevail in the end. To bridge the gap now between wholesale and ruinous unemployment, workers' compensation must be established.

If unemployment compensation had been established 15 years ago at the cessation of the World War with a 3-percent rate on industry, probably $3,000,000,000 would have been available for payment of benefits starting with the depression year 1929, when, on October 25 of that year, $30,000,000,000 zoomed out of Wall Street.

Unemployment compensation is a tried and proven fixture in the older European countries. No doubt the impelling reason for its adoption years ago in these countries is the fact that those older European countries then reached the period through which we now pass—namely, that period which marked a centralization of wealth in the hands of the few. In other countries where compensation for the unemployed has been tried, it is always retained. I would recommend that the entire cost of this movement for human rights be borne by the large industrialists who profit by the sweat and toil of wage workers. At this point I submit unemployment statistics for recent years. Estimates on unemployed workers furnished by the American Federation of Labor.

SECURITY FOR CHILDREN

Helpless and dependent children are the real casualties of hard times. The whole Nation was shocked quite recently by the tragic happening when the lives of 14 high-school youths were snuffed out. Yet daily 9,000,000 boys and girls in this country must depend on Government doles for bread and meat to eat, clothing to wear, and fuel to keep their bodies warm. The Federal work-relief program will not solve this problem in its entirety. Jobs will not be possible for all. Seven hundred thousand children under the age of 16 have no fathers to win bread for them. The most humane provision that Government can provide for in these sad cases is public aid in their own homes; hence the wisdom and justification for the third major step of this social security bill.

MATERNAL AND CHILD WELFARE

Everyone believes in the old truism, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." This section of the bill takes into consideration the welfare of 300,000 dependent and neglected children, 200,000 distressed children who are classed by the juvenile courts as delinquents, and 70,000 illegitimate children born annually.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

We boast of our high standards of living, our excellent sanitation, the successful battles in many instances that we have waged on disease and pestilence, yet only 528 of 3,000 counties in the United States have full-time health officers. Health is wealth. Good health cannot be bought by the millionaires' gold or the plutocrats' wealth. This enlightened Nation owes to its citizenship every opportunity to enjoy good health.

LUNDEEN WORKERS' UNEMPLOYMENT, OLD-AGE, AND SOCIAL-INSURANCE BILL (H. R. 2827)

The vote by which the bill was reported favorably was 7 for and 6 against. So, to my constituents who are interested in this meritorious bill I am happy to state that my vote was the deciding factor that reported the bill favorable. The Lundeen bill provides for the payment of insurance for unemployment, old age, part-time unemployment, sickness, accident, and maternity in amounts equal to average local wages, the average local wage to be determined by the Department of Labor at Washington. In the case of part-time employment, the difference between the part-time employed worker's earnings and the average local wage would be paid. The cost for this insurance is to be paid for by the United States Government; and if further taxation is necessary, such taxation shall be levied on gifts, inheritances, and incomes over $5,000 per year. The insurance is to be administered by workers' and farmers' organizations under rules to be set up by the Secretary of Labor. It is specifically provided that insurance shall be paid to all workers and farmers unemployed through no fault of their own, including agricultural, domestic, professional, and office workers, as well as industrial laborers, who have reached the age of 18 years.

In unemployment compensation the Lundeen workers' bill provides for $10 per week for the head of a family and $3 per week for each dependent child; certainly not an excessive, exorbitant, or extravagant amount. With living costs soaring, and especially in the industrial centers where millions of wage workers live, the amount herein asked is not too much. This bill includes all workers, including unemployed farmers, domestic, professional, and office workers.

The failure of the administration bill to provide for these latter groups of toilers who form the basic structure of our Nation is regrettable and indefensible. Another highly commendable feature of the Lundeen bill is that it is self-financing in that it provides for the levying of sufficient taxes on all gifts, inheritances, and incomes over $5,000 per year. Can it be that any individual fortunate enough to have an income of $5,000 per year will be unwilling to help support his less fortunate brethren? If so, then he does not deserve the respect nor support of respecting men and women. My contention is that the finances to make it possible to place the bill in operation we are now considering, H. R. 7260, should be obtained from the superrich and from the swollen fortunes and huge incomes.

MY OWN POSITION

From 1910 to 1923 I was the proprietor of one of the larger purebred stock farms in the United States. During that period I made 26 public sales on my farm besides selling hundreds by mail and shipping my stock to every State in the Union and to Canada, South America, Australia, and Japan. As editor of the Swine World, published in Chicago, and field representative I attended dozens of sales for other breeders in many States of the Union.

For 6 years, 1923–29, I served as director of agriculture for the State of Ohio. In 1932 I was elected Congressman at large for the State of Ohio by the largest vote ever given a congressional candidate in my State. In 1934 I was reelected by a vote of 1,061,857, being high man in the number of votes received in 82 of 88 counties. My constituents, I am pleased to classify as being composed largely of farmers, wage earners, salaried and professional workers, small business men, and independent producers and manufacturers. I am a pioneer in old-age-pension legislation in Ohio. In the fall of 1933 I cheerfully gave my time and my best efforts and spent my own money in making speeches in nearly every county of my State in that historic campaign for the adoption of old-age pensions by the people. The people responded and adopted this legislation by an overwhelming majority. I shall continue my efforts and keep the faith. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I am glad, indeed, to have an opportunity to speak my word of approval for this great piece of humane legislation. I have sat here in the House for several days and listened with the greatest interest to the debate on this bill. I have heard the objections raised to it, and I have been wondering what can we say against this legislation that has any weight. I have been wondering if we can conscientiously object to an old-age pension such as is provided in this bill. Can we object to trying to insure the wages of these men without jobs? Can we have any objection to providing for the welfare of children and mothers? Who objects to better health conditions?

It seems that there is a great deal of alarm here among the Members of that side of the House because of the tremendous burden that this humane legislation will place on industry. I do not share that alarm. It so happens that I come from a group of people who are used to bearing burdens. They have been bearing the burdens of this country since they were brought here almost four centuries ago. I am happy to represent such a group. I am glad to be one of those who have borne the burdens and helped to build up this country.

May I not remind you that at this very moment when we are expressing alarm at the burden this legislation will place upon industry, we have in our vaults in this city nearly half the gold of the world. We boast that our country has the greatest natural resources of any country in the world. What are we to do except to use this gold and these resources for the citizens of this country who are now handicapped because of age, or because of disease, or because of the fact they are unable to secure work? Is it not the custom of those representing our industry to cry aloud when industry is about to be called upon to do its part in carrying the burdens of the Government?

We complain of this bill's being written by experts of the administration. It is such a change from what we have been used to with another party in control of the Government. Then bills were written by people on Wall Street.

Only a few years ago this Government, under a former administration, turned over to a citizen of my city $85,000,000 with which to try and keep a bank alive that was at the time insolvent.

In contrast to this, the present administration, in keeping with the customs and platform of the Democratic Party, went to the rescue of Sylvester Harris, a poor Negro farmer in the heart of Mississippi's Delta when he called the President, and informed him that he was about to lose his farm because he could not pay the mortgage and wanted the Government to come to his rescue.

It was a new day in politics when this Government went to the rescue of this poor Mississippi Negro farmer. It has long since been the custom of our Government, under another party, to go to the rescue of railroads, great industrial corporations, insurance companies, and so forth, where the benefits went direct to the privileged rich. It is a new day in politics when citizens of this Nation at the bottom of the ladder can call upon their Government and receive immediate relief. That was a new idea, and the President said to the man at the bottom of the ladder, "It is the purpose of this Government not only to help the rich but to help those who are overburdened and poor." [Applause.]

The only objection I could have to the bill is this: It seems to me that instead of helping these poor States that have no money, you are trying to forget them at least for the present, as the bill is drawn, and help those who in some measure can help themselves. I believe the bill ought to be so amended that there would not be a State in the Union, poor as it might be, whose citizens could not share immediately in the benefits of the bill. [Applause.] I do not think it means much for us to pass a law that will help Illinois, my State, because it might have resources to meet the requirements of the bill; and Massachusetts, that has already met them, and a number of other States, while the State of Alabama and the State of Mississippi and the State of Minnesota, and other poor States could not meet the requirements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the people in these poor States are suffering just as much as the old people in these other States, and must they starve and continue to be a burden on their relatives who cannot administer to their wants, while others from more favored States benefit under this bill? I believe the bill ought to be so amended that the Federal Government would take the burden on itself to see to it that there is not an old person in the country above the age of 65 who would be left in want.

I know the purpose of those who framed this legislation in this way. You are afraid that you will encourage some States to remain indifferent on that particular point, but I believe an amendment could be drawn so that you could give these States a certain length of time to qualify, and all the time that they are qualifying these old people in these poor States would be taken care of as in the other States. I believe the time has come when we ought to think of all the suffering people in the country. The President's message which was delivered to us on the 17th of January admitted that there were a great many States unable to carry this burden, but after all, are not those the people we should help? How will we feel in our hearts if we make it possible for those of the more fortunate States to enjoy the benefits of this legislation while those that are suffering most in these other States which are not able to take care of that burden must continue to suffer. It is like saying to a sick person, "You are sick and you need some help, but you cannot get medicine until you are able to walk to the drug store and get it."

Mr. Chairman, I am new in this body and I do not want to take the responsibility of coming forth with an amendment so important as that, but I do hope some of those who are versed in that sort of thing will see to it that that amendment is offered so that I shall have an opportunity to vote for what I consider a most perfect and humane bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, it was most interesting to me to note the gracious reception and generous applause accorded our colored Democratic colleague from Chicago by our good Democratic friends from the South. He made a splendid speech and is the Representative of one of the great American districts. It seems that the attitude of our Democratic friends from the South has changed tremendously since the time a colored man sat on the Republican side of the House.

I am happy to have an opportunity to address you today on the so-called "social-security bill" which purports to give relief to aged needy people and dependent children and provide for maternal, child, and public health. I am not a recent convert. I have been advocating Federal old-age pensions, pensions for poor widows and for minor children, the needy blind, and the needy cripples for many years. I stood on the floor of this House about 15 years ago and defended the constitutionality of and urged the passage of a measure to provide Federal aid to the States in the rehabilitation of persons crippled in industry. The chief opponent of that legislation was one of the finest and ablest men who ever served in this House. I refer to our distinguished former colleague and Jeffersonian Democrat, Mr. Tucker, of Virginia. He really believed that the legislation then being proposed by the Republicans was unconstitutional and violated States' rights.

During my service in Congress I helped to pass many measures looking to child welfare and the public health; so this social-security program did not have its birth with President Roosevelt or the Democratic Party.

The bill before us now is known as "President Roosevelt's bill", but if the provisions in this bill for the needy old people, dependent minor children, and crippled children is to be a true test of the President's interest in these humanitarian policies, we can well say that all the humanity in this country does not rest in the bosom of President Roosevelt or within the hearts of the Democrats, or that there is no interest in social security or humanity among Republicans or the Republican Party. I do not know of a Member on the Republican side of this House that is not heartily in favor of adequate relief in the way of Federal grants or pensions to the aged needy, to dependent and crippled children, and public health, and nearly all that I have heard express themselves have expressed opposition to the very meager and inadequate provisions in this bill for these needy groups.

I have no purpose to criticize the Ways and Means Committee or its personnel. It is made up of a group of wonderful men, both Democrats and Republicans. There is no more splendid man in this House than the chairman, Mr. DOUGHTON, of North Carolina, and knowing other Democratic members on that committee, I feel sure that this bill does not express what they really desired to be done; but it is the President's bill, as I understand, prepared for him by one of the lesser lights of the "brain trust", and the President is forcing many of our Democratic friends to jump through the hoop on this bill as he has on other measures. I wonder if the time will come when these able, experienced, outstanding Democrats will cease to be mere rubber stamps for the President and the "brain trusters." No member of the Ways and Means Committee of this House wrote this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have only a limited time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Just to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I cannot yield, much as I should desire, because I have but a short time to cover the subjects I have in mind.

Mr. FLETCHER. Did not Mr. BANKHEAD support that bill?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Some of the Democrats supported the vocational education and rehabilitation bill.

Yes; I am very deeply and earnestly interested in old-age pensions and for aid for dependent and needy crippled children. I am in favor of the public health, welfare, and health provisions for poor mothers and needy children, and I am in favor of aiding the workers of this country to lay by something for their old age; but let me say to my Democratic friends, you will wake up before many months roll around and find out that this is the most disappointing legislation ever offered in Congress, provided you pass the President's bill which we are now considering.

INADEQUATE AND DISAPPOINTING

Many people are under the impression that if we pass this bill that the aged needy people over 65 years of age will receive a pension of $30 per month. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is also believed that the Federal Government under this measure is putting up $15 for each needy person over 65 years of age. This is not true.

In the first place, no one, however needy or however old, even a hundred years old, can secure one dollar in pension until the several States pass laws prescribing the conditions under which a pension can be paid and levy and collect taxes and match the Government's money, dollar for dollar.

This bill provides that the States can fix the minimum age anywhere between 65 and 70 years, until 1940. After that, the minimum age must not be more than 65. Any State can define what is dependency, and can and must fix the amount that it will contribute per needy person.

About 27 States of the Union have some form of old-age pension. Kentucky is one of these States, but its old-age pension law means less than nothing. It is a mere delusion. It merely gives the fiscal court of each county the right to levy and collect a tax to provide old-age pensions. So far as I know, no county in Kentucky has ever put into operation that provision of the Kentucky law. Only a few of the rich States have anything like substantial old-age pension laws. Twenty-one have no old-age-pension laws of any kind.

Under this law, every State in the Union, with the possible exception of Delaware, will have to change their old-age pension laws, and those States which have none will have to pass an old-age-pension law. It is contended that Kentucky and some other States will have to change their constitutions, requiring a vote of the people.

The appropriation of $49,750,000 is to be the Government's part for the year beginning July 1, 1935, and ending June 30, 1936. Perhaps in a few of the rich States they will be able to change their laws and provide means to match the Government's money and their old and needy will get some pensions, but I feel that I am perfectly safe in saying if this bill is passed in its present form there will be no old-age pensions paid to anyone in Kentucky, however old or however needy, within the next year or 18 months, and perhaps not at all. Kentucky is deeply in debt, with a sales tax and other burdens on the back of the people of Kentucky, and the State is going deeper in debt every day. Kentucky may not be able to match the Government's money. We may have to change our constitution.

There never has been a time when the old and needy required help as they do now. The Democrats running for the House and Senate last year urged the people to send them to the House and Senate instead of Republicans, as the President and they were pledged to provide old-age pensions. They have led millions of old and needy people to think that this relief would come, and come now—not a year, 2 years, or 5 years hence.

Therefore, I am against the provisions in the President's bill allowing the States to fix the age at 65 to 70 years. It should not be more than 60 years. I am against the provisions of the President's bill that makes it impossible for any old needy person to get a pension until and unless the State matches the Federal money. I think the limit of $15 of Federal aid is not adequate. Under this measure, it will make it possible for the rich States to get more money and the poor States not to get any money. In other words, those who need aid most will receive the least, or none at all. The United States should treat all of its old and needy citizens alike. I shall favor an amendment to fix the age at not more than 60 and for the Federal Government to contribute at least $20 or $25 and this to be paid to all those who come within the provisions of the bill, without regard to the State contribution, and then in due course of time let the States make such additional contribution as they desire and are able to make.

These old people need help and they need it now. I want them to get this help and get it now.

SIXTEEN DOLLARS AND SIXTY CENTS A YEAR—FOUR AND A HALF CENTS A DAY

This bill provides only $49,750,000 for old-age pensions for the year beginning July 1, 1935. In the committee's report filed with this bill it is declared there are over 7,500,000 people in the United States that are over 65 years of age. At least 6,000,000 of these are needy and dependent. Mr. DOUGHTON, the chairman of the committee, says there are about 4,000,000, but he is very much in error.

Let us bear in mind that the Government does not put up $15 for each needy person. It only matches the State's contribution. If the State law fixes the State's contribution at $2 a month, then the Government would only put up $2 per month, making $4 per month in all. If the State puts up $5 per month for old and needy persons, the Government would put up only $5, making $10 per month in all. But let us suppose the State puts up $15 per month for each needy old person. Then, in that event, the Government would put up $15, making $30 per month in all.

Now, as we have already said, the Government in this bill puts up $49,750,000 for the year beginning July 1, 1935. Suppose all the States should come in and should match the Government's money with $49,750,000 more. Then we would have for old-age pension $99,500,000 for that year; but in order to get this sum all the States would have to come in and match the Government's money.

If we divide $99,500,000 among 6,000,000 persons, it would give each person the magnificent sum of $16.60 a year, about $1.40 a month, or about 4½ cents a day.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have not the time. I cannot yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will grant the gentleman more time.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield under those circumstances.

Mr. KNUTSON. If we keep on importing from Japan and destroying our textile and other industries under the Roosevelt policies, we will be able to live on $16 per year.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. We may be able to starve on policies and conditions like those, but we cannot live.

But now suppose we cut down the number to 3,000,000 and then what will each pensioner get under this bill, provided the States all come through? Thirty-three dollars and twenty cents a year, or about 9 cents a day. Suppose only 1,000,000 applied and were allowed pensions. That would be $99.50, or eight and a fraction dollars a month, provided, of course, the State should come through with its part.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Sorry; I have only a few minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I only have a few minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield if I give him an extra minute?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I will yield if I get more time.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute. I should like to ask the gentleman where he got the figure that there are 6,000,000 people in this country today over 65 years of age who are in need?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is a general and accepted report of fact. You can get that anywhere.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Well, where? It was not presented to the Ways and Means Committee in more than a thousand pages of testimony.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I know, but all the knowledge does not reside with the very splendid and able members of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. And it does not all reside with the gentleman when he does not know what he is talking about either.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No; I do not claim that I have all knowledge. If you pass this, the President's old-age pension law, inside of 12 months you will find out where the 6,000,000 are. The life-insurance companies and the United States Government's actuaries show, and these figures have been accepted by the United States Government for many years, that of all the persons in the United States on an average who reach the age of 65, only one of them is well off. Four are able to support themselves with reasonable comfort. Five are able to support themselves only partially. Fifty-four are totally dependent upon public or private charity or relatives. There you have it. Out of 64 persons who reach the age of 65 years, only five are able to support themselves. Another five are only able to support themselves partially. Fifty-four are wholly dependent. In other words, more than four-fifths of the people who reach the age of 65 are wholly dependent and would come under the provisions of any reasonable old-age-pension law. The Ways and Means Committee report says there are now 7,500,000 people in the United States who are over the age of 65 years. Less than one-tenth of these are able to support themselves. Another group of less than one-tenth are able to support themselves only partially, leaving more than four-fifths that are wholly dependent and cannot support themselves in any way or at all. This gives you more than 6,000,000 needy and dependent people over the age of 65.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The proof showed they were 1,000,000 instead of 6,000,000. The gentleman missed it just 5,000,000.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The report of the Ways and Means Committee shows there were substantially a million people in the United States over 65 that were either on relief or were the objects of public charity. It omitted the other 5,000,000 who are either being cared for by relatives who are unable to do so or are dragging through life hungry and cold. The committee's report shows that the number reaching the age of 65 years is growing. It is estimated that the number over the age of 65 by 1940 would be 8,311,000, by 1980 it would be 17,001,000.

But I said if you only counted 1,000,000, this set-up for the year beginning July 1, 1935, would pay only $8 per month—$4 by the Government and $4 by the State, provided, of course, the State came in. Many States will not be able for many years to match the Government's money, and I am afraid that is going to be the situation in Kentucky; and for these and other good reasons, I shall strongly support and favor an amendment providing that the Federal Government shall pay a reasonable sum as an old-age pension to the old and needy of this country, without regard to State contributions, and do it now. They need it now. Under this bill, millions of them will die during the delay without getting anything.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I only have a short time remaining.

Mr. FLETCHER. Does Kentucky have an old-age-pension law?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; it has one and it fools them not quite as badly as this one will fool them if you pass it in its present form.

ABOUT $2.75 PER YEAR OR ABOUT THREE-FOURTHS CENT PER DAY

Our Democratic friends boast of the aid this will give to the dependent children of America. The Ways and Means report shows, and this was emphasized by the distinguished chairman, Mr. DOUGHTON, that there are 9,000,000 children in the United States under the age of 16 and now on Government relief. This bill appropriates $24,750,000 for relief for these dependent, needy children for the year beginning July 1, 1935, and ending June 30, 1936. This is about $2.75 per child per year, or about three-fourths of 1 cent per child per day, and no State can receive any of these pensions until such State shall pass such laws and provide funds to match the Federal Government's fund of $1 to be put up by the Government and to be matched by $2 to be put up by the State. In other words, the State must put up 2 to 1.

And for all of these matters—old-age pensions, aid to dependent children, maternal and child health, crippled children, child welfare, vocational rehabilitation, and public health—there is provided in this bill the sum of $91,491,000. Of course, none of this is available to any State unless such State matches the Federal funds.

Yes; this small sum is to meet the problem of giving old-age pensions for an entire year to 6,000,000 or more needy people over the age of 65, more than 9,000,000 needy, dependent children, and no one knows how many crippled children or how many needy mothers will need aid in childbirth, or how many children will need health service and child-welfare care, or the hundreds of thousands of men and women who need vocational rehabilitation, or to cover the entire public-health service of the United States. It is grossly inadequate, and what a great disappointment it will be to the millions of needy old people, and to the millions of needy children; and even with this small sum, there is a string tied to it—the States must change their laws and constitutions where necessary and levy and collect the money before one dollar will be given by the Federal Government to these needy groups.

I am sorely disappointed with the inadequacy of the President's bill and when the bill is read for amendments I shall not lose an opportunity to help amend it so it will give adequate relief and give it when this bill is passed and becomes a law.

THE BLIND AND CRIPPLES

I never doubted but what the President's social-security bill would not only take care of in an adequate and substantial way the groups that are provided for in this measure but I most certainly thought it would include needy blind people and needy crippled people. Are there any groups in this country that need relief more than the poor blind and the poor permanently disabled cripples of whatever age they may be?

There is nothing in this bill for the blind and the cripples unless they live to be 65 or 70 years of age. I shall vote and work to have this bill amended to include the needy blind and the needy cripples and to give to them the same rate of pension as the needy old people.

LITTLE RELIEF FOR NEEDY AND VETERANS

This measure is grossly inadequate. Our Democratic friends last year urged support of the Democratic candidates for the House and Senate on the plea they were going to help the needy, unemployed, and pay the veterans cash on their adjusted-service certificates. The administration now tries to avoid payment of the bonus and to give adequate relief to the needy on the ground that we do not have the money. I pointed out in my speech when the $4,800,000,000 bill was up that a lot of our Democratic friends were voting for that bill and they would be unable to redeem their promises to the veterans and the needy people. My prediction is coming true. Under that measure the President proposes to increase the C. C. C. so that it will cost at least $600,000,000 for the next year. Congress has passed measures providing more than a billion dollars for the Army and Navy. This is by far the largest amount appropriated for these in peace time. The other day the House passed a measure providing nearly $170,000,000 for so-called "river and harbor improvement and the construction of canals" that, more than likely, will never be used much. We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars to burn pigs, to plow up cotton, and to pay people not to raise hogs, not to produce cotton, wheat, or corn. We are expending ten or more millions of dollars to maintain "hobo hotels." These encourage young men to leave home and spend their time in idleness. I could enumerate many other items running into the millions of dollars. Yes; we have plenty of money for all these, but nothing, or very little, for the defenders of our country and their dependents, or for the old and needy, for the blind and cripples, and for needy widows and their orphan children.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE A MISNOMER

I yield to no person my deep interest and sincere desire to help work out a plan to build up a fund that will help to take care of them after they may retire or be unable to follow gainful employment or unable to get work.

In the President's bill this is called "unemployment insurance." This is a misnomer. It has been improperly and incorrectly named. This bill does not provide anyone who is without work with a job. It does not provide one dollar of relief to the millions of unemployed in America unless they would be able to get in under the old-age pensions, but this so-called "unemployment insurance" deals solely and only with those who have jobs or may get jobs. It gives no relief whatever to the unemployed, either in jobs or in money.

Many of the outstanding leaders of labor groups tell us there are more than 11,000,000 workers unemployed in this country. I have heard a number of my Democratic colleagues on the floor of this House during the course of the debate on this bill say there are 15,000,000 unemployed. I am quite sure, if we would count the tenant and sharecroppers and the farm hands throughout the United States who were thrown out of work and taken off the farms because of the Cotton Control Act, the A. A. A., and other new-deal policies, we would find more than 20,000,000 people in this country unemployed. Secretary Ickes of the Interior Department, in a speech at Philadelphia on yesterday, declared that the expenditure of the nearly $5,000,000,000 so-called "works bill" was justified, as there were somewhere between 20,000,000 and 30,000,000 people in distress in this country.

From all that the President and others have said we were led to believe that the President was going to bring forth some measure that would give some relief to the unemployed, and when this measure was talked of as being one providing for unemployment insurance, many people believed it would benefit in some way the unemployed of this country.

This measure does not and will not put a single man back to work. It does not give any unemployment insurance or unemployment money to any one of these unemployed. What this bill means by unemployment insurance is that a man or woman who has a job and who continues to work for 5 years, and during all of which period of time he or she will have their wages taxed a certain percentage and the employer will be required also to pay a certain percentage of tax on these wages, these taxes paid by the worker and the employer will create a fund so that after this has been done for 5 years and the worker quits work or dies or reaches the age of 65 such worker then will get an annuity—not on anything that the Government is giving to the worker, but on what the worker and his employer have paid in taxes into this annuity fund.

The ordinary workman under this plan would get a very small monthly annuity if he quit work or died after 5 years. If he died or had to quit work before he had worked and paid into this fund for 5 years, then he would receive 3½ percent of the wages he had earned up to that time. In other words, the worker would be taxed 3 percent, and if he quit paying before the 5 years were up he would get back 3½ percent. He would get one-half of 1 percent interest on what he paid in; but we must not forget that the Government does not pay anything into this fund to provide this annuity or pension.

And this only applies to persons employed by individuals or concerns that employ 10 or more persons. If a worker is employed by any person or concern that employs less than 10 men, he would have no opportunity to participate in this so-called "unemployment insurance."

Furthermore, farmers, farm laborers, and servants could not participate in this. This so-called "unemployment section" of this bill does not mean anything to farmers, farm hands, domestic servants, or to those who work for persons or concerns employing less than 10 people.

Now, let us see what sort of pension a worker would get. I present a statement set out in the report of the Ways and Means Committee on this bill.

[1] Lump-sum payment of $52.50.

For instance, if your wages average $50 per month and you paid into this fund for 5 years and reached the age of 65 or were unable to go on further, you would draw an annuity of $15 per month; and if you worked for 45 years, averaging $50 per month and paid into the fund, and retired or were unable to continue work, you would draw $35 per month for the balance of your life. We must bear in mind that a worker's expectancy of life is not very great after he has worked continuously for 45 years. He will not live much longer.

You will also observe that if he earned $250 per month and paid 3 percent tax into the fund for a period of 5 years and then reached the age of 65 or was unable to continue work, he would draw $25 per month, and if he continued to work for 45 years and made a salary of at least $250 per month, at the end of 45 years he would only receive $85 per month for the balance of his life.

The great bulk of Americans now and for some time to come will not receive wages which, under the terms of this bill, would give them a very big annuity after they had worked 30 years or 45 years.

In naming this "unemployment insurance" and getting the impression over the country that something was being done in some way to help the unemployed, this measure will be a great disappointment. Let me repeat, this provision concerns itself solely and only with those who now have jobs or who may get jobs and who pay a part of their wages into the fund and the employer pays a part, for a period of 5 years or longer. In that event, and only in that event, will they receive an annuity.

LABOR AND INDUSTRY OPPOSED

So far as I have been able to learn from the workers living in my own district and the representatives of organized labor, they are opposed to the so-called "unemployment insurance provisions" of this bill. Labor thinks it is unfair to them to levy this tax on their wages; and while industry is also required to pay a tax on the amount of each woker's wages and the taxes from both go into this so-called "unemployment insurance fund", the workers believe that they would not only be required to pay their part of the tax on their wages but that the tax paid by industry on their wages would reflect itself in reducing the wages of the workers; and, so far as I have been able to learn, the workers and the representatives of organized labor are opposed to this bill of the President because it is wholly inadequate. The amount provided for old-age pensions and other relief is entirely too small.

Congress last year passed a compulsory unemployment insurance or pension bill for all of the railroad workers of the country. This act is now before the Supreme Court of the United States. Under that bill the railroad workers are taxed 2 percent of their wages, and a like tax is paid by the railroads. There is no provision in this bill to repeal that law. If this bill is passed in its present form, there will be a double tax on the workers.

Many other industries and their workers carry group insurance, and so on. This bill makes no exception or provision for conditions like that.

I think this so-called "unemployment provision" of the President's bill should go out and it should go back to the committee and a more comprehensive and equitable measure should be brought out.

As I have heretofore pointed out, this deals solely and only with people who have jobs or who get jobs, because in order to create a fund of this kind, the workers must have a job and their wages must be taxed.

My deep concern is now to work out a plan, and I think this might be done with a more comprehensive bill, to give relief to the millions who are out of work and who appear to have very little chance to get work.

I cannot understand why this so-called "unemployment insurance proposition" is thrust into this bill. Labor is against it and industry is against it, and I am advised that many of the lawyers on the Ways and Means Committee and other lawyers are inclined to think it is unconstitutional as it is now before us. Of course, if there is doubt as to its constitutionality, somebody will hold up this measure until it can be tested out in the Supreme Court, and this would cause further delay in bringing relief to the needy old people, to the needy and crippled children, and to the other groups we are attempting to provide for in this measure; and therefore, if given an opportunity, I shall vote to strike this provision from the bill and have it re-referred to the proper committee for further study and preparation, so that we may have a better bill before us.

THE FORGOTTEN MEN AND WOMEN

We are told that there are more than 50,000,000 workers in America. Twenty-seven percent of these are more than 45 and less than 65 years of age—in other words, about 13,000,000 workers in America are over 45 and under 65, and nearly all of this great army of people are out of work and cannot get work. Under this bill they are not considered, because they are under 65 years of age and are unable to get a dollar of this old-age pension money however needy they may be. They cannot come under the unemployment-insurance provisions of this bill because they are unemployed. We have pointed out that persons to get any benefits from this unemployment insurance must have a job because the fund out of which this insurance or annuity is paid is raised by a tax levy on his wages and another tax levy on his wages paid by his employer and he and his employer must continue to pay taxes in for at least 5 years.

So you can readily see that these workers, out of work, and who cannot get work, are not benefited by any of the provisions of this act; yet millions of them have been led to believe that because we speak of "unemployment insurance" and they are unemployed, this measure would help them. What an awakening and what a bitter disappointment this bill will be to them. They are forgotten in this bill, but more tragic, they are the forgotten men and women of this country.

I know of no big coal mine in this country that does not require a coal miner when he enters their employ to sign a statement that he is not over 45 years of age. This is true of nearly all of the great factories, mills, and shops, and this is true, as I understand it, with the railroads. I have also observed that the United States Government, in prescribing its requirements to take civil-service examinations for jobs under the Federal Government, most of them fix the age limit at 45 or less, and I know of no civil-service examination that permits persons to qualify who are over 50 years of age unless it is for professional or scientific work. This same feeling exists in boards and commissions which employ those in so-called "white-collar" professions or occupations. Nearly all, including our Uncle Sam, are discriminating against the men and women who are over 45.

Ladies and gentlemen of this House, I ask you what is to become of this great army of 13,000,000 workers of the United States who are more than 45 and less than 65? This bill gives them no hope of relief until they reach the age of 65, and unless this bill is greatly amended, it offers very little hope to many of them then.

I have been putting this question to statesmen, lawyers, doctors, teachers, farmers, merchants, welfare workers, and industrialists for a long time. Most of them say, as my friend of whom I inquired on the floor of the House, they do not know. I inquired of my good friend, who is on the Ways and Means Committee, what there was in this bill to help this group, and he said, "Nothing." He ventured, however, to say we had passed the so-called "works bill" of $4,000,000,000. The most optimistic administration leaders do not expect the $4,000,000,000 works bill to give work to more than 3,500,000 people. There still remains, according to some estimates, from eight to twelve million people unemployed. There are millions of young, vigorous men and women under 45 who are out of work, and I am quite sure they will get a large part of these so-called "Federal works jobs."

It is claimed by the administration that this four billion works' job money will be spent by July 1, 1936. If this is the only hope for these workers over 45, there is not much encouragement for them. What will become of them after July 1, 1936?

Of course, I do not believe that the administration will put 3,500,000 unemployed people to work. I do believe, however, they are going to give jobs to tens of thousands of Democrats.

Can this great group of people be put back to work? Most men at the age of 45 have a wife and children. Their financial needs then, as a general rule, are as great or greater than at any other time in their lives. They have more to feed and clothe, provide educational opportunities for, and so forth. I consider this the most serious and pressing problem before the American people.

CAN THE NATION FURNISH THE JOBS?

All of us who have made a study of this matter agree that a great transformation has taken place in our country in the last few years. Under the present set-up is there any way to put back to work any material number of these persons over 45 and under 65? I do not think there is. There are millions of young, stout, able-bodied men and women under 45 years of age who are out of work, and most employers will give preference in the future, as in the past, to these younger men and women, just the same as the Federal Government does when it employs workers in its various departments and activities.

Why can we not put these people back to work? Machinery and efficiency have greatly increased production, yet consumption along many lines has decreased.

I cannot go into all of them, but, for example, it has not been many years ago that the average coal miner in America produced 1½ tons of coal per man per day. With modern machinery and equipment and efficiency, the average coal miner in America today is producing 5 tons of coal per man per day, and in many mines this has reached the high level of nearly 8 tons, yet last year America consumed over 100,000,000 tons of coal less than it did a few years ago in a single year. They now grind the coal and blow it into the furnace, and every little particle of coal gives up its energy. The use of oil and gas has been increased. I doubt if anyone would predict that for many years to come we are going to use as much coal per year as we did 10 years ago. Is it little wonder we have tens of thousands of coal miners out of work?

Take the railroads. I can remember years ago a railroad train would come along with 25 or 30 coal cars in a train, and most of them had 20 tons to the car, and it was considered a very big car if it carried 30 tons. There were many exclamations about "that long train." Now, in the coal regions of my district I sometimes see as many as 150 loaded cars in a single train and each car with 50 tons or more to the car, and it is not an uncommon thing to see trains with 85 to 100 loaded cars. The freight trains of these days are also going much faster—nearly twice as fast as the other train of years ago. Our present long, heavy train has one man less in the crew than the first train I mentioned. The trains now can and do carry from 6 to 10 times as much coal, and are making nearly twice as much speed, with one less man to the crew. This unit of transportation is one of the units of production. One man is doing as much as several men did 25 years ago. We find, also, automatic switches and automatic couplers. We again are not surprised that there are less than half the railroad men employed today than there were some years ago. These railroad men are out of work. How are we going to put them back to work?

In one of the great steel mills of my State I am advised by those who know about those things that a few years ago to do a certain unit of work required 121 men. With improved machinery and equipment 3 men now do what 121 men did.

I see great steam shovels making large excavations in a city block or on highways, with hundreds of idle men standing by watching the steamshovels.

I am informed that some years back it required one or more men to operate one loom in the textile mills. Now one person operates all the way from 40 to 170 looms. The big question in the textile strike last year was to do something about this stretch-out system.

We have the stretch-out system in the automobile factories, in the mills, shops, on the railroads, in the mines—yes, on the farm. When I was a lad on the farm we would put perhaps a thousand pounds of tobacco, corn, or wheat on a wagon and with a steady plodding old team it would require us about a day to go to town and deliver our load and return to our home. In the past year in Kentucky I observed some trucks with as much as 12,000 pounds of tobacco on a single truck, and this truck was going along at the rate of 45 or 50 miles per hour. This farmer could get his load of tobacco to town, unload it, and get back home almost before breakfast.

This stretch-out system entering into every activity of our complex American life has put millions of good Americans on the streets and highways looking for work. Yes; we have traveled far in the matter of economy and efficiency in mass production, but what about consumption?

As a general rule, well-to-do people and people who can afford it do not eat as much today on the average as they did 25 years ago. We do not wear any more shirts or dresses. It has been suggested that some wear quite a good deal less. In fact, one part of our population is greatly economizing in the use of silks and satins, cotton, and wool in their garments.

I realize that consumption could be greatly enlarged. There are countless millions in this country that are cold and hungry. They need food, clothing, and shelter, and other necessities. Does this condition threaten the welfare of our country and the perpetuity of our institutions?

THE GREAT AMERICAN MENACE

Many of our people are deeply concerned over what they claim is a growing sentiment in our country in favor of communism and sovietism. Others say it means nothing.

I have great faith in the patriotism and fine common sense of the average American. Communism and sovietism would mean very little in our country under normal conditions, but a great army of unemployed people in any country is a real menace.

Nearly all of these unemployed people are good Americans. Many of them fought gloriously on land and sea, in the air and under the sea, in defense of this Nation; others have lived splendid, industrious, sober lives. They are now caught between two great millstones. They are burdened with conditions for which they are not responsible for the making. They do not want charity. They merely want an opportunity to work and earn a support for themselves and their wives and children. They are only human. What must be the effect and what is the effect on their minds to seek work for weeks—yes, for months and into the years—that they might feed their hungry wives and children and provide shelter and clothing for them? What must be the suffering they undergo when they see their loved ones lacking the barest necessities of life and with no opportunities for education and advancement and with the cost of living mounting skyward, lacking meats, fats, and other elements of proper diet?

They are bound to be discouraged. It is an indictment of our Christianity and our twentieth-century civilization for their children to be brought up in these surroundings. The gloom, sorrow, and bitterness of the parents is bound to poison not only the minds and souls of the parents but of the children as well.

I really have been amazed at the fortitude and the splendid manner in which this great army of unemployed have deported themselves during these last 5 trying years. I know I have felt the sting of this depression, but not so deeply as millions of others. Being brought up as the son of a hillside tenant farmer, I know something of the problems of the poor, the meek, and the lowly. I do not see how these Americans, with their wives and children suffering with cold and hunger, could be otherwise than discontented and bitter, and added to this has been the policy of the Government of burning pigs, plowing up cotton, and destroying food.

This great problem must have the hearty cooperation in its solution of industry, agriculture, and commerce, of those who have jobs, and every good American. Humanity demands it, and the self-preservation of all of us and of our country requires it. It must be solved and solved right. It cannot wait forever for solution. After all, this is our country, and every honest, industrious man and woman is entitled to an opportunity to make a decent living for himself and his wife and children. He has a right to ask for that and we should strive to work out a plan whereby he may receive the answer.

Mr. KELLER. What is the gentleman's remedy?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. There are but two things. We must work out a plan to create more work and provide more jobs, or divide the work and the jobs that now exist.

Mr. NICHOLS. You Republicans ought to do it. You put them out of work.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Cease making such futile, silly statements. The gentleman should suggest something more serious and illuminating. Nearly all thoughtful men and women now agree, not only here but in every country of the world, that the present plight of this country and every other country of the world was largely brought about by the World War. It was under your good Democrat, President Wilson, and other Democrats who urged the American people to elect him President on the promise he had kept us out of war and led the people to believe that he would continue to keep us out of war, when at that same time war was being planned by your Democratic administration.

All the records show that there are more people unemployed in America today than at any time in the Hoover administration. Taxes have been increased; the national debt has been increased to nearly $35,000,000,000. As Secretary Ickes declared the other day, there are from 20,000,000 to 30,000,000 people who need relief in this country. There were no such debts and no such number on the relief rolls when Mr. Hoover was President. Your party was elected on the pledge to reduce taxes, reduce the unemployment, and restore prosperity to the country. Your party has violated every pledge. Your party has had control now for over 2 years. Unemployment is on the increase, relief rolls continue to mount and climb, although during these 2 years Congress has placed in the hands of President Roosevelt more than $25,000,000,000, with unlimited and dictatorial power.

Therefore, it is up to your party. You have the control, you have the majority, you have the money, you have everything—it is up to you rather than the Republican minority to put people back to work.

But you will never put people back to work in this country so long as the Government sticks its finger into everybody's eye and its nose into everybody's business, so long as it issues its billions of tax-exempt securities, burns pigs, plows up cotton, destroys wheat and corn, and taxes the poor people to pay other people not to produce. If it is fair and right to tax coal miners and railroad workers to plow up cotton in the South and pay others not to produce cotton and pay people not to produce wheat and corn and hogs in the West on the theory that we have too much cotton and too many hogs and too much wheat and corn, it would be equally just to tax them to pay our idle miners not to dig coal and our idle railroad boys not to run the trains.

Your Democratic administration has put more people out of work and put more people on the relief rolls and put more politicians and faithful Democrats on the backs of the American taxpayers than any administration since the days of George Washington. The Washington papers the other day pointed out the fact that on pay day here, the 15th of April, 1935, it was the biggest sum paid out to Government workers ever paid out in a single day in the history of this country. While people are being pushed out of work and millions of people are hungry and cold, faithful Democrats are being saddled as never before on the backs of American taxpayers. The cost of living is out of reach of the average worker of this country—fatback 25 cents and 30 cents a pound, steak 50 cents a pound. If this administration will quit regimenting labor, industry, and commerce and will give the American people a chance, they will put people back to work and we will work out of this depression; but my Democratic friends will find out that you cannot waste and squander this country into prosperity. It has never been done and it never will be done.

No Democratic administration ever put people back to work. History records that every Democratic administration from the days of Martin Van Buren down to now put them out of work. There must be a restoration of confidence in this country. The policies of the Democratic Party have destroyed confidence. I really believe that if agriculture, commerce, and industry were given a real chance unemployment would be greatly lessened and we would soon be on our way to recovery. But coming back to the original proposition—this country cannot go on with 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 workers out of employment. They need relief—not 1 year from now, nor 5 years from now—they need help now. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein data showing what these people will receive as annuities and so on after they have worked for 5 years at a given salary.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to consume the 10 minutes' time which was given to me, because I was informed there are at least 30 other Members who desire to speak on the social-security bill.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to take advantage or this opportunity to commend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION], who preceded me.

Speaking as a member of the Committee on Labor, I wish to state that last year we held public hearings on the 5-day 6-hour bill. Many witnesses appeared before the committee, and some of them were officials of large industries who protested against the Connery bill. I asked these gentlemen if they had an age limit in their industries. Many of them replied in the affirmative. I ask the Members of Congress What are we going to do for the men and women between the ages of 45 and 65 who cannot obtain employment?

One of the first bills I introduced this session of Congress was to provide $100,000,000,000. This money was to be expended over a period of 10 years and was to be used for the purpose of eradicating slum districts, elimination of dangerous grade crossings, reforestation, drainage of swamps, flood control, soil erosion, the purification of rivers and streams, the construction of disposal plants, schools, and hospitals; for the development of surgical, medical, geological, biological, and other sciences and for every other purpose which will benefit mankind—in other words, to end poverty in the United States. According to my bill, $10,000,000,000 was to be expended in the period of 1 year, which would provide employment for 10,000,000 people in the United States who are out of work.

Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States is to be commended for recommending a bill to Congress which is to provide old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, and so forth. This bill in its present form will do but very little to help the aged and the unemployed.

I favor an adequate old-age pension and adequate unemployment insurance. The bill which is now pending before Congress does not meet the situation. I hope that we will be successful in amending this bill so that the aged, unemployed, and every person who is physically incapacitated will be provided for adequately.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION], who has been in Congress, I am told, for something over 15 years. During a great deal of that time we were in just as great need as we are today of old-age pensions, old-age annuities, and unemployment compensation; but from that inspired source, or the party which he represents, nothing was produced. Now that an idea has been crystalized into legislation we are told by the party represented by the gentleman, on the one hand, that the remedies are wholly inadequate and, on the other, they cry crocodile tears to the taxpayers that its cost is going to be terrible. It reminds me a great deal of the policy—in fact, it is carrying out the policy of that party from 1920 to 1932—in 1920, to the internationalists, they favored an "association of powers"; to the nationalists they were against the League of Nations; to the high- and low-tariff advocates alike they said that the Republican Party was the party of salvation. With the same speech their leader held together those in favor of operating Muscle Shoals and those against; to the drys prohibition was "noble"; to the wets it was an "experiment." They have ever been on both sides of all questions, and all things to all people. And so today they come before us again, telling the taxpayers that this is going to bring them down to ruin; telling those in need of relief that the appropriations are wholly inadequate. To those who desire to help they hand out the old well-tried shell game; to those who cry for help they read the Constitution.

This brings me, Mr. Chairman, to the proposition raised in the minority report of the committee, in which they boldly challenge the constitutionality of the bill. In view of the fact that the majority report says little or nothing on this subject, I wonder if it might not be worth while to discuss it for a minute.

Mr. Chairman, the United States is about the only country of any consequence in the world where the determination of the constitutionality of an act of the legislative body is not by the legislative body itself. For this reason we escape some responsibility, but not all, because as soon as we enact a bill instantly it is vested with a presumption, to be overcome only by facts beyond a reasonable doubt, that it is constitutional. We ourselves are acting under our oaths to support that Constitution. So we do owe an obligation to the people and to ourselves to examine into the constitutionality of this bill.

The Supreme Court, in describing this obligation, says in the case of Knox v. Lee (12 Wall. 457):

> A decent respect for a coordinate branch of the Federal Government demands that the judiciary shall presume, until the contrary is clearly shown, that there has been no transgression of power by Congress, all Members of which act under oath or obligation to the Constitution.

The same Court, in El Paso & Northeastern Ry. Co. v. Gutierrez (215 U. S. 87), brings this long-established doctrine down to date when it says:

> It is hardly necessary to repeat what this Court has often affirmed—that an act of Congress is not to be declared invalid except for reasons so clear and satisfactory as to leave no doubt as to its unconstitutionality.

Yet the minority report criticizes the brief of the Attorney General's office because of its "weak and apologetic language", wherein it argues for the constitutionality of this bill, in part, as follows:

> There may also be taken into consideration the strong presumption which exists in favor of the constitutionality of an act of the Congress, in the light of which and of the foregoing discussion it is reasonably safe to assume that the social-security bill, if enacted into law, will probably be upheld as constitutional.

The gentlemen say that is "weak and apologetic." The only thing that is weak and apologetic about that proposition, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that it is not expressed in terms anything like as forcibly as the Supreme Court has used many, many times. It is a proposition that we must consider here and we are entirely at liberty to consider.

Wherein is the unconstitutionality of this bill? I am not going to enter into a protracted legal discussion at this time. But, briefly, there are two titles in question: One title—title II—provides for payment out of taxes and excise receipts old-age annuities; the other—title VIII—provides for these taxes and excise duties. The power to pay annuities is certainly not one of the Federal functions delegated by the Constitution.

The same is true of the power to acquire new territory, to charter banks, to operate postal savings, to extend State aid in maternity cases, and to create Federal land-bank and farm-loan associations. Yet all of these functions have been sustained by the courts, either because the power involved was one of proper implication, or because the person challenging the right had suffered no damage. Protected by these principles, we operate our Public Health Service, Bureau of Education, Geological Survey, Bureau of Mines, Smithsonian Institute, National Art Gallery, and many kindred activities.

The Supreme Court, in upholding the constitutionality of the act creating Federal land banks, says:

> We, therefore, conclude that the creation of these banks and the grant of authority to them to act for the Government as depositories of public moneys and purchase of Government bonds brings them within the creative power of Congress, although they may be intended, in connection with other privileges and duties, to facilitate the making of loans upon farm securities at low rates of interest.

If the purchase of Government bonds is a proper basis for an implied Federal power, then the present law creating this annuity fund is certainly on solid rock. By 1970 it will have invested in United States bonds over $32,000,000,000. We shall have to rebuild our tariff walls and create some more panics to owe that much by that time. That means a restoration of our Government to the reactionaries, which is beyond the purview of sane prophecy today.

Mr. Chairman, may I say that appearing on the brief filed in the Federal Land Bank case was the name of Charles Evans Hughes. The names of some of the greatest constitutional lawyers of the country also appeared thereon. Mr. (now Chief Justice) Hughes' brief contained the following:

Congress may create in its discretion as in this instance it has created, moneyed institutions to serve as fiscal agents of the Government, and also to provide a market, as stated in the act, for United States bonds.

I trust, however, that before final adoption of this bill, either by this House or in the Senate, title II will be amended so as to provide for the distribution of the old-age-annuity fund through State agencies similar to those provided for in the distribution of unemployment relief. In this way we will remove from the bill the appearance of a grant by the Federal Government to a particular class, and will give the bill the additional strength of providing merely for grants to the States. The administrative difficulty arising from people moving from one State to another is certainly no more insuperable in the execution of this chapter than in many of the other present activities of the Government.

Is there anything unconstitutional in the taxing provisions of title VIII? It provides an income tax under the almost limitless powers conferred by the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution. It also levies an excise tax on employers for the privilege of hiring labor. This law is framed to operate uniformly throughout the United States, and comes directly under the provisions of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution. But it has been stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] that, since the granting of annuities is an unconstitutional Federal function and the tax provision is to provide funds for this purpose, therefore the tax is unconstitutional. The premise of this argument, the unconstitutionality of the appropriation, is rather unstable, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in Smith v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co. (255 U. S. 180), the Land Bank case, and Massachusetts v. Mellon (262 U. S. 447), upholding the Shepherd-Towner Maternity Act. The latter decision specifically answers the argument advanced on the floor of this House that the allotment to the States provided in the Social Security Act is but a cudgel to drive States under Federal control. The Court says:

But what burden is imposed upon the States, equally or otherwise? Certainly there is none, unless it be the burden of taxation, and that falls upon their inhabitants, who are within the taxing power of Congress as well as that of the States where they reside. Nor does the statute require the States to do or to yield anything. If Congress enacted it with the ulterior purpose of tempting them to yield, that purpose may be effectively frustrated by the simple expedient of not yielding.

This House is not interested in listening to an exhaustive legal brief, nor in discussing questions of constitutionality, further than to protect our membership under their oaths, and for that reason I have carefully avoided tedious detail and have made no reference to numerous pertinent cases that are available.

However, to summarize these decisions, we may safely say that there is apparently no precedent under which the courts could declare title 2 unconstitutional. If this should occur, about half of our present Federal activities will be discontinued. Is it within the bounds of reason, then, that title 8, the tax-raising title, otherwise on unimpeachable grounds, will be declared unconstitutional, because these tax funds go to a purpose alleged to be unconstitutional in fact although immune from attack. What a futile act that would be! It would simply mean that Congress would be required to provide funds to carry out title 2 from our general coffers and later reenact title 8 as a separate bill with no physical connection with the Social Security Act. That might have happened during the first decade of this century but hardly now.

Those were the days when the Supreme Court had this Congress supine and helpless so far as any effective regulation of business was concerned. Those were the days when Theodore Roosevelt and the Progressive Party smarting under restricted Federal lawmaking powers expressed ideals and dreamed dreams that could not come to fruition until a second Roosevelt came into power. Theodore Roosevelt believed that when from the nature of things States could not administer a necessary regulation (as they cannot do with unemployment relief), and this function was neither expressly excluded from the regulating power of the Federal Government nor expressly restricted to the States, then it was the duty of the Federal Government to assume control as being the only agency capable of protecting those rights which the Constitution reserved to the people. To reserve a right to the people generally and then furnish no Government to protect or enforce that right was to him unthinkable.

In a speech at Harrisburg, he said:

I cannot do better than base my theory of governmental action upon the words and deeds of one of Pennsylvania's greatest sons, Justice James Wilson He developed, even before Marshall, the doctrine * * * that an inherent power rested in the Nation outside of the enumerated powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, in all cases where the object involved was beyond the power of the several States and was a power ordinarily exercised by sovereign nations. He laid down the proposition that * * * whenever the States cannot act because the need to be met is not one of a single locality, that the National Government, representing all the people should have power to act.

Our Supreme Court has never accepted this as a legal principal, but in the practical operation of government, since 1912, we have gone a long way toward carrying it into effect. There is no present indication of a retreat.

In 1908, Gov. Charles Evans Hughes, in an address at New York City said: "We are under a Constitution, but the Constitution is what the judges say it is." With that viewpoint now presiding over the Supreme Court and with an executive genius leading the minds of our people back into paths of political and economic health, we need have little fear of the constitutionality of the Social Security Act. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN].

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to state at the outset, if there is anyone among you—any dear friend of the beloved Ways and Means Committee and its outstanding chairman [Mr. DOUGHTON], or of the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt, I may say that my love for that beloved committee, its chairman, and for the fearless and peerless President of the United States is no less than his, but my love of my fellowman and my love of principle and justice exceed my love for both of them. It is for that reason, and that reason alone, that I assign myself the task of attacking the measure under consideration.

I may state at the outset that I believe this bill is one of the greatest snares and delusions that could be perpetrated upon the people of America. For as I analyze its provisions, in all fairness and justice, I cannot see where the American public at the present moment will benefit one iota by its provisions—not until 6 years hence, and then it is doubtful whether they will benefit at all.

I have analyzed its language, and I harken back to the decision of that now deceased Supreme Court Justice whose memory is revered and will always be revered by the liberal-minded and patriotic citizens of America, Justice Holmes, who in one of his famous decisions reprimanded insurance companies for permitting salesmen to go across the length and breadth of America, sell policies to the people of the country, send out a policy which, on its face, had very glowing and roseate promises, and on the second and third pages in small and fine print take away almost everything and give only a very limited amount of the proffered protection.

This bill, in large measure, fits that description of Justice Holmes.

For the purpose of enabling each State to furnish financial assistance assuring, as far as practicable, under the conditions in such State, a reasonable subsistence compatible with decency and health to aged individuals without such subsistence.

I read the language of the bill.

Then reading further within the measure, on the back pages thereof, I find that it provides for one-half of 1 percent of the salary of an individual and the term "qualified" individual includes those who do not earn less than $2,000.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONAGHAN. With due respect to my beloved colleague from Kentucky whom I respect and admire as much as any Member of the House. I am not going to yield to anyone, because I have not been given the time I was promised. I was promised 15 minutes and if the gentleman will obtain that time for me I shall yield, otherwise, I will not.

One-half of one percent of $2,000, or more is the basis if that $2,000 is earned after the period of December 31, 1936. Under the average salary of the average individual of America they would have to wait 3 years approximately before they would be able to get a bare $10 under this pauper's dole that is presented.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in my own time?

Mr. MONAGHAN. If the gentleman will yield me the time, I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one-half minute.

Is the gentleman talking about title I in connection with the back pages of the bill which he has mentioned here?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I am talking about the old-age-pension feature.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There is no connection between those two parts of the bill and the gentleman ought to know it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. There is with respect to the term "qualified."

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Absolutely no connection at all; and the gentleman is misleading the House and the country by that statement. The gentleman ought to learn what is in the bill before he comes here and proposes to enlighten the House and the country upon it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The gentleman is wrong if ne maintains that the Supreme Court or anyone else will not read this bill in its entirety and interpret it according to the language found therein.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. I say that title I has no connection with what the gentleman is referring to in the last part of the bill—no connection whatever.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I am talking about the old-age-pension feature, and as I read the bill——

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It is not affected by the $10 or the $2,000 provision or in any sense at all, by what the gentleman has referred to in the back part of the bill. There is no connection between them at all.

Mr. MONAGHAN. To avoid further argument, I will take the gentleman's word for it. However, under the provision of the bill whereby the amount of money is paid according to the salary, a person will not be qualified who does not have an accumulated salary of more than $2,000. Therefore, the average citizen will not qualify under this law or be entitled to a pension until 3 or 4 years hence.

In addition to this, I may point out the fact that this bill fails because it is dependent for its success largely upon the States that have so miserably failed in the past to cope with this great problem of old-age pension and security. To its great credit, that outstanding member of that organization that has done such splendid work to promote this great cause, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Lester Loble, of my State, was the author of the first old-age-pension law in America. The State of Montana, therefore, was the first State in the Union to pass an old-age-pension law. That old-age-pension law is one of the most liberal in the country; and yet when I drove around the State of Montana last summer, I was met time after time by aged couples who came to me with tears in their eyes—people who had built up industry, who had pioneered this country, who had gone out and developed the great West and had the courage to do it—telling me that the county commissioners of their particular county had conferred upon them a draft for a mere $10 or $6 or $5 upon which they expected them to live, and if they could not find themselves able to live upon that sum, then they could return the $6, the $5, or the $10, and the commissioners would see to it that they were taken to the poorhouse.

I say to you, my fellow citizens, that the poorhouse is no place for a proud American citizen who has given his lifetime to the upbuilding of America, its industry and commerce. [Applause.]

Lloyd George, speaking on this subject, said, "the laboring man who has given health, strength, vigor, and skill to the creation of the wealth from which tax revenues are to be derived, has himself already built up the fund from which the pension is to be paid." [Applause.]

When the sun of life begins to set upon the aged of our country, the benevolent and protective hand of the Government should extend to them a relief from the weary toils of the day and to bring relief, comfort, and security to them when the burdens of life are hardest to bear and when the darkening shadows of approaching night begin to fall across his path to make further toil impossible, to make further travel insecure, a just reward which their toil has merited; an adequate old-age pension, and not a pauper's dole.

I say if you pass this bill today without amending it, without improving it, without giving to the people something substantial, you will be doing a more vain thing than if you did not pass it at all.

Consider the wonderful possibilities of an adequate pension, if we should enact one.

During the last session of Congress, after endless effort, overcoming the opposition of veteran Members of the House and strong forces in the Senate, that outstanding leader from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], in poor health at the time, and myself battled against that opposition of House and Senate. I say Senate because we went over there, too, and worked, and were able to get on the statute books a retirement system, which, when put into operation in towns where railroading was the exclusive industry, ended unemployment for the railroad men. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the rule making this bill in order because I felt, and still feel, that this is the time for adequate legislation for social security; and we finally have the opportunity of acknowledging this responsibility and giving social security to the people of the country. It will be a victory for those who have during the years been asking and demanding this type of legislation.

During the consideration of this bill we will have an opportunity to offer amendments to title I, which carries old-age pensions. And during the consideration of this title amendments will be offered which will have for their purpose the liberalizing of its provisions. When these amendments are offered, I shall be pleased to support such amendments as will increase the amounts paid our aged citizens in the form of old-age assistance.

During the past few months a good deal of propaganda has been disseminated throughout the country with reference to the so-called "Townsend revolving old-age pension plan." Those who advocated the Townsend plan have demanded that we as Members of Congress support that plan without amendment. You and I have all received hundreds and thousands of letters and other communications from constituents and from others throughout the country demanding that we adopt the original Townsend plan without any amendment whatsoever. From the beginning, I felt that the original Townsend plan was economically unsound, and have not hesitated to so state on the floor, as I have in newspaper releases in my district, and in reply to letters from my constituents. I am glad to see, however, that recently Mr. MCGROARTY, the Member who introduced the original Townsend plan in the House, has seen fit to submit a modified Townsend plan, and, in my opinion, the modified plan does away with many of the objectionable features of the original plan.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. In a few moments if I have the time. This modified plan, as I understand it, provides that pensions shall be paid in amounts not in excess of $200 a month, but you and I, as Members of this House, and everyone else who has gone into the provisions of that bill and made a study of it, know very well that there will not be a sufficient amount of money provided under the provisions of that bill to pay pensions in excess of $50 a month. If that be true, as I believe even those who support the McGroarty bill admit, then why in the name of common sense do not the proponents of that legislation, and those who are speaking throughout the country in favor of the Townsend plan, say so, and stop the propaganda still coming to Congress, even at this late day, asking for the bill which our aged citizens are told will pay them $200 a month? [Applause.]

I am for old-age pensions and I am willing to vote for a pension plan that would pay $50 a month. That does not bother me. What is more, I am willing to reduce the age limit in this bill down to 60 years, as the Townsend men demand. I am willing to accept $50 or even $60 a month as necessary for a decent living for those of our aged citizens who are unable to provide for themselves. I am willing to reduce the age to 60 years, because I know that people over 60 years of age cannot find jobs in industry; but I as one Member of this House take this occasion to say that I cannot vote for the Townsend plan so long as it contains its present taxing provisions. I cannot vote for a transaction tax because it would "run out of business" every small industry in this country.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I remind the gentleman that Dr. Townsend himself when he appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means on the original bill stated that he intended and desired that Henry Ford and John D. Rockefeller and Morgan and Mellon and men of that type should share under his plan.

Mr. BOILEAU. They sure will share, not only in the pension, but in the benefit they will derive by knocking every small industry out of business—and why do I say that? This transaction tax would be levied against each and every transaction, and let me give you a few illustrations. Take, for instance, the chain stores. They do not buy from the wholesaler, they buy direct from the manufacturer, and thereby eliminate that one transaction, which is 2 percent. They buy direct from the manufacturer and distribute it to their own stores themselves. They thereby get the advantage of 2 percent over the independent merchant.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. In a moment. Let us take the automobile industry. Take the large manufacturer. He owns his own mine, he does not have to buy the ore, and he owns his own smelters. He transports the ore from his own mine to his own smelter and he avoids paying a tax on that transaction. He takes the steel into his factory. He owns his own timber and he avoids paying a tax on the timber because he owns the timber himself. He takes it to his own sawmills and brings all those materials into his factory without paying a single transaction tax. He does not have to buy these materials, because he operates on a large scale and manufactures his own raw materials. He pays the tax only on the ultimate selling transaction. The independent, the small manufacturer, has to pay the tax on his steel, on his tin, on his wood, on his glass, and rubber, and tires, and all those things, so that he has to pay a pyramided sales tax that will amount in many instances from 12 to 15 percent. The large manufacturer would have that much advantage over the small industry which assembles these products, and the result will be that the small man is put out of business. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. The objection the gentleman raises, which is valid in the opinion of everyone, has already been met by an amendment that will be proposed in case the modified McGroarty bill is offered.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the Townsend plan is to be amended as to age and benefits and they are going to accept 65 years and all these other provisions, why talk about the Townsend plan, why not talk about our plan and get down to brass tacks? [Applause.]

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman to a statement of Dr. Townsend himself before the Ways and Means Committee. He said:

> It has been very obvious to all of us that it would be quite impossible to start pensioning all of the old folks who have attained the age of 60 at one particular time, but it is also very obvious that it will take several years even to register them—a good many months. Now, if we were to start at the age of 75, we will say——

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. It is obvious to the gentleman, then, according to the statement of Dr. Townsend, that they have abandoned the idea of the 60-year pensionable age and have gone to 75. In this bill we start at 65, which is a reasonable compromise.

Mr. BOILEAU. Now, I want to point out the various obstacles to the Townsend plan.

As far as the State of Wisconsin is concerned, we are largely a dairy State. I received a telegram this morning from one of the large weekly newspapers in my district. It is the largest paper in one of my largest counties. This telegram stated that 90 percent of the people of Wisconsin are in favor of the Townsend plan and that if I did not vote for it at this session I would not have a chance in the next Congress.

Now, I am perfectly willing to accept that challenge. I do not know whether the people of my State are 90 percent in favor of the Townsend plan or not. I presume the author of the telegram must have meant the Townsend plan as it was originally written, because he got in touch with me some time ago and wanted my support of the original plan. He apparently does not know it has been greatly modified. But in my humble judgment, I can go back to my people and explain to them the obnoxious provisions of the Townsend plan and I will rely upon their good judgment to at least not vote against me on that issue. They may vote against me and defeat me for other reasons.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. My time is very limited, but I will yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I just want to say that handling it in that way will raise us all in the estimation of the country.

Mr. BOILEAU. Now, this transaction tax will simply mean that the small crossroad cheese factory will be kicked out, because they do not operate on a 2-percent profit. The Kraft concern, for instance, and other large processors and handlers, could operate cheese factories and process the cheese without paying that one transaction tax, which competition will knock every small cheese factory out of the State of Wisconsin. The same thing will happen to our creameries.

In Wisconsin and all over the dairy sections of the country the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. have their own condensories. They would avoid that one transaction tax. If they had a 2-percent differential, they could knock out every condensory in my section. They would have such an advantage over the small, independent milk plant that the independents and cooperatives would be forced out of business.

I submit to you that the provisions of the Townsend bill with this transaction tax would absolutely wipe out all small, independent business. It would tend toward further monopolies, mergers, and combines. It would be the death knell to the small business man of this country, and I for one cannot favor it. It would tend to create more and more chain stores.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] said they were going to offer an amendment to do away with it. How do they propose to raise the money? I would like the gentleman to reply briefly.

Mr. MOTT. The amendment that I suggested to the gentleman, and which will be offered in case the revised McGroarty bill is presented and held germane, would follow section 2, after line 16, on page 6 of the printed bill, H. R. 7154, which is the section providing for the 2-percent transaction tax, and would read as follows:

Provided, however, That in the case of manufactured articles made by assembling together component parts thereof, such as automobiles, machinery, furniture, etc., the transaction tax herein provided shall be levied upon each of such component parts without regard as to whether the same were made by the manufacturer assembling said parts into such completed manufactured article or whether the same were purchased by said manufacturer from another; and in computing the transaction tax to be levied upon the gross dollar value of the completed assembled article there shall be added to such transaction tax a tax of 2 percent upon the gross dollar value of each component part thereof upon which a transaction tax has not been paid: And provided further, That in cases where the manufacturer of an article upon which a transaction tax is payable is also the producer or owner of the raw material from which said article is manufactured, then the transaction tax of 2 percent upon the raw material used in the manufacture of said article shall be added to the transaction tax to be levied upon such manufactured article and shall be paid by the manufacturer thereof.

In my opinion such an amendment would cure the objection the gentleman from Wisconsin was making when I interrupted him.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman very much. That is the multiple sales tax, nevertheless, is it not?

Now, I just want to say in conclusion that if we accept all these amendments——

Mr. MOTT. Perhaps I have not completely answered the whole of the gentleman's last question.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would like to conclude my remarks, as my time has nearly expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. BOILEAU. The modification referred to by the gentleman from Oregon does not prevent the chain stores, mail-order houses, and the large operators in the dairy industry, and so forth, from having such an advantage over the independent merchant and small handler of such products that will destroy such smaller industries. In conclusion, I wish to say that if we are going to change the amount from $200 down to $50, if we are going to change the age limit from 65 to 60 years, if we are going to change the method of raising the money with which to pay the pensions, if we are going to eliminate this multiple sales tax and so completely change the proposal, who in the name of common sense has the nerve to say that it is the Townsend plan and can give any credit to that organization for the approval of the old-age-pension plan? [Applause.]

I want to take this opportunity to say that, in my opinion, the one organization that has done more to advance the interest of old-age pensions in this country than all others combined is the Fraternal Order of Eagles, an organization that has been consistently fighting for a program of old-age pensions for many years. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose I have to discuss the Townsend plan very much after the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] has left the floor. It was exactly my opinion that the Townsend plan, which will be offered as a substitute, should be voted down.

Since I have sat here and listened to the colloquy and the questions and answers by my colleagues, no one has discussed the other proposed plan which will be offered as a substitute, which is the Lundeen bill.

I want to discuss the Lundeen bill briefly, and what I said over the air about this bill on March 20, 1935, I will say again: That the Lundeen bill goes almost farther than one can imagine. It proposes to take all the money out of the Treasury; whatever is there is going to be taken out. It will require about $14,000,000,000 to distribute $10 a week to each unemployed person, with $3 for each dependent. As though this were not enough, in addition everybody is to be assessed on all income he has over $5,000. I could almost forgive him for that, but it goes still further: The workers then will take the money—not the Government, not the Congress, not the President, but the workers—and distribute it in accordance with this plan. Now I see why all these Communists have been around my house for the last year, because I refused to subscribe to this particular plan.

Mr. Chairman, Congress is making history; it is doing something for the aged; and you and I know that when old age creeps upon one it does not affect the rich only or the poor only; it affects everybody, and God knows what a great thing it would be if the American Congress would pass an honest-to-goodness old-age-security plan and a general social-welfare plan. We must be careful what we do, however. There are some amendments that should be added to the present bill, but it seems to me the pending plan, offered by the administration, by the chairman of this committee, is very constructive, very firm, and has at least some background of policy upon which as time goes on we can construct a proper unemployment-insurance plan.

I say to you that all these so-called "plans" which spring up overnight ought to be discarded in one wastebasket. I venture the assertion that if somebody should propose a plan for $300 a month we would get a tremendous number of letters favoring it. The people do not seem to realize that the money has got to come from somewhere; that we cannot go into the Public Treasury and take out $14,000,000,000 and distribute it amongst a certain group of people, some of whom do not want to work.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. GRANFIELD. I understand the Lundeen unemployment plan would cost the Government $14,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. GRANFIELD. And the original Townsend plan would cost the Government $24,000,000,000.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is approximately correct.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman please state the source from which he gets the figures that the Lundeen bill will cost $14,000,000,000 a year?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Because it starts at age 18 and considers every able-bodied worker above the age of 18, the farmer, the butcher, the grocer, the errand boy, everybody is included in this plan; and the whole country would be working for the Government.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. One more statement, if the gentleman will permit. I think the gentleman is mistaken. If the gentleman will read the report he will find that a university professor of New York City maintained it would not cost more than $6,000,000,000 at the outside.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. My opinion is just as good as the professor's opinion.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. The pension plan only calls for $10 per week with an additional $3 for dependents under a certain age.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have gone to the trouble of taking pencil and paper and figuring out how many aged people and how many young people there were, beginning at age 18, and I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it will take more than $14,000,000,000.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is mistaken in his figures, however.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. I understood the gentleman to say that the Communist Party endorses the Lundeen bill.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. It is a humanitarian measure. More power to the Communists for endorsing it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is a fact they have endorsed it. I do not say that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] introduced his bill for any ulterior purpose. He took his action in good faith, but I say to you that this proposed bill, in my opinion, is nothing but an out-and-out communistic program—that is the Lundeen bill, which seeks to distribute the wealth of the country in one form or another. I say to you that now I can understand why these Communists have paraded around my home and my city with big placards, demanding that we support and vote for the Lundeen bill, because it is going to put everybody over the age of 18 years on Uncle Sam's pay roll.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman desires to be very fair; will he yield for a short question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. What would the gentleman say should be done to take care of the aged and the unemployed today? How much money does the gentleman think would be needed to take care of them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want the gentleman to know that I will support any social legislation that is reasonable. I will go as far as any man in this House. I believe that an old man or an old woman who has done something for his or her country should be taken care of properly.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I say, however, that if we are going to have legislation let it be on a constructive basis. We do not want any communistic platform or principles in the American Government. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman believe that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] had that in mind when he proposed his bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not charge that to the gentleman from Minnesota. They sold him a bill of goods when they gave him that bill; and I am surprised, even though I have the highest respect for the Committee on Labor, that that committee should have reported that kind of bill to the House.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. It is because we are very progressive, very intelligent, and very humane that we reported that bill out.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. But the gentleman and his committee were too "progressive" when they voted out that bill.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. In connection with anything we do which is humanitarian we are accused of being Communists, but I am glad to be a Communist if it is going to provide adequate old-age pensions and adequate unemployment insurance.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman does not have to be a Communist to support old-age pension and old-age security legislation. I am with the gentleman and compliment him for his attitude. He does not have to be a Communist to support such measures, but when he votes out a bill which provides that the workers will distribute the money and we have nothing to do with it and the President has nothing to do with it—the workers going to the Treasury and taking out $14,000,000,000—I say it is not practical.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. The Labor Department is the Department which according to the Lundeen bill provides the money. That is in the Lundeen bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not yield further.

Mr. Chairman, I will support any social-security bill which will definitely and positively care for the aged and the unemployed.

Not since the days of Woodrow Wilson and that history-making Sixty-third Congress, when so much important legislation was put on our statute books, has there been a Congress which did as much for the people of the United States as the present one. When hundreds of years hence, history of the United States will come to be written in terms of achievement we will have to hearken back to the debate of this floor which has now been conducted for several days to find such constructive and solid achievement of government. Our legislation today is record breaking and the statutes we are enacting today will forever lift the specter of want and depression from the shoulders of the American people. We are providing in short for social security, the security of every man and woman who is gainfully employed to see to it that they are not caught again in the throes of unemployment, and security provided for old age so that when men and women have passed their prime and are no longer in a position to be gainfully employed, the community should step in and save old age from want. Such in brief are the purposes of the bill, and such in brief are the ideals which this administration wishes to enact into law by way of stabilizing and assuring our people of a fair and honorable living.

Now, as to the means, the bill before the House is particularly commendable because of the fact that it places the burden of providing for social security on the several States rather than the Nation. It will encourage the States in making every liberal provision for old age and unemployment insurance as its finances may allow, and at the same time gives the Federal Government the right to supervise the vestments of the funds to be used in connection with the several features of the new law. The Federal Government is also going to match all of the funds in old-age insurance so that for every dollar a State may contribute in that connection the Federal Government is likewise going to contribute a dollar, with the proviso, however, that at no time shall the Federal Government be obligated to pay more than $15 per month for any one person. It, therefore, establishes a sort of standard of old-age insurance at the rate of $30 a month, which, while it may not be sufficient to make an old man live in affluence, nevertheless, it would definitely remove an old man or woman from the rolls of public charity. Personally, I should favor the law to be amended so as to provide for a minimum of $50 per month for the support of the aged.

The advance of science resulted in large numbers of men and women living to a ripe old age so that the number of people who would be dependent on old-age insurance is likely to grow with the years rather than diminish. It is estimated that in years to come there will be 15,000,000 old people in the United States over the age of 65, although at the present time there are only 7,500,000 men and women in this country who are over 65 years of age. Out of the 7,500,000 of old men and women approximately 1,000,000 are now dependent on public support, the great majority of them being on relief. In order to permit an individual to establish for himself old-age insurance, the Government is going to sell directly to everyone in the United States an annuity which will mature at the age of 65 years and which will enable anyone who wishes to carry his own insurance to do so at cost. The Government has not yet prepared any schedules to show in detail as to how this plan will work out, but undoubtedly this plan will become very popular, and there is no question but that large numbers of people will avail themselves of the opportunity of carrying their own insurance against the vicissitudes of old age. This will, of course, relieve the communities from the burden of caring for old men and women and will supplement to a very large extent the Government's program for social security.

Old-age security is not the only feature of the bill. Unemployment is even more of a curse of modern society than is dependent old age. Some plan of unemployment insurance had therefore to be devised if ours was to be a country where the individual was to live happily and enjoy the blessings of civilization. We must not permit a condition of affairs to arise where large numbers of men and women should find themselves an object of public charity because of their inability to secure employment. In this connection many plans have been proposed and many plans will be brought up on the floor of the House before the final vote is taken on the measure. There are plans which throw the entire burden of unemployment insurance on the State, others throw it upon the employer, and still other plans divide the burden between the employer and the employee. The bill as it stands seeks to impose this tax on the employer only, but each State is free to assess the cost not only on the employer but likewise on the employee, and as it appears from the report of the committee the State of Washington has already created this liability on employer and employee alike.

But no matter how unemployment insurance is to be handled, and irrespective of the method adopted, it should be conducted on a sound actuarial basis free from any paternalistic form and free from any appeals to public prejudices.

I was always in the front ranks of those who believe that the "laborer is worthy of his hire"; who believe that labor should be adequately paid for its efforts. I believe that wages should be adequate to enable the worker to enjoy his life and to reap the benefit of his toil for himself and his family. I believe that the worker should be adequately compensated, adequately housed, adequately clothed, and adequately taken care of, but I do not believe that anyone should be supported by the Government or should become the ward of our Government.

If pernicious legislation of the type of the Lundeen bill is allowed to prevail, it will create a drain upon the Treasury which will eventually destroy this Government. We cannot live on bounties and we cannot create money out of nothing. This country has achieved its standing in the world through the labor of its masses, and only by labor can we expect to thrive and succeed.

I have always been a sponsor of the interest of the masses and the interest of labor. While a member of the State legislature and a Member of the American Congress, I always sponsored legislation to help, aid, and assist labor, and was always endorsed for election by labor as a legislator, who has the interests of labor at heart, and whose work benefits the toiling masses of our people. I belong to the same class to which my constituents belong, the class which works with brain or brawn, and which earns its living by the sweat of the brow.

I am therefore heartily in favor of this legislation, will support it in every way and feel that the interest of our country lies in the intelligent settlement of the great problem of old age and unemployment, which this bill so intelligently attempts to solve.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I favor the enactment of titles I, IV, V, and VI of this act, covering as they do the provisions for old-age pensions, for maternal and child welfare, and for public health.

They seem to offer a hope of the solution of the problem of relief from that want and distress which eats out the very soul of many thousands, if not millions, of our fellow countrymen annually. In some small measure the provisions of this law should or ought to bring relief to and restore confidence in the body politic, without which there can be no recovery.

Old age, which comes to everyone who does not die prematurely, is a misfortune if no income has been provided with which to alleviate the burdens of the later years of life. It has taken us a long time to realize that there is a need for some safeguard against such misfortune, which no man can wholly eliminate in this world of ours.

While traditionally—and determinedly—opposed to the theory of paternalism in government and perhaps open to the charge of inconsistency, I have come thoroughly to believe that some such provisions as are contained in the titles to which I have above referred should be enacted into law.

I am constrained to admit that in the present emergency it is probably necessary that the Federal Government shall become cooperatively responsible for a contribution toward the payment of old-age pensions. I am still of the opinion that it is a matter that of right should be handled by the States as such, though some of the 28 States now having old-age-pension laws, in the present emergency, are not able to carry out the provisions of the law.

My own State of Vermont, at the session of its legislature which adjourned last Friday night, passed an old-age-assistance act by the terms of which assistance is to be given to qualified persons having attained the age of 65 years. It being provided that there be a maximum of $30 per month per single person, half of which is to be paid by the State and half by the Federal Government. A maximum of $45 a month is provided for man and wife living together.

The portion of the expense of the act which is to be borne by the State is to be met by the imposition of a head tax of $1 a year for the present year, and thereafter $1.75 per year. Payment of this head tax, it is interesting to note, shall be necessary for qualification as a voter, for registration of an automobile, and makes a husband responsible for his wife's head tax.

I regret that the good and the bad, as I see it, are so inseparably joined in this measure. I read the provisions of title II and VIII and III and IX and view with apprehension the result of the enactment of the provisions therein contained. I do not know, and I cannot find anybody who does know, what may be the collateral effects of the proposed unemployment insurance upon the conduct of industry, upon the mobility of labor, upon the regularity of employment, upon wage negotiations and the level of wages, upon costs of production, and upon the element of competition in industry. I cannot find the answer in the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means on this bill to alleviate the hazards of old age, unemployment, and so forth. However, the experience of the countries that have tried out a similar scheme to that which this measure in those titles would establish has been other than satisfactory or encouraging for us, if I can read and understand the English language. Their experience should give us pause.

Everybody knows that the real price of unemployment to every community is measured by the lost productive capacity of the unemployed. The direct cost of unemployment consists of the cost of maintaining the unemployed, but it is none the less a charge against the individual taxpayer, whether it is met out of Federal or State funds; out of local contributions or by private charity, or from any other source.

It may be that the time has come when unemployment benefits must be held to be a national charge, but the Committee on Economic Security, in making its report to the President, frankly admitted that its recommendations with respect to unemployment compensation are "frankly experimental." The plan suggested by the committee, which is before us in substance, is, according to their own admission, one that will secure the much-needed experience necessary for the development of a more nearly perfect system. They anticipate it will require numerous changes, nevertheless they urge haste and experimentation. Why the necessity for haste? I am opposed to haste and experimentation at the people's expense. I am in favor of taking more time for a more careful study of the situation, and the eventual submission of a more satisfactory plan, which admittedly might later be submitted, if we were not in such a needless hurry to act first only to be sorry afterward.

The only satisfactory cure for unemployment is work, and it is idle to expect that any system of unemployment insurance will operate well or smoothly or satisfactorily, while unemployment remains at such an abnormal level as it has reached in these United States today. Unemployment is an international as well as a national problem. It results from the industrial system under which we live, of which the workers are not the authors, but the victims.

After having studied so serious a problem as this for but a year or two, in this era of experimentation, we are ready once more to experiment at a cost so terrific as to be staggering, if we can but comprehend what the result may be if the plan does not work. Other countries, after scores of years of experimentation and study, have hesitated to do some of the very things it is suggested that we, following inexperienced, theoretical, impractical but enthusiastic economists should blindly do.

In my opinion these provisions do the very things which the President would wish to have us avoid, namely, they disregard the sound and necessary policy for Federal legislation for permanent economic security by attempting to apply it on too ambitious a scale before a more careful and prolonged study of the actual experience of other countries would provide proper guidance for such permanently safe direction of our efforts.

Because the cost may be what it may be and the benefits which are offered for our allurement are so meager, even at best, I believe as trustees of those whose interests we are sent here to serve, and as representatives of the people we ought to have something to say about legislation, and both comprehend and apprehend the good or evil bound to result from the action we take. Titles II and VIII and III and IX are loaded with dynamite, and I shall vote for the bill containing these features, if I do, with many misgivings. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the limited time allotted me does not afford an opportunity for a discussion of the various titles of the bill and the provisions therein contained. Therefore I choose to address my remarks and invite your attention to title I, "Grants to States for old-age assistance."

Before expressing my views on this chapter of the bill, I cannot refrain from voicing what I intend as, and trust is, constructive criticism of the measure as a whole. In doing so, I do not impugn the motives or sincerity of purpose of our beloved President, and the leader of my party, nor of the Ways and Means Committee, who, after extensive hearings, reported the bill in its present form.

In this bill we are attempting to legislate on at least six different subjects, either one of which is of such magnitude and importance as to merit and command independent thought, consideration, and action. In my humble judgment the wiser course and policy would be to bring in separate bills for each title and subject treated in this measure. This is an omnibus bill and contains many good features and seeks a worthy objective, but there are also many objectionable provisions that should be eliminated. And notwithstanding several amendments may be adopted, in the final analysis, we shall be compelled to take the bad in order to preserve the good, or defeat it. I regret exceedingly our President and the Ways and Means Committee have deemed it wise to have these various subjects considered in an omnibus bill of this fashion. I am hoping I can support it on final passage, but I shall do so reluctantly and only because I am convinced it is the best that can be done at this session of Congress, and with the hope that it lays the foundation on which we can later build a structure of social and economic security worthy of democracy, and which is so sorely needed in this time of our greatest social and economic distress.

I am greatly interested in the provisions of title I. It is gratifying that the national responsibility and obligation to provide assistance to those of our citizens who, by reason of the infirmities of old age, can no longer earn a living, is being recognized and given legislative sanction. But the indirect way in which it is proposed this recognition shall be given warrants severe criticism. By the terms of this bill we make the obligation of the Federal Government direct to the several States, and in the nature of Federal aid to the States. Whereas the obligation of the Government is direct to every American citizen who comes within the class to be benefited, irrespective of State citizenship. This bill attempts to discharge the national responsibility in an indirect way and this policy is wrong and will result in unjust and harmful discrimination against citizens of the poorer States and favor those of the wealthier States.

This means that some American citizens, 65 years of age and older, will receive $15 per month out of the Federal Treasury, this by reason of their State citizenship. Whereas other American citizens of the same class and circumstances will be denied this aid because the States in which they happen to reside are unable to raise revenues to match Federal funds. This principle is wrong, inequitable, and is unfair and should be eliminated from this bill.

We may concede, without admitting, for the purpose of this discussion, that there is equal responsibility on the State governments and the Federal Government to provide this relief. If this is true, and the State is unable to meet its obligation in this respect, this does not justify the Federal Government in refusing to discharge its share of the obligation to the individual citizen.

Whether an old-age pension is treated as a gratuity, given solely in the nature of relief and charity, or as compensation merited by reason of loyal citizenship over a period of years, the principle involved is the same. If the Federal Government is going to make a gift to a class of its citizens, it should not give to some and withhold from others. Such gift should not be contingent upon the financial circumstances and ability of the State in which the citizen lives to match dollars for the same purpose with the Federal Government. If any State cannot carry its share of the burden this is all the more reason why the Government should discharge its share of the obligation rather than withhold it. State boundary lines should not be regarded. If it is a gift, the grant should be made, insofar as the Federal Government is concerned, to every citizen alike who qualifies as to age and financial circumstances. If it is considered a debt the Government owes, compensation, payment, or reward for services rendered, the same principle should apply.

My State is unable to meet the responsibility this law imposes, and I am persuaded there are other States that will be unable to raise sufficient revenues to match Federal funds, and thus the citizens of these States are going to be denied equal consideration by the Federal Government in this very worthy and commendable undertaking.

We must remember in this program we are dealing, not with property rights, but with human beings—with life itself, seeking to make it more secure. The purpose of this legislation is, or should be at least, to enable a class of our citizens to have and enjoy as they face the setting sun such comforts of life as humble necessities afford. These benefits should not be offered and made possible to some and withheld and denied others. If our Government is going to make a gift or payment for the benefit of her citizens of a certain age who have no means of support, or pay to them a merited compensation, it should be equitably distributed to this class regardless of their local residence. We must acknowledge that the Government has ascertained its ability and the propriety of paying $15 per month to this class of her citizens; therefore, justice demands that this blessing be spread upon the table for all and denied to none within this designated class.

The amount of the appropriation, $49,750,000, carried in this measure is inadequate. There are 7,500,000 persons in the United States 65 years of age and over. In my State there are 75,000 of this age. On this basis Arkansas would receive approximately $1 out of each hundred of this appropriation, or approximately $500,000. Of the 75,000 citizens in Arkansas 65 years of age and over, at least one-third, or 25,000—and this is very conservative—can and will qualify for these benefits. A very simple mathematical calculation shows that this $500,000 would only provide $20 per year, or $1.67 per month for each citizen in Arkansas entitled to this aid. Assuming this sum is matched by the State, the State and Federal funds will only provide $3.33 per month per person. This is wholly inadequate to provide any measure of substantial relief. It would be ample, possibly, to provide for a man and his wife the funds to buy a bottle of liniment for him and a box of headache tablets for her each month. If this be charity, my friends, it is small indeed. If it is compensation, is is too meager to mention.

If this bill is enacted in its present form it will prove a great disappointment to those whom it is designed to aid and assist. It will discriminate against citizens of the poorer States and favor those of the more wealthy. To that extent it is undemocratic, and we should amend this bill—and I trust it will be—so that the national responsibility, here recognized, to this class of our citizens shall be discharged equitably and without discrimination against any American citizen regardless of his State citizenship.

I sincerely hope we will rise to the occasion and amend this law so that its benefits, although limited, will be denied to none whose age and circumstances qualify them for this assistance. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the following is a copy of House Concurrent Memorial No. 8 of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas:

House Concurrent Memorial 8

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has now under consideration before the House Ways and Means Committee House Resolution 4120, by Mr. DOUGHTON, of North Carolina, which resolution provides for the payment of Federal pensions to needy and destitute citizens who have reached the age of 65 years; and

Whereas the provisions of this resolution require that the various States of the Union shall make an equal contribution to such pension fund before they, as such States, shall be entitled to the benefits of such old-age pensions; and

Whereas the State of Arkansas, with other States of this Union, are at this time in such financial distress that they are wholly unable to raise any appreciable funds for this great and pressing need, thereby depriving our citizens in sharing the benefits bestowed upon those of other and more favored States, possessed of much greater financial wealth and resources: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Arkansas (the senate jointly concurring therein), That this assembly petition and memorialize the Congress of the United States of America, now in session at Washington, D. C., to take such action as to amend House Resolution 4120 that this most pressing need and worthy benefit may be received in some degree at least by those States which possess no resources at this time for this most worthy and humane purpose.

Approved March 21, 1935.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, may I request at the outset that I be not interrupted during my remarks. I will be glad to answer any questions when I get through with my main discourse. Let me state, Mr. Chairman, that insofar as the advocacy of old-age pensions and unemployment insurance is concerned, I yield to no man in this House as to a keener desire to serve the needy of this country. As far back as 1922 I have taken an active, energetic interest in the program sponsored by the Fraternal Order of Eagles and I have been of some help to that great organization.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out at this time that the present administration under the leadership of President Roosevelt has undertaken to take care of the needy people of this country and he is particularly interested in the aged and infirm and underprivileged. He is interested in providing a method guaranteeing the future of those who today are able to purchase for themselves annuities which will be ample to provide for their declining days after they attained the age of 65.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been under consideration by the Ways and Means Committee for over 10 weeks. We have had every conceivable kind of advice in connection with its possible operation and result and the fair-minded Member of the House will concede that the Ways and Means Committee is as generous toward the wishes of the membership and towards the needs and wishes of our people as is any other committee or any other Member of the House.

The Ways and Means Committee has taken into consideration the possibilities of this far-reaching measure and the ability of this Government at this tragic time to extend itself beyond reasonable limits. This administration has undertaken a broad, general program, adding this measure for social security, such a bill as has never been contemplated before; yet, in spite of that, we are faced today with a clamor for extreme radical legislation that has no basis for claim in this House at this time.

The members of this committee concede that while we would like from the very outset to create a bill that is perfect, it is humanly impossible to do so. We have examined and analyzed the practice and the experience of foreign countries with respect to similar legislation. We have examined the laws and the practice and whatever experience the respective States may have had with similar legislation, and with all this the committee has whole-heartedly gone into the building up of a bill that will meet the test of time.

It is manifestly clear that under the Doughton bill (H. R. 7260), with the volume of taxes and moneys coming to the Government for ultimate distribution to the needy of this country, billions will have to be collected and disbursed, and we must proceed in a cautious, careful manner.

Let us analyze, for example, whether or not the pension provision, or title I, of this bill is generous or not, at least as a first step in the proper direction. The average monthly relief cost in my State, which is Michigan, amounts to $30.22 for the average family with dependents, and the average relief cost in the United States of America is $25.83. Under the terms of this bill, if a State meets the $15 contribution of the Federal Government, an aged couple without dependents will receive the amount of $60 monthly from the State and Federal Governments. Roughly speaking, this is twice as much as families with dependents are receiving in my State today, and better than twice and a half the amount of the average over the United States of America. If this is not a generous, a good start, then we cannot appeal to the fairness of the Membership of this House.

My predecessor on the floor stated that the bill is niggardly and that it provides for only $50,000,000 on the part of the Federal Government, but he failed to take into consideration the fact that this amount is only for the first year. He failed to take into account the fact that the average State will have to enact laws to meet the minimum requirements of this bill, and this will take anywhere from 1 to 2 years, and in some instances, unless the Governor calls a special session of the legislature, it will take even longer, and therefore the entire 48 States will not be drawing upon the Federal Government for their pro rata allowance. However, the bill provides that for the second year and thereafter as much as is necessary to meet the demands of the respective States will be appropriated by the Federal Government.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. May I suggest to the gentleman that $125,000,000 was in the original draft, but in the final draft of the bill (H. R. 7260) the committee allowed a sum sufficient to meet all demands of the States.

Mr. DINGELL. That is correct.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And may I further say that this $50,000,000 for title 1 is on a 50–50 basis, which means $100,000,000 for old-age pensions in the first year. This sum is three and a third times the amount of money now being expended for old-age pensions in the 48 States.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question in that connection?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman explain why the committee felt it was necessary to have a means test under title I? Does the gentleman think that is necessary?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit, there is no Federal test. It is left wide open to the legislatures of the State to determine who is without subsistence and who needs pensions in order to have a suitable subsistence.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. So it is the opinion of the committee that this legislation by no means imposes on the States the necessity of requiring a means test?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The legislature will set forth certain requirements, but there is no means test so far as the Congress is concerned. It is left open to the States to determine who should have the benefit of the measure.

Mr. DINGELL. That is correct.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman stated that the pension systems of foreign countries were considered by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. Did the committee consider the system in vogue in the countries of Norway and Sweden?

Mr. DINGELL. I could not say as to the Norwegian and Swedish systems, but the experience of European governments, as a whole, has been rather unsatisfactory and did not give the committee any encouragement. In the final analysis, as a whole, the pension schemes and plans in the European countries have fallen down.

Mr. KENNEY. The gentleman does not mean to say that the Norwegian plan has fallen down?

Mr. DINGELL. I am speaking of European systems as a whole. I am not singling out the Norwegian system at all.

I may say to the gentleman that so far as the work of the committee in connection with this legislation is concerned, we are taking into consideration and covering more territory and undertaking to take care of more people in a more generous way than any other similar plan that was ever advanced, at less cost to the citizens of this country than in any similar instance in the world.

Mr. KENNEY. I realize that, but I do not think the committee has gone the whole way as it could and as it should.

Mr. DINGELL. It is entirely possible that the committee, in its humanly deficient way, would probably fall short in examining everything in the most detailed manner.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan, who is a member of the committee, and compliment the committee on its splendid work, and I only wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Denmark system of old-age pensions has worked successfully.

Mr. DINGELL. Has it met every test thus far?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit, may I say in this connection, referring to the Denmark system, which the gentleman from West Virginia says has worked so satisfactorily, that it is on a noncontributory basis, and that for men the maximum monthly pension is $9 to $15.17; for women from $8.42 to $14.33; for married couples, both over the age of 65, from $13.42 to $22.50. This is the maximum monthly pension, with exchange at par, and I may say to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] that my friend from Michigan is correct in saying that the plan submitted to the House, which we are now considering, for old-age pensions, if enacted, will afford the greatest benefits of any country in the world.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The reason that I spoke about the Denmark plan was because Ruth Bryan Owen, our Minister there, is familiar with it, and she has said that the plan is working well.

Mr. KENNEY. I wish to compliment the Ways and Means Committee on the job they have done in this bill, but I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether we cannot have a more liberal old-age pension than any other country anywhere in the world?

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of Members to the fact that this clamoring for liberalizing the payments is something that you can take care of in your own respective States. If you want to pay $50 per month you can do so, but it seems to me that the Federal Government is liberal enough when it starts the thing along with $15. The individual State can pay $35 additional if it chooses.

My personal opinion is that if the Federal Government agreed to meet the individual States in any amount that the State legislatures might determine to pay its worthy aged citizens it would be in perfect order, because there will be a natural ceiling that the legislature will fix, when the demand becomes unreasonable the taxpayer will see to that. The taxpayer and pensioner must both be considered. Therefore, even if the limitation imposed by the Federal Government were entirely eliminated, a natural ceiling will be found in every State and will be established by the State legislature, governed by the sentiment of the people, particularly by those who are called upon to pay the tax.

My time does not permit further discussion of the provisions of this bill. The people are interested, however, in the various titles of the bill. The case of crippled children, dependent children, widows eligible for pensions, public-health services, and the unsolved question of unemployment insurance which is a recognized curse. We must master this problem regardless of the method employed, and we must do so at the earliest possible date. The specter of unemployment stalks the peace and contentment of our citizens and a solution is mandatory.

However deficient the bill might be, Mr. Chairman, and I allow it is not perfect, it is nevertheless a good start. Future sessions of Congress can in the light of experience correct and liberalize the law. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this bill the first question which comes to me is, "Why has the United States been the last major country to give serious thought to the consideration of a comprehensive and adequate social-security program?" One must remember that we have gone along under a monetary and industrial system which has not only permitted, but one might say it has encouraged, great "washing outs" of savings, accumulated surplus, and both private and corporate capital structures. These "wash-outs" have occurred each and every time a great economic depression has taken hold of our economic structure, and they have come without the consent, without contributory negligence on the part of our people, and against their thrifty habits. The great mass of our people have been the victims of these great forces over which they had no direct control. I believe that all who think must agree that when the "social security" of a people passes away, they immediately begin to lose faith in the monetary and political structure under which they find themselves at the time. As we have clearly witnessed the last few years, and as we now witness, the people so afflicted revolt against the contemporary monetary, political, and administrative program.

Actual and estimated Federal expenditures for the 3 years 1934, 1935, and 1936 will, no doubt, approach $24,000,000,000. A very large proportion of this is, of course, for direct and indirect relief. In other words, it will have been spent for momentary "social security"—relief in the form of fats, fabric, and fiber—for a vast number of our people who are direct victims of the most recent "wash-out." Based upon the figures presented on page 15 of the report, we find the estimated Federal income from taxes here proposed will, within the next 15 years, amount to $15,000,000,000 under title VIII, sections 801 and 804, and under title IX about five and seven-tenths billions, or a total of $21,033,700,000—just three billions less than our total appropriations estimated for 1934, 1935, and 1936.

Under a plan such as that set forth in this bill there will be some system and pegging down and control and balance of the raising of the funds, the making of the appropriations, and the administration of the expenditures that must necessarily follow. This daily thought of having to provide the funds for the purpose of creating reserves through appropriations, to meet such expenditures hereafter, will be a constant reminder of the suffering that comes through these "wash-outs." It will, in my opinion, have a great tendency to cause us to figure the cost as we go along and thereby bring about a "national spirit", operating as a great force against those other forces which have occurred so often and which have been so ruthless in their attack and in their destruction through the "wash-out" methods too long applied to and against the great mass of our people. These "wash-outs" that have come so consistently and with increasing havoc will surely come again unless we set in motion forces that will prevent them. Our constant thought dwelling on the payment of the taxes here proposed, the plans whereby the necessary appropriations will be made, and the administration of the funds flowing from those appropriations will, without question, have a wholesome influence on all of our people and thus help us to comprehend more fully the necessity of maintaining "social security" for the masses.

With regret I must acknowledge this bill does not, at the moment, give aid to those who are now in such dire need. This need must be cared for otherwise. It is also evident several years must come and go before the reserve funds, provided out of taxes to be paid, can show their strength in giving relief. As it is necessary to produce before there can be great distribution of wealth to the masses and thereby raising the level of individual possessions, just so is it necessary to give time in which to accumulate reserves out of which distributions may be made. We must not overlook the fact, however, that many of the benefits called for by this bill—such as those to dependent children and for the maternal and child-health services and service for crippled children and child welfare—can begin to operate without delay and on the completion and approval of the plans required to be set into operation by the respective States. The great tragedy which has come to those in our rural communities particularly and in areas specifically affected by the great economic distress of the past 4 years, calls for prompt action and cannot await the creation of reserves through the accumulation of a slowly working tax-collecting system. It is now mandatory on the part of Government to give this service without further delay or else we shall have to pay for it tenfold in the years to come. The great social harm now taking place through the destruction of the physical forces of those people who are the victims and who have not sufficient nourishment and mental and spiritual food that flows to them when life is full and complete, must be arrested.

This bill recognizes the institution of national relief as a permanent one. It recognizes the unemployment problem as one that will never pass away and old-age benefits as no longer in the main attainable by the individual.

One might make the observation that this is a "sorry day" in the life of a nation when opportunity for individual effort and accumulation and preservation of the labors of one's life work is no longer to be had. However, I for one am of the opinion that our method of mass production, specialization, classification, and failure to recognize sound methods of distributing as between worker and capital, the buying power of that which is produced, has brought us to this period in our national life. Certainly that class which we call our "agricultural workers" has not had its share of what was produced. As proof of this statement I only refer to the great agonies which the several Congresses since 1920 have passed through in their attempt to provide some sort of national legislation as would more equitably deal with the farm population. May I also refer to the "Garden of Gethsemane", through which this Congress shall have to pass in further dealing with this very problem. Just so long as these great inequalities exist, just so long will there be a growing need for legislation of the nature here proposed, and so much greater will be the need. I wish to express the hope that in our saner hours and when the pressure of distress is less exacting of our time and energy, we may set about providing means of production, distribution, and exchange which will make a great amount of the Federal relief here proposed entirely unnecessary. This by reason of the fact that the individual may be in position to again return to self-preservation and reliance and dependence in old age as well as in early and middle life. At one time this great country boasted of the existence of that very position. Wherein and how did we lose it? To me that question is very fundamental. Shall we now admit there is no longer such a chance for our people? Have those organic opportunities gone forever? Have we "slipped" in our political, monetary, and legislative performance? Is it now too late to make correction of our bad national habits? Shall we now admit that America no longer offers the opportunities of the past to the present and those coming generations?

Every Member of this House knows very well our people expect this Congress to enact adequate and fair social legislation, especially insofar as the old people who are now without income are concerned. Personally, I do not believe we should stop with providing only for "old-age benefits." I feel we should take a step toward providing for this unemployment problem. I believe our economic and industrial conditions are such as to make it practical and wise to provide adequate old-age benefits. I think our social, industrial, political, and spiritual situation is such as to demand that we, in this session of Congress, shall do this very thing. Insofar as legislation can make it possible, I am of the opinion we dare not evade this responsibility any longer. Speaking politically, it is my firm belief it will be a sorry day for the present administration and for the one that follows—let it be Democratic or Republican—if this matter of "old-age relief" is not provided for.

There are now too many men in this country between the ages of 55 and 65 who have, through no fault of their own, had taken from them all income and all accumulated surplus of the frugality of prior years. You know the facts as well as I. These people I refer to are not visiting Washington. They are not sending telegrams nor writing their Representatives what to do. They are quietly thinking, debating, praying, and considering in private homes, on the streets of our villages, at our church meetings and in conference with pastor, priest, and physician, these great economic disasters which visit our people too often, leaving them without income, without jobs, homes without a market value and all bringing about the loss of their savings as represented by homes, stocks and bonds, deposits in bank checking and savings accounts, and a situation wherein their children of 25 to 35 years of age cannot secure a job. These men, now dependent, have been expert workmen in factory; have served long arduous hours in the fields. Many of them are skilled in the arts and sciences of commerce, transportation, banking, and the professions. All their lives they have been good, honest, thrifty citizens making up the backbone of our Nation. Now, they will not be content to be discarded and thrown into the scrap heap like an old tin can out of which the food has been taken. They deserve and expect decent treatment. Again their demand will be exercised in the form of the ballot as it was in 1932. There is a rising tide of discontent gathering momentum throughout this Nation. It is growing more bitter every day. The signal flares are breaking out from the most unexpected sources. Our people have been believing, patiently waiting, and expecting the "light", but hope is waning now because of so many promises that have been unfulfilled so long. This Congress dare not scrap social security. It is my opinion our people back home will not take any excuse we may have to offer them next summer and fall when we face them. Why should they? This should not be a partisan question. While engaged in industry and before giving time to matters political, I saw the need of legislation along this line. Today I see a greater need for such legislation and I am in favor of passing it this session of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, H. R. 7260 is filled with good and bad. I think it will be a tragedy if this bill is not in some way made more acceptable and beneficial to our people in whose name it is being passed. In its present form it is my opinion it will bring great disappointment to our people. I am afraid it will impose great hardships on many. I see in it great discrimination.

Title II, creating the old-age reserve account through appropriations derived from taxes to be paid under title VIII, will prove to be one of the most far-reaching portions of the bill, both from the standpoint of taxes assessed and the effects the reserve-fund operations will have. This reserve fund will, in my opinion, play a most significant part in our entire financial and monetary structure, not only that of the Federal Government but of private industry in its mass-production form. I think our banking practices will be vitally influenced by the operation of this fund. Table IV, page 6 of the report, indicates this reserve will grow to a minimum of say six and three-fourths billions of dollars within the first 10 years. Within 15 years this fund will probably be around $15,000,000,000, or, say, equivalent to about 70 percent of our national debt at that time. Here I am referring only to the old-age reserve account, and we have yet to deal with the unemployment trust fund.

Now, there is no question but what these open-market operations of the Secretary of the Treasury in the investment of these two funds will play a great part in the banking and monetary policies of this Nation. We are here setting into motion great forces. I might illustrate further by saying that at the present time our banks and large corporations have invested about $16,000,000,000 in Government securities, or, say, roughly 60 percent of our present outstanding Government bonded indebtedness, including direct and contingent obligations. It has heretofore been the custom for banks and large corporate institutions to largely carry in their portfolios bonds issued by the Government. Of course, in this manner the private individuals, who had money deposited in banks and who held equities in corporate entities through ownership of debentures, bonds, stocks, and insurance reserves, collectively held or rather owned these Government obligations. In that manner the holdings of the individuals on a collective basis were very materially woven into our financial operations and investment structure.

In this bill it is proposed that these bonds be taken from the portfolios of the banks, insurance companies, and large industrial concerns and be concentrated as reserve funds, still belonging, in a way, directly and indirectly, to the millions of our people. Will not this call for a reconstruction of the investment portfolios of first, the banks in a most material manner; secondly, those of large corporations having their idle funds invested in liquid bonds of the Government, and thirdly, the insurance companies? If the banks, deprived of their privilege to engage in the instant purchase and sale of Government bonds (by reason of a greater proportion of the outstanding bonds being absorbed through the investment of the reserve funds), must enter the general bond market it appears to me there will develop great competition as between banks, insurance companies, and large corporations (all seeking a somewhat liquid investment for their inactive deposits, premium reserves, and idle surplus) for the high class or triple A bonds of industrials and other units of government. It is also interesting to study the forces that are likely to develop as between the open-market operation of banks, large corporations, and insurance companies on the one hand versus the operations of the Secretary of the Treasury dealing in the purchase and sale of Federal obligations and the open-market operations of the Federal Reserve Board and System along the lines set forth in the proposed Steagall bank bill. Briefly, any plan which calls for removing from the open market the obligations of the Federal Government is so far reaching as to command our keenest thoughts in an attempted analysis of its consequences.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Does the gentleman object to the policy of gradually withdrawing these Government bonds from private holdings and placing them in this reserve so that to that extent the tax exempts will be withdrawn from these private holdings?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not equipped to say that I object to that withdrawal. The thing I point out is the staggering influence the operation of this reserve fund will have upon our interior monetary and financial structure as it has been developed in this Nation.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. But it is a gradual operation, the gentleman understands.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It did not happen over night.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Understand that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And the effect of it is to take the interest now paid upon the governmental securities and put that in the reserve account to be compounded and compounded for the increment of the reserve account.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that; but the influence and effect is there just the same. We have built a bank structure today where every so-called "liquid bank" in the United States has placed the deposits which the gentleman and I and the other people have in those banks in Government bonds, and now we propose a situation which pulls those out of the investment structure of the Nation and concentrates them in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury.

If I read title II correctly, there will have to be maintained an individual "case history" with each and every employee who contributes and who may be a recipient of the benefits of the old-age-benefit payments that are to be accumulated and distributed. Thus we can visualize millions and tens of millions of "cases" and a bureau personneled for the carrying out of the details involved. Title VIII, providing for the taxing of employees on full salary up to $3,000, while those drawing more than this amount are taxed on $3,000, only will appear to many as discrimination and unfair. It may be agreed the class which receives under $3,000 are more likely to need aid to tide over than those in a higher income class, except in times of great economic disaster—then I would assume they are about equal in actual need. The employer deposits 3 percent on same class and amount of wages as the employee pays his 3 percent on. The worker may, theoretically, receive back 3½ percent of the total taxed wages, or the wages on which tax was paid, or it may be paid to his estate if he is deceased. It appears possible for one to receive benefits who never paid a tax. Who knows what the Supreme Court may say about this?

Titles IV, V, and VI are all so much needed today that no voice of protest should be raised against any of them. The grants to States for dependent children is to be commended. Many years ago some of our fraternal orders recognized this great need and have gone out and given relief, without any preference to race, creed, or color. This problem has now grown so large it is one which commands the most serious attention of the Federal Government.

In rural areas and in those areas suffering from severe economic distress, the women are today without hospitalization. Throughout the farming areas particularly those hard-working and constructive fine mothers are in such great need of that provision set forth in title V for maternal and child-health service. I only hope that if the amount herein provided proves insufficient Congress in the future will take the necessary steps to meet this problem squarely as it should be met. We have now too long delayed this very necessary assistance.

Services for crippled and underprivileged children justifies itself without any comment. How this matter has been so long overlooked and uncared for is a question which should make us glad of the opportunity to take the necessary steps at this time. One only needs to come in contact with a home which is unable to provide any means of relief for a little child who has been stricken with paralysis to appreciate what this will mean to those homes so darkened with the suffering that follows such a catastrophe.

The ravages against our people as a direct consequence of the most recent great "wash-out" of their savings, income, and employment has brought squarely before us the great need for a national health service. Throughout the land we have millions of underfed, malnutritioned children growing up without that medical care so very necessary in childhood and youth if we are to have strong bodies when we mature into manhood and womanhood. The tragedy is before us. This is one way to meet the issue at this moment. This service should be made available by the States and the Federal Government quickly. We have, as a matter of fact, too long delayed this provision.

Section 602 (c) gives great power into the hands of the Surgeon General. I only hope that in the preparation of his rules and regulations and the administration thereof, great care will be taken that none of the agencies of medical relief and certain professions which are of great benefit and entirely acceptable to our people will be discriminated against.

In the light of all the available information, it might be well to ask, Are we not now in normal times?

What proof is there we shall soon return to the high productivity of the 1923–29 period? Under world conditions as we know them today, what is normal? If we will give up our philosophy and practice of "the economy of scarcity" perhaps this question will answer itself.

I do believe that in some cases small operators will reduce the number of people in their employ to the end they may come under the "10 or more" employees on the pay roll. That will be a natural evasion, or rather avoidance, of the tax herein imposed. Regardless of whatever tax law may be designed, we find both evasions and avoidance of the tax. To this extent, unemployment will be increased. I think we all must admit this. Furthermore, where a small operator doing a similar business alongside another, and who is employing only 9 helpers while his competitor has a staff of, say, 11 or 12 helpers, will have somewhat of an advantage insofar as the incidence of the tax in section 901 is concerned. If the tax is to be a graduated one insofar as the number of employees are concerned, a situation of this kind cannot be helped. Any tax law that may be designed will have inequalities therein.

The situation in this respect is not, however, nearly so serious to me as that wherein the tax becomes assessed against an operation which runs, say, 80-percent direct labor cost versus one which runs only 20-percent direct labor cost. I believe it can be generally stated that a product carrying direct costs of 80-percent labor and 20-percent material generally sells on a much lower margin of profit mark-up than one which consists of 20-percent direct labor and 80-percent material. If this observation be true, it appears the first processor will be paying a 3-percent (more or less, depending upon the terms of the State law) pay-roll tax on 80 percent of his cost with a much lower margin of profit than does the operator who pays a 3-percent tax on only 20 percent of his cost with a higher margin of profit to work on. (Rough steel or iron castings might be used to illustrate the former, and machine tools or precision tools the latter.)

There is one phase of this proposed legislation which I cannot refrain from commenting on, and it is that wherein the farmer is exempt from paying an excise tax on his labor pay roll. He now has no way to control either his production or the price at which it sells. His costs are almost entirely that of labor. To tax him on this bill would add to his already impossible burden. For 15 years he has valiantly fought against the combination of forces working against him. His overhead burden is too great for him to carry and by the thousands he stands before his home watching the auctioneer and the sheriff "close him out", and in this manner the great "washing-out process", which started years ago, continues on its rampage. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PFEIFER].

Mr. PFEIFER. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the President, seeing the growth of discouragement and unemployment among the people, the dole having proved a failure, suggested legislation on social security which was read by the Clerk of this House at the beginning of this session. The object of this legislation was to provide ways and means for the welfare of the unemployed, old age, direct relief of the indigent sick, hospitalization, crippled children, maternity, and so forth.

Let us turn back to the year 1918, when the United States entered the World War. Do you not recall the active part the hospitals played in relieving the burden of the Government and Government hospitals? It was then a case of the Government appealing to the hospitals, now it is a case of the hospitals appealing to the Government.

In view of this, I would like to appeal to all Members of the House in reference to this legislation insofar as it concerns hospitals and the part which they are now being forced to play in this period of national reconstruction due to the depression. Permit me at this time, too, to call your attention to title IV of the bill referring to the social-insurance board.

The primary factor in working out a plan which would benefit hospitals throughout the country would be the securing of facts as to the financial status of the majority of hospitals which serve their respective communities.

The leading medical societies of the country and the American Medical Association, embracing in its membership some 100,000 of the physicians of the United States, have as their primary considerations the welfare of the people, the preservation of their health and their care in sickness, the advancement of medical science, the improvement of medical care, and the provision of adequate medical service to all the people. These physicians are the only body in the United States qualified by experience and training to guide and suitably control plans for the provision of medical care. I deplore and protest those sections of the bill which place in the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor the responsibility for the administration of funds for these purposes. I also condemn as pernicious that section of the bill which creates a social-insurance board without specification of the character of its personnel to administer functions essentially medical in character and demanding technical knowledge not available to those without medical training. The doctors, therefore, should not only have a voice in the making of such a plan but also a voice in carrying out the said plan.

This subject is worthy of your intelligent and sympathetic consideration, as it affects so many of our people today. Due to the decrease in employment and the increased number of those on relief, who, when sick, seek free services in our hospitals, in many instances treatment being not only of an emergency type but sometimes of many weeks' duration. All of which adds greatly to the burden which the charitable hospitals scattered throughout these United States are now being forced to bear without any aid whatsoever from the Federal Government.

Hospitals found their pay patients disappearing and their charity patients increasing at a rate that threatens financial destruction.

This Government has appropriated and spent billions of dollars for home and work relief for the unemployed, but it as yet has not taken into consideration the sick men, women, and children who are in need of hospital care. The Government forgets all about them, and these unfortunates must look to private charity for mercy.

The charitable hospitals, in good times, find it impossible to balance their budgets, even after resorting to drastic economic measures, and never at the expense of the comfort and welfare of the patient. None of our institutions which depend upon public generosity for their maintenance are feeling the depression so much as the charitable hospitals. The majority of hospitals which have been ever ready to render aid and comfort to the indigent sick will be forced, due to lack of financial aid, to either curtail their services or close their doors if the Government does not step forward and provide some means in this bill to take care of this serious situation.

A majority of the people of this country believe that the charitable institutions are money-making plants and earnestly believe that the doctors working therein receive enormous salaries; but the truth is, as this great body knows, that these hospitals are charitable institutions and the doctors working therein receive no salaries and the help less than those on relief. Most of us fail to realize that these hospitals have to pay the same rate for gas, electricity, telephone, and so forth, as any other commercial or manufacturing business who can charge the cost to overhead; but not so with the hospital. Why, of course, they pay the butcher, the baker, the coal man, and every other man, plus the harsh injustice which is being done them by the collection of the process tax under the A. A. A. legislation, which has been estimated, imposes an additional burden upon the hospitals of millions of dollars per year. I do not think it was the intent of the legislature to do this; nevertheless, it is so interpreted by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. Thus, to my way of thinking, they are taking advantage of taxing these charitable hospitals which are taking care of the needy sick in order that they may take care of the unemployed or needy well.

These charitable institutions have their backs up against the wall. Endowment funds disappearing, contributions few in number and amounts, private patients rapidly dwindling, free patients increasing in number both in the hospitals and out-patient departments, causing deficits which in one hospital in my State amounted to $215,000 in 1933. This situation which exists in my State exists in many others as well.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to read to this House clippings from newspapers in reference to this situation:

[From the Washington Times, Dec. 22, 1934]

The need for more hospitals has long been urged by health authorities. Whole sections in the South and sparsely settled Northwest and Southwest lack hospitals of the most meager sort. It is said that between 300 and 500 communities are without hospitals. The suggested $10,000,000 building fund would add at least 20,000 beds to the total in the Nation's hospitals.

[From the Washington Times, Feb. 14, 1935]

Increase in the number of applications for hospitals and dispensary care in January over December was reported today by Dr. R. F. Tobin, permit officer of the Board of Public Welfare.

There were 1,552 applications for hospital care last month, compared with 1,305 in December; 983 applications for dispensary care, compared with 655 in December; 41 applications for transportation of indigent persons, as against 34; 441 ambulance calls, as against 377; and 1,160 visits by physicians to the unemployed, as against 976 in December. Dr Tobin reported that admissions to practically all of the hospitals supervised by the Board of Public Welfare increased.

[From the American College of Surgeons; letter from E. W. Williamson, M. D., assistant director of hospital activities, Mar. 13, 1935]

There are approximately 6,500 hospitals in the United States, of which 1,776 are operated by the Government; i. e., Federal, State, county, city, and city and county. The American College of Surgeons surveyed 3,538 hospitals in 1934, of which 2,480 were approved. The capacity of the approximate 6,500 hospitals in the United States is given as 1,027,046, of which 694,473 are in Government hospitals.

Demands on the general hospitals for the care of charity cases is generally conceded to be increased from 10 to 50 percent. The total cost of maintaining voluntary hospitals in 1934 is estimated to be $475,000,000, while the revenue from patients was $215,000,000, and the income from philanthropy, including endowments, community chests, and public contributions, was $195,000,000. This leaves a deficit of $65,000,000 in voluntary hospitals for the year 1934.

As to out-patient service, the last hospital report of the American Medical Association states that in 1927, 13,804,566 patients were admitted to out-patient departments, while in 1933, 32,822,077 patients were admitted, an increase of 19,017,511.

[From the Washington Evening Star, Apr. 5, 1935, by the Associated Press, Cleveland]

One out of every 17 persons in the United States will go to a hospital in 1935, and many of the hospitals are worried where to find the funds to care for them adequately.

This was brought out at the opening session of a sectional meeting of the American College of Surgeons here yesterday. The 1935 estimate is based on the 1934 actual count, just finished. This shows 7,147,416 patients, 1,079,510 beds, and an average hospital stay of 14 days.

Half the beds, college authorities stated, are in tax-supported hospitals, but two-thirds of the hospitals are "voluntary", and to these latter go seven times as many patients as to the Government-supported institutions.

It is these "voluntary" hospitals, nonprofit making, where the bulk of the patients go, that face the financial dilemma. About 400 of them have closed in the past 5 years, against about a dozen new ones opening.

The patients who pay for services have decreased. Those asking charity treatment have increased. Dividends from endowments have dropped.

Voluntary hospitals have been unable to get Federal relief funds to aid in caring for persons who are on relief and who enter hospitals as charity cases, it was stated.

[From the Saturday Evening Post, Mar. 16, 1935]

None of our public institutions which look to the generosity of the public for their maintenance are feeling the pinch of depression more sharply than our hospitals. Many of them are compelled to operate upon a skeleton basis at a time when the demand for their services is most insistent. Many of them find it impossible to balance their budgets, even after enforcing these most drastic economies.

The reasons for present conditions are not far to seek. Income from endowment funds has been sharply cut. Gifts from regular contributions have fallen off. The number of private-room patients has steadily dwindled. While income has thus been reduced, outgo has often been unavoidably increased. As the number of pay patients has fallen off, the proportion of free patients has steadily mounted.

The public is always quick and bitter in its denunciation of institutions which turn away suffering and penniless patients; but hospitals are like their critics, in that they have to pay butcher, grocer, and coal dealer, whether they are breaking even or not. Well-managed institutions do not like to close their doors in the face of suffering humanity, but they are confronted by the same stern necessities with which the rest of us have to cope.

Persons unfamiliar with hospital management often expect more from these institutions than they can possibly render. So great is the free service they contribute to their communities, and so widely has it become expanded in recent years, that the public, for the most part, takes it for granted as a vested right, without asking or even wondering how it is financed or by whom the costs are ultimately paid.

Most of our hospitals deserve well of the public they have so long and so zealously served. The same public should stand behind them in the emergency, which no possible foresight or good management could have averted, and see to it that they are enabled to carry on. This is a serious matter of public safety.

[From the New York Times, Baltimore, Apr. 11, 1935]

For the first time since its founding 46 years ago, the Johns Hopkins Hospital will open an independent appeal for funds on April 24, seeking $200,000.

Decreases in net income, which had already caused the closing of 100 beds at the institution, made the campaign for funds necessary.

Henry D. Harlan, president of the board of trustees, said today there were only two choices open to the board.

"We could either curtail services still further to prevent continuing deficits", he explained, "or we could appeal to the people of Baltimore, for whom Johns Hopkins founded the hospital, and in whose service the present financial need arises.

"Because further curtailments can be made only at the expense of the sick poor, whose needs today are greater than ever, the second alternative could be our only choice."

There are other clippings, but time does not permit me to quote them.

As a fellow Member of this great body, I have laid the facts before you. As a surgeon, I beg of you to provide some means in this social-security bill which will alleviate the plight of the hospitals. If this is not done, you can rest assured we will be faced with conditions which will be much harder to remedy. [Applause.]

Under the permission granted me to extend my remarks, I submit herewith the following letter:

JANUARY 31, 1935.

Hon. JOSEPH L. PFEIFER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PFEIFER: Mr. Hopkins has requested me to reply to your letters of January 26 and 28, 1935, transmitting communications received from the superintendents of the Wyckoff Heights Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., of St. Catherine's Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., and of the Bronx Hospital, Bronx, N. Y., inviting attention to the need of hospitals for Federal aid.

The attention of this office has been called to the fact that many of the hospitals throughout the country are confronted with a difficult situation as a result of existing economic conditions. The problem of saving and maintaining these hospitals is, of course, of serious concern to all of us who are interested in preserving existing facilities for medical care as far as possible in an effort to provide for protection of health, especially in the present emergency. However, much as this administration is in sympathy with those who are seeking aid for these local institutions, it is believed that so far as the administration of funds appropriated for individual relief is concerned, the approach to the solution of the medical-care problem should be made with the needs of the individual primarily in mind, rather than from the standpoint of aiding the hospitals.

The working out of a solution of this whole medical-care problem has been a difficult task because of the relatively expensive character of the service required and the need for preserving a sound relationship between the amount expended for medical care and the total cost of all relief. To undertake to furnish hospital care to individuals on relief throughout the country would entail the expenditure of a sum of money greatly in excess of the amount now allocated to medical relief.

However, serious consideration is being given this problem, and it may be that a plan can be worked out whereby some hospitalization can be provided through the pooling of Federal, State, and local resources, at a cost that will not be prohibitive. What the future medical-relief program will be is problematical in view of the legislation now pending before the Congress. Until the future scope and character of the medical-relief program are definitely determined, it is considered advisable to conform to the present program for medical care to persons on relief rolls.

Very truly yours,

C. E. WALLER, M. D.,
Medical Director.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I know the House realizes the vital importance of keeping industry operating, if the employer is to contribute something to his employees in case of unemployment and if those employees are to receive anything.

I want to read just a paragraph from a letter which I received from a friend of mine, Mr. R. D. Redfern, who is connected with the chamber of commerce in his city in Maine and who has made a very wide study of industrial conditions. He states in part:

You know, of course, that the great Pepperell Mill plant at Biddeford, normally working 4,000 people, is now down to 1,800; with the York Manufacturing Co., in Saco, normally working 3,000, now operating with 800; and that the Saco-Lowell Shops, makers of cotton-mill machinery, are down very much below their normal working force; while the relief rolls of both cities have been increased 50 percent.

The cotton-textile situation and the plight of the cotton mills, both in the North and South, is most tragic. I do not need to tell the Members from the South. They realize the seriousness of the situation just as I do. It is not necessary to tell the cotton-growing farmers and the workers who pick the raw cotton what it means to those 9,000,000 people who gain their livelihood from raw cotton. It is not necessary, Mr. Chairman, to draw to the attention of this House the fact that Soviet Russia intends to export 1,000,000 bales more of cotton than ever before. The Soviet Government is paying her people a bounty, not to decrease production, but to increase it. She is allowing her farmers to sell their cotton at a lower cost abroad. You know what that will do to our cotton market in foreign countries. You know what it will do to your cotton farmers in the South, if the market for raw cotton in this country is killed.

I speak not from my heart alone. It is not a question of the heart, but it is a question of the mind of intelligence. I know you will help me in every respect to keep our market at home and to protect your cotton growers of the South and your textile mills of the South, just as we want to protect our northern mills. It is not a party matter. It is not a sectional question. It is a Nation-wide question. I am as sure as I can possibly be that the President will act to save the greatest basic industry in this country. He cannot do otherwise. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to offer my sincere personal congratulations to the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the members thereof for the painstaking and laborious work they have done in behalf of the measure which if considered in its present form as it is being denounced by those who have spoken today, would have been declared radical a few years ago. You gentleman are to be congratulated because of the grasp of the legislation as you bring it here before us today to act upon.

Personally I want to say that before the Seventy-fourth Congress convened I gave a statement to newspapers in my district, composed of 15 counties, so that my people would know exactly where I stood in regard to the so-called "fantastic and unworkable Townsend old-age-pension plan."

In doing so I believe I saved myself a great deal of embarrassment a little later, in the avalanche of mail which has come to Members of Congress who did not take a stand when they had an opportunity to do so. If permitted I would like to read a few lines from that statement.

I want no one to be misled as to my exact position on this matter. There is a vital need today for pension legislation to care for the indigent aged, but I am strongly opposed to the plan set forth by Dr. Townsend, and have so expressed myself in a letter several days ago. I feel that the people of my district and State know of my efforts in behalf of such progressive and needed legislation, and I look forward to joining my colleagues this coming session in waging an unceasing fight for old-age-pension laws that are right and just.

I believe the Ways and Means Committee has brought a piece of legislation to the membership of this House that is right and just and meets many of the requirements of the aged in our country.

I do not believe the aged people in my district approve of any of the plans, in which sentiment runs away with reason, which have been mentioned on the floor of this House in the discussion of the measure as brought forward by the administration and the Ways and Means Committee.

I would like to read just a part of a letter which I received recently from Mrs. Sarah J. Kennedy, a woman about 70 years of age, living at Salem, the town in which I was born. She says this:

I am sure you realize how hard it is for us ordinary folks to accumulate enough money to take care of our declining years. If we could be sure we would have an income it would take away the dread of becoming a burden to our loved ones. I am positive people would live much happier and longer lives.

That is what they are doing in Denmark and these other countries having old-age pensions, and the tables of pay to these persons, I understand, a member of the Ways and Means Committee will place in the RECORD, where they have at present helpful benefits to those who are aged.

I have another letter which, if I have time, I would like to read in its entirety. It is written by Mr. J. E. Means. He is 85 years of age. His wife joins him in the letter, and she is 80.

I want to quote this language:

I know that you are interested in old-age pensions, but we are interested especially in enactment of old-age pensions at this session of Congress. There are many of us it will not benefit if it is not passed now on account of our old age. My wife and I are 80 and 85 years old, respectively, and both of us are seriously afflicted. If we derive any benefit from the pension it would have to come soon.

He then goes on to give the reasons why we should have, not an unworkable old-age-pension scheme, but something that can actually be enacted into law at this session of Congress, as the President of the United State has asked us to do.

The State of West Virginia, I may say, is ready as one Commonwealth to come along and provide an adequate pension to match that of the Federal Government.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I shall read just a paragraph or two from a member of the State Senate of West Virginia, Mr. J. P. Beacon, who wrote me a letter a day or two ago, in which he said:

If Congress does nothing about this matter before it adjourns, the members of the West Virginia Legislature who are interested in the old-age pension in West Virginia will find it hard to convince our old friends that the Democrats have given them a new deal.

You can, I believe, count on this State's cooperation in working out some plan to provide funds to meet Federal demands. I for one pledge my whole-hearted support in a program for State's compliance in the West Virginia Senate, which will provide an adequate old-age pension in this State.

Ladies and gentlemen of the Congress, let us not forget our obligation to those poor old persons who fear the poorhouse more than the average persons feared the business depression. We have passed through the worst, and we now have it behind us; but there are millions of worthy old men and women in this country who now and in the future will face a real cause of fear a hundred times greater than the fear of depressed business.

Ingratitude is among the more reprehensible of human qualities!

Let us not be ungrateful for our delivery from the fear of poverty, and let us demonstrate our gratitude for this great blessing by helping to provide protection to those who are not in position to provide it for themselves.

There is plenty in this world for all of us. We cannot take anything with us when we cross the Great Divide. Moreover, the riches which most people accumulate come as the result of some form of cooperation from others. It is a great blessing to possess riches, but it is a greater blessing to possess, also, a heart that is willing to use riches in behalf of those who are helpless. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GRANFIELD].

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, by reason of the breakdown a few years ago in our economic system, it became greatly evident that legislation was necessary in order to protect our people from the ravages of unemployment and its devastating consequences. The Democratic Party, in its efforts to provide relief, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, formulated a program of social security which is being considered by the House today.

The social-security bill, which is before us, provides for the general welfare of our people by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws, to establish a social-security board, and for other purposes.

I am inclined to the belief expressed by the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means that this bill does not go far enough in making provision for those classes of our people affected by the legislation. I favor a system of old-age assistance which will furnish a more adequate security, and one that will encourage all the States of our Union to adopt an old-age pension system.

Under the terms of the bill now under consideration the Federal Government makes a monthly contribution of only $15 to those persons who meet certain legal requirements and who have reached the age of 65 years. The Federal contribution of $15 a month is positively insufficient. It provides a grudging and niggardly security against the trials and tribulations of old age. A Federal contribution of $15, matched with a State contribution of $15, fails absolutely to provide a proper subsistence. It is hardly necessary for me to go into the daily items of expense necessary to maintain a proper standard of living on the part of any individual, whether old or young. When one considers the items of food, of clothing, and of rent, and of fuel, it is impossible for the aged in our country to subsist in a decent manner on $30 a month. I hold the opinion that it is the duty and responsibility of our Government to provide not only a bare subsistence for this class of our people but that it is an obligation of our Government to furnish them with those little comforts which will make life worth living. I am persuaded to the conviction, after studying this problem for many years, that the contribution on the part of the Federal Government should be $30 a month, and that this contribution should be matched by each State which accepts the provisions of this bill, so that the old people of our country over 60 years of age, instead of 65 years of age, will be the recipients of $60 per month. On this sum, and only on this sum, can the aged in our country live with the peace and contentment that we hope to give them by the enactment of this legislation.

Massachusetts, always a leader in civilization's progress in America, has been foremost among the States of our Union in legislation for the social and economic advancement of our people. Under the present pension system in my Commonwealth, the average monthly pension paid is $24.35. This assistance at present is so bound up with red tape, and legal restrictions that many times the purpose of the law is defeated.

I can never be unmindful of the generosity of the people who for years resided in the most humble section of my district, known as "the ward" in Springfield, Mass., who early in my public career honored me with the right to represent them in the general court of Massachusetts. They, like many others, were the real builders of this Nation. They were the men and women who left their homes early in the morning to go into the factories and shops, returning home late at night, after a hard day's work. Although these people, with millions of others in America, worked hard and steadily for many years, they are today, through no fault of their own, dependent upon public charity. They are entitled to a better reward for honest and faithful toil. I realized then, as I do now, the necessity of legislation of the character of that which we are considering today.

I am no new convert to the movement of social security. As a member of the State legislature in 1917, with other of my Democratic colleagues, I urged and voted for the enactment of a system of old-age pension. Very few votes were cast for this legislation at that time. When the time-worn arguments were advanced against such a legislative innovation, some of us who sponsored this old-age-pension system for Massachusetts were characterized as Socialists. We were told that to provide such a system of security meant the disappearance of the virtues of thrift and independence, and that our Commonwealth would be taking a step backward instead of forward. However, the contest for social and economic advancement continued, and finally, several years ago, Massachusetts adopted a system of old-age security.

We know now, after years of suffering and hardship resulting from unemployment, that the time to have provided security for the aged was years ago. I do not intend, with the knowledge and experience that I have gained over the past 20 years, to subscribe to legislation that fails to meet adequately and properly the responsibility of the Government toward its aged.

I cannot forego the opportunity of paying my respects to the various plans which have been submitted to the Congress for consideration. Panaceas of every description have been urged upon the Membership of this House by many well-meaning citizens throughout the country. In my district, as in many districts, advocates of the Townsend plan have attempted to force that system of old-age security upon the Government. We have been ridiculed because of our attitude honestly expressed, as to the feasibility of the Townsend plan.

Several months ago, through the medium of the newspapers in Springfield, Mass., I bespoke, very plainly, my attitude on the original Townsend plan. From that day until this moment certain leaders in the movement have attempted to cajole and force me into an advocacy of this plan. Apparently some of them do not know me. I have been criticized and misrepresented before and I have seen leaders come and go. I have always been a firm believer that unless the article for sale is the best, it cannot be sold to Americans in America. Threats of defeat on election day do not scare me. I have been threatened many times by leaders of groups interested in their own selfish advancement, but I have always done my duty as I saw it. Abuse does not alter my course. I have been abused many times for doing my duty, and I can assure certain agitators of the Townsend plan that I will still do my duty to my country and my district as I see it.

The original Townsend plan has already departed to the realm where repose many other wild schemes of recovery. If the original Townsend plan was feasible and practical, it would have had no greater advocate in the Congress than myself. The original plan was abandoned by its promoters because of its unsoundness. It was not offered to the people of this country as a plan of old-age assistance. It was offered as a panacea for the depression. I have read the hearings which were held before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I have read the testimony of Dr. Townsend. I am satisfied, thoroughly so, that he failed absolutely to make out a case for his original plan. His plan of pay, $200 a month to those that qualified, over 60 years of age, would have caused our Government to spend annually a sum approximating $20,000,000,000. It would have raised the cost of living so that very few of our people could eat, let alone pay the taxes to support the plan. His original plan if adopted would have forced our great Government into bankruptcy. He contended that this sum of $20,000,000,000 could be raised by a transaction tax. It was his theory that by taxing our people the Government could raise the money, and that the forced spending of it would revive industry to such an extent that the people of our Nation would enjoy the greatest prosperity that they had ever known. If his theory could have been put into practice, the way out of the depression would have been as simple as the recitation of the a-b-c's. His philosophy of more taxes and more spending, he contended, was the way out of the depression. His was a new economic philosophy, one that had few advocates, but apparently had many followers. If economic recovery could be attained by having six or seven million people spend $200 a month, why not have 20,000,000 people spend the same amount in order to accelerate recovery; it simply could not be done. It is regretted that any group, any place in our enlightened America, would attempt to delude and mislead the aged of this Nation. Our old people are not interested in $200 per month. Their only interest in this life is a safe and comfortable convoy during those years, which are few in number, before they pass to the Great Beyond.

Dr. Townsend, in the abandonment of his original plan, vindicates my statement to the press of Springfield, Mass., several months ago that it was "fantastic" and "absurd." He has sponsored a second plan, and now a third plan, which provides monthly payments ranging from nothing to $200, based upon a 2-percent transaction tax which he hopes will provide sufficient revenue to pay those over 60 years of age a monthly pension. This plan has his approval and is known as the "revised Townsend plan." I understand it will be considered by the Congress when efforts will be made to substitute the McGroarty bill when this legislation is read under the 5-minute rule. I understand further that certain Townsend agitators in my district and elsewhere continue in their attempts to fool our elderly people into the belief that Dr. Townsend still advocates a $200 a month pension for those over 60 years of age. This attitude of fooling the aged is indeed cruel and unpardonable.

Under this revised Townsend plan a maximum monthly payment to citizens over 60 years of age will be $50, and it is generally agreed now that a 2-percent transaction tax, at its best, could only provide $4,000,000,000 in revenue.

I am one Member of the Congress who is interested in the welfare of our elderly citizens, and I am hopeful that this Congress will make adequate provision for them, giving them the customary comforts of life so that the remaining years of their existence on this earth will be years of contentment.

The other provisions of this bill, relating to child welfare, public health, and unemployment insurance are worthy considerations.

While the provisions with reference to unemployment insurance fail to meet adequately my ideas they are a step in the right direction, and as we move into the years that are ahead, I am confident that by amendment and reform, the provisions relating to this subject will provide more substantial relief for our people.

I have endeavored to clearly state my position on that part of the bill which relates to old-age security. I trust that amendments will be offered when the bill is considered under the 5-minute rule, so that the amount of the Federal contribution will be increased from $15 a month to $30 a month, with the proviso that it shall be the duty of each State to provide for its citizens over 60 years of age, an additional $30 a month. This total of $60 a month, I believe, can be financed by the Federal and State Governments, and then ample provision will be made for the aged in our country.

I do believe, however, that all the purposes of this bill are praiseworthy, and that our National Government, by this legislation, will provide social relief for millions of our deserving citizens.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now arise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Committee rose, and Mr. McREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7260, the social-security bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on the social-security bill be extended 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] and myself, and that in the reading of the bill for amendment the bill shall be read by titles instead of by sections.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to object—I would like a thorough understanding on the point of reading the bill by titles. I understand that this in no way will interfere with the offering of amendments under any title, that each title is to be read separately, and while under consideration amendments germane can be offered on any section in the individual title. Am I correct in this assumption?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I appreciate the fact that this will not prevent Members from offering amendments, but, of course, with this modification—it would permit the distinguished Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to move to close debate on any title and unless there is a very liberal allowance made for Members to offer amendments and have time to explain them the House could cut off Members from the opportunity of offering amendments to each of the sections of the bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the matter, it would simply necessitate any Member desiring to offer an amendment having his amendment ready. There are several pages in each one of these titles. Having considered this bill for a part of 2 weeks, it does seem to me as though Members could have their amendments ready when we come to the particular title in which they are interested. It is only a question of expedition at the request of the majority. Personally I have no particular interest in whether it is done or not, but I do think that every reservation of protection to the Members is being made under the program as mapped out.

It simply means that the gentleman and others similarly situated to him will have their amendments ready when a title is read. We recognize the fairness of the chairman of the committee and his associates. No one is going to lose any rights by this unanimous-consent request.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin will agree that the only effect that this will have is to probably limit pro forma amendments to some extent.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would not have any objection if all pro forma amendments were eliminated. As I read this bill, there are 70 sections, and there will be opportunity for 10 minutes debate on each of those amendments. Members will have an opportunity in that way to express their views as we go along.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I may say that there is no disposition at all to interfere with the presentation of amendments or to prevent any Member from offering amendments.

Mr. BOILEAU. If the gentleman will give his assurance that Members who have bona fide amendments to offer will have an opportunity to offer them, I have no disposition to object. I realize that is asking a great deal of the gentleman, and he may want to change his mind in this respect; but, as I said, I have no disposition to object if every Member who has a bona fide amendment to offer may have 5 minutes in which to explain his amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON. He will have the same time and opportunity that he would have had under the rule as it is now drawn. There might be so many amendments offered here that if 5 minutes were allowed to each Member it would keep us here until doomsday.

Mr. BOILEAU. There are some sections of the bill which are not considered very controversial. Some Members may have a desire to offer amendments to those particular sections and they would not have the opportunity under this request because the rules provide you cannot close debate until debate has begun. For this reason, there would be an opportunity for a 5-minute speech on every section.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We could not bind ourselves under this rule any more than under the original rule, but there is no disposition or intention to take advantage of anybody.

Mr. BOILEAU. With the gentleman's assurance that every Member will have a reasonable opportunity to offer amendments to the various sections, and particularly those that are controversial, I will not object.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman will have the same assurance as if the original rule were adopted.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what advantage is to be gained by this procedure if the assurance asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin is given?

Mr. DOUGHTON. We may not gain any. It is the hope that we will be able to expedite the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. We would just get through a section that much quicker and before we know it we are on the next section and it is too late to offer amendments to the last section.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. As I untertook to observe a few moments ago, the only thing that could be accomplished, as I see it, is to reduce the number of pro forma amendments. I think that is about the only result to be accomplished, and I think that would be desirable.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not understand from the gentleman that it even prevents pro forma amendments. It would simply limit the number. The Members would not offer so many pro forma amendments perhaps.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. It would reduce them to some extent.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It will expedite the consideration of the bill, with due consideration to each and every Member.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is there any way in which we could limit debate to bona fide amendments and exclude pro forma amendments until all bona fide amendments have been considered? I appreciate, of course, what one gentleman might consider a pro forma amendment another gentleman might not so consider.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. A pro forma amendment might be used to get time in debate upon a so-called "bona fide" amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU. With the gentleman's assurance, I have no objection.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—to ask the gentleman a question—a Member desiring to substitute another bill will have the opportunity to do so?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Absolutely. There is nothing in this unanimous-consent request that will prevent that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 6718) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6718) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, as to each of such amendments, namely:

The following amendments relate to the corrections of totals, allocations, textual errors, perfections of phraseology, etc.:

Amendments nos. 1, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 18, 19, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 30, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 41, 42, 43, 45, 48, 51, 52, 54, 55, and 56.

Amendment no. 2: Eliminates the House provision relating to the issuing of bulletins or reports advocating reduced consumption of any wholesome agricultural food commodity.

Amendment no. 3: Agricultural exhibits at fairs: Appropriates $85,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $97,030, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment no. 12: Swamp fever: Appropriates $10,000, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for studies of swamp fever affecting mules and other animals.

Amendment no. 14: Bindweed investigations: Appropriates $25,000 for investigations of bindweed only, instead of $100,000 "for bindweed and other noxious weeds", as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment no. 15: Sea Island cotton: Provides an allocation of $15,000 "for experimenting in Sea Island cotton, including its hybridization with other varieties", instead of $20,000 "for experimenting in Sea Island cotton", as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment no. 16: Mississippi-Alabama experiment station, West Point, Miss.: Strikes out the Senate provision allocating $7,500 of the appropriation for "forage crops and diseases" for the continuation of the station and leaves to the discretion of the Department the amount of the appropriation which shall be so allocated.

Amendment no. 17: Fermented fruit-juice work at Beltsville, Md.: Strikes out the appropriation of $27,500 provided by the Senate.

Amendment no. 20: Forest range investigations in Montana: Appropriates $20,000, instead of $40,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment no. 21: Forest survey: Appropriates $250,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $129,703, as proposed by the House.

Amendment no. 24: Utilization of fruit and vegetable wastes and surpluses: Appropriates $15,000, instead of $35,000, as provided by the Senate.

Amendment no. 25: Naval stores investigations: Appropriates $71,741, instead of $61,741, as provided by the House, and $81,741, as provided by the Senate.

Amendment no. 31: Supersedure of the queen-bee studies: Appropriates $15,000, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment no. 38: Control of predatory animals and injurious rodents: Appropriates $600,000, instead of $453,692, as proposed by the House, and $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 39, protection of migratory birds: Provides an increase of $55,000 for the sole purpose of enabling the Bureau to double its present force of 22 game wardens, instead of the increase of $110,000 for general purposes as provided by the Senate.

On amendment no. 40, enforcement of Alaska game laws: Provides an increase of $17,500 for the sole purpose of enabling the Bureau to double its present force of seven game wardens, instead of the increase of $92,890 for general purposes as provided by the Senate.

On amendment no. 44, use of airplanes in Alaska: Strikes out the Senate provision authorizing the Bureau of Biological Survey to expend $15,000 for the purchase and operation of airplanes in Alaska.

On amendment no. 46, public lands highways: Retains the Senate provision appropriating $2,500,000 for public highways through unappropriated or unreserved public lands, nontaxable Indian lands, or other Federal reservations other than forest reservations.

On amendment no. 47, emergency construction of public highways: Restores the House language, stricken out by the Senate, allocating $100,000,000 of the appropriation contained in section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 for the emergency construction of public highways as authorized by the Cartwright-Hayden Act, approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 993), being the remaining unappropriated amount of the $200,000,000 authorized to be appropriated by the said act.

On amendments nos. 49 and 50, snow surveys: Appropriates $15,000, instead of $36,000 as provided by the Senate, for snow surveys and forecasts of irrigation water supplies.

On amendment no. 53, enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act: Appropriates $1,515,879 as provided by the House, instead of $1,765,879 as provided by the Senate.

On amendment no. 57, soil-erosion investigations: Appropriates $281,362 as provided by the House, instead of $531,362 as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment no. 59: Strikes out section 2, inserted by the Senate, which provides that "no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used for the payment of personal services or for the maintenance of any activity not specifically authorized by law."

IN DISAGREEMENT

The committee of conference have not agreed to the following Senate amendments:

Amendment numbered 8, appropriating $10,000 for the establishment of a meteorological station in western Montana.

Amendment numbered 29, appropriating $15,000 for Mormon cricket control.

Amendment numbered 58, directing the Secretary of Agriculture to apportion and prorate the entire amount of the $10,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, for the construction of forest highways, and to incur obligations and approve projects for same.

Amendment numbered 60, pertaining to the collection of the processing tax upon cotton.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 8: On page 19 of the bill, after line 18, insert: "Meteorological station, western Montana: For the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of a meteorological station upon a site to be selected by the Secretary for western Montana, $10,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 29: Page 55, lines 18, strike out "$339,729" and insert in lieu thereof "$354,729."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "$339,729, including not exceeding $15,000 for control and eradication of the Mormon cricket."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 58: On page 90, after line 11, insert a colon and the following: "That the Secretary of Agriculture shall, upon the approval of this act, apportion and prorate among the several States, Alaska, and Puerto Rico, as provided in section 23 of said Federal Highway Act, the sum of $10,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, by the act approved June 18, 1934: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall incur obligations, approve projects, or enter into contracts under his apportionment and prorating of this authorization, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation on the part of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof: Provided further, That total expenditures on account of any State or Territory shall at no time exceed its authorized apportionment: Provided further,"

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 60: Page 91, line 20, insert:

"SEC. 3. That the processing tax authorized by Public Act No. 10, Seventy-third Congress, when levied upon cotton, shall be assessed and collected at the time that the goods are invoiced for sale by the processor."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. The processing tax authorized by Public Act No. 10, Seventy-third Congress (48 Stat. 31), when levied upon cotton, shall be payable 90 days after the filing of the processor's report: Provided, That, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the time for payment of such tax upon cotton may be extended, but in no case to exceed 6 months from the date of the filing of the report."

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes, by which the several motions were agreed to, was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for your information a copy, as received by radiogram from the Acting Governor General of the Philippine Islands, of Act No. 4200, enacted by the Tenth Philippine Legislature, first special session, on April 8, 1935, and approved on the same date, entitled:

An act to submit to the Filipino people for ratification or rejection the constitution of the Philippines, with the ordinance appended thereto, to appropriate funds therefor, and for other purposes.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 11, 1935.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF MILITARY MEDICINE AND PHARMACY (H. DOC. NO. 154)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State with an accompanying memorandum, to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Eighth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to convene at Brussels in June 1935.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 15, 1935.

A MESSAGE FROM CAPITOL HILL

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a speech delivered by our colleague, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], in St. Louis on Saturday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include a speech delivered by our colleague, Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia, before the Jefferson Club of St. Louis, Mo., on Saturday evening, April 13, 1935.

Mr. Toastmaster, ladies, and gentlemen, it has been my good fortune many times to visit this great city. On a previous occasion I addressed the International Convention of Lions which met here in July 1933. I am, however, particularly happy to have been able to accept the cordial invitation extended to me by my good friend, Congressman COCHRAN, to speak this evening upon the occasion of the observance of the anniversary of the birthday of Thomas Jefferson, one of the outstanding citizens of this Republic, in whose honor this club is named.

I enjoy the comradeship of the Missouri Representatives in the lower House, and I am happy to know that the first treasurer of the Jefferson Club is your own Congressman, TOM HENNINGS, who was one of a small group that organized this club and kept it intact during the lean days when Democrats had but little chance of victory and when it took stout hearts to fight the battles of our party.

It has also been my pleasure to become well acquainted with another Representative from St. Louis, J. R. CLAIBORNE, and I am also a great admirer and friend of the veteran, JACK COCHRAN, of whom you can well be proud. These three stalwart Democrats are important cogs in the new-deal machinery.

I have been interested in seeing the Democratic advances which have been made in St. Louis. I recall that your city and State contributed to the overwhelming victory of President Roosevelt in 1932 and that you gave unprecedented majorities to candidates on the Democratic ticket, from the top to the bottom. What is more, you did not stop, for I am told that in the spring of 1934, you elected a Democratic mayor and other city officials, who took over the affairs of city hall for the first time in almost a quarter of a century. And now, only a few days ago, you gave about a 50,000 majority to every candidate on the Democratic city ticket and only the ghosts of the Republican Party haunt the corridors of your municipal building.

We are here tonight to particularly honor Thomas Jefferson. The important part he played in the organization of the Republic during the first three or four administrations, his distinctive character, patriotism, and intellectual force have made him one of the greatest figures in American history. Perhaps the best story ever told about Jefferson to show his splendid sense of proportions, which set him apart as a true gentleman, concerns the time when he was chosen to be this Nation's Ambassador to France, following the return from that post of Franklin. Jefferson was met at the dock by Talleyrand, the noted diplomat and wit, who said in greeting: "Ah, Monsieur, you come to take the place of Franklin." And Jefferson replied: "No, I come not to take the place of Franklin; no man can do that. I come only to succeed him."

Many of you are leaders in the movement to place here a memorial to Thomas Jefferson for the part he played in opening up this truly wonderful region. His acts are interwoven with the history of this section, as it was due to his vision and foresight that this section became a part of the United States of America.

President Roosevelt, in paying tribute to Jefferson, said: "He was the one who at all times looked the farthest into the future, examining the ultimate effects on humanity of the actions of the present. Jefferson's methods were usually illustrative of government based upon a universality of interest. I can picture the weeks on horseback when he was traveling into the different States of the Union, slowly and laboriously accumulating an understanding of the people of his country. He was not only drinking in the needs of the people in every walk of life, but he was also giving to them an understanding of the essential principles of self-government."

Jefferson was one of the dreamer-doers of our Nation's onward march. He was a patternmaker of civilization and we shall not forget his service to America.

To the unfinished task before us we join now in working in the ranks of an administration which came into power at a time when the strongest leadership possible was demanded if we were to bring order out of chaos.

Let us contrast for a few moments the conditions which faced us 2 years ago and those of the present time. Two years ago the American people were gripped with fear and foreboding. For more than 3 years our people had fought losing battles and millions of unemployed could see no hope of relief, no way out for themselves and their families.

I would like to refer back to the attacks which were made upon Roosevelt by Mr. Hoover in the closing speech he delivered on October 27 in New York City. In that address it was said that: "The grass will grow in the streets of a hundred cities, a thousand towns. The weeds will overrun the fields of millions of farmers. Their churches, their hospitals, and schoolhouses will decay."

Roosevelt was attacked on several points in that address in which Hoover pictured the disaster which would overtake the American people if Roosevelt was elected and Democratic policies put into effect. I wish to make no mistake tonight and shall quote directly from Mr. Hoover's address. He said: "A proposal of our opponents which would break down the American system is the expansion of Government expenditures by yielding to sectional and group raids upon the Public Treasury." Those were his exact words. He then went on to state: "No nation can conscript its citizens for this proportion of men's time without national impoverishment and destruction of their liberties."

Now, let us see what is the record of Roosevelt and this administration. There have been no sectional or partisan raids upon the public Treasury. Our great Chief Executive, who is destined to become one of the truly great leaders of mankind, has seen to it that in the conduct of the Public Works Administration, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Land Bank, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Housing Administration, and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration that there has been not one trace of an improper disposition of the funds and functions of these institutions. No one can show that during this administration there is evidence of special groups receiving special favors at the hands of those now guiding the destinies of our Nation from Washington, D. C.

In answer to the charge that we would have national impoverishment, let me say that it was not the policies of Roosevelt which brought the present crisis in our national life, but it was because of the policies of the former administrations in charge. That we would have a destruction of our liberties has been proven to be without foundation. The only liberties that have been taken away from anyone are those liberties which gave an employer the right to exploit child labor, to operate unsanitary sweat shops, and to deny to organized labor the right to collective bargaining. To be sure the liberty of unscrupulous bankers to destroy communities and cities has been denied. Fake brokers and stock salesmen have had their liberty taken away—a liberty by which they used to sell worthless securities to trusting investors.

Let us turn now to another attack which was made upon Roosevelt, in which it was said our Government would look into the banking business. Quoting exact words, his New York speech, Mr. Hoover said: "This proposal violates every sound principle of finance and our Government." Now let us look at the record. The administration has not taken over the personal banking business of the country. However, it has given the Federal Reserve Board the power to change the requirements of member banks so that they shall soon extend credit. Not credit which is brought about by pulling political strings, but credit for the financing of legal business under the National Recovery Act and similar measures. There must be an increasing pressure brought upon many banks that they become institutions willing and ready to cooperate with business by the extension of credit, and it is only when they will refuse credit that this Government, through the present administration, will step in and take needed control. Roosevelt is giving the banking institutions of this Nation an opportunity to make good.

We now come to a third charge. Hoover said: "Another proposal which would wholly alter our American system of life is to reduce the protective tariff to a competitive tariff for revenue." The record shows, however, that the present administration has sponsored no measure looking toward tariff reduction. Those in authority have sought only for a cooperation with European nations and those of South America, looking toward closer trade relations. It was also said, and I again quote the exact words: "Another proposal is that the Government go into the power business." It is also noteworthy to give his words again in that connection when he said: "I hesitate to contemplate the future of our institutions."

Hoover was correct when he spoke about these proposals because the Roosevelt administration, through legislation, has taken over Muscle Shoals. It is a known fact that for a long time power magnates have tried to keep towns and cities from operating their own plants. This Nation will not break up because of its ability to operate a plant which can distribute hydroelectric power cheaply through the South Central States.

Let us come now to another bitter attack which was made on Roosevelt. Hoover said, in speaking of Roosevelt: "He would support measures for the inauguration of self-legislating public works to provide employment for all surplus labor at all times. I protest against such frivolous promises being held out to a suffering people. No such employment can be found."

Not so many months ago it was estimated that 14,000,000 men were faced with enforced idleness in America. Banks and the business institutions of this country were ready to collapse. Under the leadership of President Roosevelt the administration realizes the fact that the true prosperity of this Republic depends on the men and women who produce the wealth of the 48 States. Immediate and progressive steps for the restoration of old jobs and the creation of new ones were taken.

The National Industrial Recovery Act became a law. Under its provisions labor received many of its most cherished blessings. The conditions of this act abolished child labor. Shorter hours than had ever been known in the history of America were given to hundreds of thousands of workers. Minimum wages were placed as much as 60 percent higher than some industries had ever before paid. The sweatshop was started on its way to oblivion and it is safe to say that more than three and one-half million idle workers have received jobs as a result of the N. R. A. program.

Mistakes, of course, have been made in a rapidly mobilized plan of reemployment, but we do know that the C. W. A. projects paid standard wages and gave back to the unemployed workers a large measure of this self-respect, placing back to work some four million men in approximately 1 month's time. This is one of the outstanding economic achievements in the history of the world. It was made possible through the intelligence, energy, and cooperative spirit of the American people.

Hundreds of thousands of men are now working on projects handled by the Public Work Administration and that number will soon be increased to several millions. It is necessary that we remember these projects will be almost entirely self-liquidating and the Government will lose nothing.

The Civilian Conservation Corps of the United States has placed more than a million young men to useful work in the forest areas of our country.

Surely the facts prove that this is not the program of a dictator, but of a savior for millions of suffering Americans and for the living dead who had lost faith in our land. No secret negotiations were entered into, no star-chamber gatherings were called for the purpose of exploiting our people. Instead our President has taken into his confidence the American people as a whole. Bravely and honestly he has seen fit to talk over in plain and understanding language through the medium of the radio the problems which confront the American people, and he has asked for their wholehearted cooperation in the solution which is certain to come about.

When Hoover went out of office on March 4, 1933, this Nation was on the brink of a revolution. It is too much to expect that the present administration can bring about any miracles. President Roosevelt; however, can and will continue to bring to this Nation forward-looking policies which already include national relief, bank reform, in which small depositors will be guaranteed; Civilian Conservation Corps; a sane and sensible inflation of our currency; relief for the home owner and the farm owner; the Muscle Shoals Act; our public-works program, and the National Recovery Act. America has struck its tents and once more is on the march led by a leader who, in the midst of all his triumphs, continues to work and smile; and because of the whole-hearted backing of the people of this Nation, we shall have a sustained prosperity and peace in the days that are ahead.

There is being considered in the House of Representatives at the present time a measure looking toward the security and welfare of the great bulk of our citizenry which provides for unemployment insurance and Federal old-age pensions.

It is highly significant that in a recent issue of Collier's, a conservative weekly, appeared an editorial, which says in part: "The most important fact in the history of labor during the last 12 months has been the great gain in employment. Business improvement has created more jobs. Many people have been excited and alarmed at the increased number of strikes during the year. There is no real occasion for concern. Strikes are a familiar experience during periods of recovery. At the bottom of a depression organized labor calls few strikes. Later, when there is more to be had, controversy naturally arises. The useful course is for labor and all other groups concerned now to work out a program and a policy to eliminate future need of emergency action. We can't see all of the future, but we know definitely that the unemployed in good times and bad must somehow be supported. If organized labor and organized employers give their best thought and energy to working out an American plan for unemployment insurance, such a plan could be established."

The plan and purpose of providing pensions for the aged is, as I conceive the facts, in full harmony with the Golden Rule laid down by the Master as a sound rule of human conduct. I am sure that there is no person who would wish to face old age burdened by the misery of poverty. We cannot truthfully say, in behalf of civilization, that it has produced a race of human beings who do unto others as if they were the others as long as we permit the old and decrepit people to be sentenced to poorhouses.

I do not believe that the Nazarene would condemn old people to a poorhouse. I believe that he would be shocked by the very thought of imprisonment for life in a poorhouse; therefore, I too, am shocked by the thought. We live in the richest country on this earth. We have an abundance of everything that human beings can use, both the necessities and the luxuries. We live in one Nation of this world where every form of freedom is given the greatest possible expression. And I say to you, my friends, that we have no right to enjoy these great blessings without a willingness to share them with aged people who, by the very nature of their physical beings, are not able to appropriate their share without our cooperation.

There is plenty in this world for all of us. We cannot take anything with us when we cross the Great Divide. Moreover, the riches which most people accumulate come as the result of some form of cooperation from others. It is a great blessing to possess riches, but it is a greater blessing to possess, also, a heart that is willing to use riches in behalf of those who are helpless.

The Man of Galilee said: "I was hungry and ye fed me, I was athirst and ye gave me drink, I was naked and ye clothed me; inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it also even unto me."

That is the rule of philosophy that should guide neighbor toward neighbor and friend toward friend.

I believe that that is the philosophy of life that accentuates the service of the man who today is the leader of these United States. Victor Hugo a long time ago wrote a significant sentence, in which he said, "The smoothing out of rough places is the great policy of God." I believe that policy and I believe that this is the policy of the man who today is President of this Republic. It should be our delight also to aid those less fortunate than ourselves.

Tonight, ladies and gentlemen, we should be happy that we can have a part in the building of this Republic under the leadership of such an individual. We should be pleased to know that our services are called upon at this time when we are asked not to kill, but to give life anew; not to cripple, but heal; not to tear down, but to build up; not to have fear in our hearts, but to have faith in the institutions of America; and when we are asked not to walk the highways of this country and unjustly criticize, but rather to have confidence in our hearts.

At the Vatican at Rome in the Sistine Chapel there are 300 pictures all more than lifesize, and some are 15 feet long. These are the products of the hand of Michelangelo. For 23 months, day after day, week after week, he lay on his back in a cramped position bringing out his artistic soul in that wondrous masterpiece. This was done at arm's length and can be seen in lifesize by the people below. For days he never left his room. They sent up food to him with a string on a pail. When it was all over the old artist walked about the streets of Rome in a bent position with a crooked neck and his head over on one side. And he said, "My life is there on the ceiling of the Chapel of St. Sixtus."

Today the Master Artist sends out the call to every citizen that feels and understands to come into the spirit of Michelangelo and say, "I shall place a part of my life there at the altar of a struggling humanity."

Less than 3 months ago in Charles Town, W. Va., after I had spoken there during the campaign, I visited in the home of my friend Merle Alger. As we sat there in the modest living room of that American citizen, the door was open a little ways into a bedroom, and I saw his little daughter, 9 years old, kneeling at the bedside saying her prayers. I shall never forget her closing words. This is what she said: "And please, God, help President Roosevelt." I asked the mother and father if they had ever asked that little daughter of theirs to include that in her prayer, and they said they had never spoken to her about the President of the United States.

Tonight, ladies and gentlemen, something not only takes hold of the hearts of little children, but something takes hold of the hearts of men and women. We are asked not to pray alone, but to work in behalf of the further building of America under the leadership of a man who calls on us for cooperation that hovels shall become happy homes, that distress may be lightened, and additional security be given those who exist on the ragged edge of life.

THE FISCAL STATUS OF OUR GOVERNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address delivered last evening by the Secretary of the Treasury on the financial condition of the country. I feel this is a very important document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the speech delivered Sunday, April 14, 1935, at 7 p. m., by the Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau, Jr., over a Nation-wide hook-up of the National Broadcasting Co. and Columbia Broadcasting System.

This address has been commended so highly by the press throughout the country this morning, and it is of such far-reaching importance to the business interests of our Nation that, with the express permission of the President of the United States and Mr. Morgenthau himself, I insert it in the RECORD herewith, as follows:

You will see in tomorrow morning's newspapers that the Treasury has called for redemption on the 15th of next October all of the fourth Liberty Loan bonds whose numbers end in 3 or 4. The last of the Liberty Loan bonds have now been called. And so in this seventeenth year after the armistice, these famous securities move from the realm of Government finance to the pages of history.

This administration has now called for redemption $8,000,000,000 worth of Liberty bonds. We did not have to call them; they were not due; it was good business sense that prompted our action. The bonds called today bear 4¼-percent interest while the average interest rate for all Government securities now outstanding is only 2.86.

It is impossible to estimate accurately how much we will save in interest on this new refunding because it has not yet been completed, but I can tell you how much we are saving on our previous $5,000,000,000 of refundings. In round numbers it amounts to $65,000,000 a year. If we do as well on the remainder, which seems to be a fair assumption, there will be an additional saving of $35,000,000 a year. That makes a total of $100,000,000 which will not have to be raised next year from the taxpayers.

Refinancing on this scale has the quality of high adventure. In England, when they undertook a similar operation to reduce debt charges, the Chancellor of the Exchequer felt called upon to ask that no new capital issues be offered during the period of the conversion, and that ban remained in effect 6 months. The operation was accompanied by appeals to patriotism; indeed, it resembled one of our war-time Liberty Loan campaigns. Here we have handled this same transaction so easily, and in such a commonplace manner, that many people have undoubtedly been unaware of its nature or significance.

But the benefits of this transaction do not end with the saving of $100,000,000 a year.

When we began our refinancing early in 1934 we faced a peculiar situation; there was plenty of money, and presumably it ought to have been cheap, but it wasn't. The bond market was stagnant, and prices were low. Scarcely any refunding was going on. There was a log jam in the capital market. The Federal Government took the initiative by refunding the first 5 billions of high-rate Liberty bonds into lower rate and longer bonds. In the 15 months between January 3, 1934, and April 3, 1935, the average price of representative municipal bonds rose 24 percent. High-grade railroad bonds rose 14.4 percent. Public-utilities bonds rose 12.1 percent. Industrial bonds rose 14.7 percent. These increases in the market value of bonds reflect the decrease in the cost of money.

The great importance of cheap money to improve business conditions is not generally realized. The great corporations came into the market to attend to their necessary financing. The financial pages of your newspapers reflect the impressive change in the dimensions of their operations. Let me give you the figures. During March 1934 the total volume of corporate refunding amounted to only 12½ million dollars, with no lowering in the interest rate. But during March of this year corporate refunding exceeded $112,000,000—or nine times as much as during the previous March. And the interest rate on the new issues this year shows an average decrease of almost 1½ percent, which meant a saving of more than 1½ million dollars. That is real refunding. It shows conclusively that the financial log jam has been broken.

These developments have a very definite meaning in your everyday life. They affect not only the taxpayer, but every stockholder, producer, consumer, and worker.

We are now just on the eve of seeing the substantial benefits of this fundamental change.

There is no longer any reason why capital should not flow normally into the arteries of business. In fact, with the splendid cooperation and wise guidance of the Federal Securities and Exchange Commission, it is doing so.

Although you may not have followed all this refinancing in detail, you have undoubtedly read headlines referring to the new-deal expenditures. Nobody denies that there have been expenditures—and large ones—but let us go into that subject realistically.

Soon after this administration came into office, March 4, 1933, the President submitted a comprehensive recovery program which the Congress approved. As the President clearly pointed out in his first Budget message in January 1934, that program called for an expenditure of $9,300,000,000 for the 2-year period ending June 30, 1935, above the estimated income. The deficit at the end of 21 months of that 2-year period was $6,300,000,000. With less than 3 months to go to complete the 2-year period, we are certain that expenditures will be $2,000,000,000 less than that original estimate.

Naturally you want to know what the Government got for its money. Emergency expenditures caused the deficit and here are the items: Loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Public Works Administration, and various other governmental agencies, $1,700,000,000.

Public works, under which head I include the Boulder Dam, rivers and harbors, the Tennessee Valley Authority's projects, subsistence homesteads, and the vast program of Federal aid for good roads, $1,200,000,000.

The remaining $3,400,000,000 was expended for relief of American citizens in distress. This was the grand total for all forms of relief and includes even the $600,000,000 for the Civilian Conservation Corps, whose splendid work is worth every dollar of its cost.

In order to get the true picture it is important to remember that these expenditures are not loss or waste. We have acquired values for them. From the loans of $1,700,000,000 we may expect repayments in substantial amount which will go to reduce the public debt. The $1,200,000,000 for public works is invested in dams, roads, buildings, and other permanent improvements. These two items account for nearly half of the deficit.

The greatest single item of expenditure has been for relief. We have furnished food, shelter, clothing, and self-respect which comes of having a job—to millions who needed these things as never before. That item will continue to be the bulk of the real deficit.

Now, let's take up the public debt of the Federal Government. When this administration came into office the gross public debt was a little less than $21,000,000,000. As of March 31 this year it had increased in round numbers to $28,800,000,000, the largest in our history. Although there is no doubt anywhere about our credit being good—if it were not, we could not have refunded all of those Liberty bonds—some people raise a point about the cost for interest. But let us see how this cost at the present time compares with the cost in past years. The annual interest on today's debt amounts to $800,000,000. And you would naturally suppose, in view of the fact that the debt is the largest in our history, that the interest cost must also be the largest. But it is not.

We are carrying the greatest national debt in our history for less money than it cost back in 1925, when the national debt was smaller by $8,000,000,000.

Now, let's look ahead and see, first of all, what certainties the future holds. In July and August we know that we are going to retire $674,000,000 of interest-bearing Government securities. They are the Panama Canal bonds and United States consols that have already been called for redemption. The cash for that transaction is now in the Treasury.

Then we are going to finish the retirement of the Liberty bonds previously mentioned. For all practical purposes this gigantic operation will be out of the way when the time comes to raise the bulk of the money needed for the President's new work-relief program.

In his message submitting the Budget for 1936 to the present Congress the President said:

"If this Budget receives the approval of the Congress, the country will henceforth have the assurance that, with the single exception of emergency relief, every current expenditure of whatever nature will be fully covered by our estimates of current receipts. Such deficit as occurs will be due solely to emergency relief, and it may be expected to decline as rapidly as private industry is able to reemploy those who now are without work."

Since the President delivered that message new developments that would bear upon his forecast have been mostly favorable.

In looking ahead we are cheered by the fact that tax receipts for the first 9 months of the present fiscal year are $145,000,000 above the estimates.

On June 30, 1936, we should have, according to the Budget estimates, a national debt of $34,000,000,000, but those estimates did not take into account the retirement of the $674,000,000 of Government securities which I mentioned a moment ago.

The work-relief program, for which Congress recently appropriated $4,880,000,000, is scarcely started. In view of these two facts and our present comfortable margin within the Budget estimates, it is entirely possible that we shall find on June 30, 1936, a national debt of considerably less than thirty-four billions.

In conclusion, let us not forget a few central facts and figures. The new-deal expenditures are represented by money still right here at home. Some of it has been used to thaw out the frozen assets of banks for the benefit of depositors. Some of it is turning the wheels of industry. The greatest part of that portion which we shall not recover, in a material way, has been used to save human life, and to preserve the morale of our people.

Thank you and good night.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet, in accordance with its previous order, tomorrow, Tuesday, April 16, 1935, at 11 o'clock.

7073. By Mr. KENNEY: Resolution of the borough of Palisades Park, Bergen County, N. J., approving subject matter of financial relief of distressed municipalities; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7074. Also, petition of the executive committee of the Rhode Island Textile Association, requesting the Congress of the United States to institute action to abolish the Agricultural Adjustment Administration as being inequitably administered, ineffective in its activities, and an unwarranted and unjustified excess burden on the shoulders of American farmers and manufacturers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7075. By Mr. KENNEDY of New York: Petition of the Legislature of the State of New York, requesting that consideration be given to the appeal made by the President of the Senate of Puerto Rico, the Honorable Rafael Martinez Nadal, and that the quota of sugar production in Puerto Rico be raised to 1,000,000 tons a year, so that that country might compete with foreign countries in the production of sugar for the bettering of the economic conditions in Puerto Rico; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7076. By Mr. KING: Petition of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, relating to accepting space in the Washington Monument at Washington alloted for a memorial stone from Hawaii; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

7078. By Mr. McREYNOLDS: Two petitions containing the signatures and addresses of 196 citizens of Chattanooga, Tenn., asking favorable consideration of Congress of the extension of the National Recovery Administration; the Wagner labor disputes bill (S. 6288); the Connery bill (H. R. 6450), labor representation on codes; Connery Resolution No. 141, to prohibit use of Federal arms and supplies during strikes without authority from the Secretary of War; and the Byrns bill (S. 2039), to stop shipment of strike breakers over State lines during strikes; to the Committee on Labor.

7079. By Mr. MERRITT of New York: Resolution of the Association of Master Plumbers, Queensborough branch of the Greater New York Association, urging Congress to have the National Recovery Administration Code continued for at least 2 more years; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7080. Also, resolution of the New York State Code Authority for the Retail Tobacco Trade, 233 Broadway, New York, favoring the continuance of the National Industrial Recovery Act; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7081. Also, resolution of the Mutual Paper Box Manufacturers' Association of Central and Eastern New York, urging upon Congress to continue the National Industrial Recovery Act; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7082. Also, resolution of Anna Bores, of 656 Vanderbilt Avenue, and 325 additional residents of Brooklyn, appealing to Congress to defeat the Wagner labor-disputes bill; to the Committee on Labor.

7084. Also, resolution of the Cedarville National Farm Loan Association, requesting the passage of legislation to reduce interest on farm-credit loans; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7085. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the American Rubber Products Corporation, New York City, concerning Senate bill 1807 and House bill 5585; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7086. Also, petition of the Merchants' Association of New York, concerning the economic security bill (S. 1130 and H. R. 7260); to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7087. Also, petition of Colonel A. L. Kline Camp, No. 99, Department of New York, United Spanish War Veterans, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the enactment of House bill 6995; to the Committee on Pensions.

7088. Also, petition of the New York State Code Authority for the Retail Tobacco Trade, New York City, concerning continuance of the National Recovery Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7089. Also, petition of Anne Gurren, 184 Nassau Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., and 19 other residents of the Third Congressional District, New York, concerning the Lundeen bill (H. R. 2827); to the Committee on Labor.

7090. By Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma: Petition of Sam C. Brown and numerous other citizens and residents of Savannah, Ga., urging immediate congressional action on House bill 2856, by Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma, proposing to pension all citizens of the United States above the age of 55 years; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7091. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of the New York Board of Trade, New York City, concerning the continuance of the National Recovery Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7092. Also, petition of the New York State Code Authority for the Retail Tobacco Trade, New York City, concerning the continuance of the National Recovery Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7093. By Mr. TRUAX: Petition of the International Union of United Brewery, Flour Cereal, and Soft Drink Workers of America, of St. Joseph, Mo., by their secretary, A. R. Hendricks, urging support of the Wagner-Connery labor relations bill (H. R. 1628) and the Black-Connery 30-hour-week bill (H. R. 7198); to the Committee on Labor.

7094. Also, petition of the Toledo Federation of Teachers, Local No. 250, by their secretary, George J. Hammersmith, Toledo, Ohio, realizing that the strengthening of section 7 (a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act is essential to the return of prosperity and also that there is a drastic need for an independent National Relations Board with power to enforce its decisions, and also asking support of the Wagner labor-relations bill; to the Committee on Labor.

7095. Also, petition of the Metal Polishers, Buffers, and Platers, Local Union No. 2, Toledo, Ohio, requesting support of any measure that has for its purpose the continuation and improvement of the National Industrial Recovery Act, as they believe that for the welfare of the Nation as a whole, and the workers in particular, the wages-and-hours provision of the National Recovery Act should be continued, though there are many points at which they should be improved; to the Committee on Labor.

7097. Also, petition of the Toledo (Ohio) Cloakmakers' Union, by their secretary, B. Rosencranz, favoring and urging support of House bill 7172, the Mead substitute bill, and House bill 6990, which provide for a 40-hour week for all postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

7098. By Mr. WELCH: Assembly Joint Resolution No. 46 of the California Legislature, memorializing the President of the United States and Congress in connection with trans-Pacific air mail service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

7099. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Interprofessional Association for Social Insurance; to the Committee on Labor.

7100. Also, petition of the National Council of the Muskogee Creek Nation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 16, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, Apr. 15, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday, April 15, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

THE LATE SENATOR JOHN J. BLAINE, OF WISCONSIN

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, 1 year ago today the late Senator John J. Blaine died at his home at Boscobel, Wis. The legislature of my State has passed a joint resolution reviewing his honorable and distinguished service both to the State of Wisconsin and to the Federal Government. I ask unanimous consent to have the resolution printed as a part of my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be printed, as requested.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Joint resolution relating to the life and public services of Senator John J. Blaine

Hon. John J. Blaine died April 16, 1934, at his home in Boscobel, Wis., leaving behind him a brilliant record of public achievement. There have been few men in the history of this State who have had a larger or more loyal following, and few men who have more truly merited such a following or more worthily filled the high offices which they occupied.

Mayor of Moscobel, member of the county board of Grant County, often a delegate to State and national conventions, State senator, attorney general, three times Governor of Wisconsin, United States Senator, and in the last year of his life director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation—in public life for nearly 40 years—John Blaine contributed much to his community, State, and Nation. Every office that he held except the last was an elective one. To recount all of the many notable instances and measures in which Mr. Blaine had a leading part would practically amount to reviewing the entire history of this State in the present century and the national legislation for the 6 years he served in the United States Senate. On the day he began his term as State senator he attracted State-wide attention by challenging the large expenditures of the successful candidate for United States Senator in the preceding election. To that challenge this State owes its corrupt-practices act. As State senator he also served as a member of the interim committee which drafted the workmen's compensation act, and took a leading part in the enactment of the Wisconsin income-tax law.

As attorney general he successfully defended the constitutionality of the soldiers' bonus act. He was not technical as a lawyer, but made his legal principles rest on the broad foundations of the law.

John Blaine saw far ahead into the future. As Governor he gave Wisconsin an outstanding progressive administration, characterized by much legislation for the benefit of farmers and workmen. On his recommendation was enacted the first law outlawing filled milk enacted anywhere in the United States and which was subsequently copied verbatim by the Congress of the United States. It was also due to his initiative and energy as Governor that Wisconsin led her neighboring States in the matter of eradicating bovine tuberculosis, and thereby gained a strong foothold in the Chicago milk market.

During Governor Blaine's administration great progress was made in labor legislation. Under his leadership were enacted the old-age-pension law, the law regulating home work, the law providing for jury trial in contempt cases arising out of injunctions and labor disputes, the act legalizing picketing, the first law in this country regulating private detective agencies, the present minimum-wage law, the law regulating the hours of labor for women, the cab curtain law, and others.

During his administration were adopted the amendments to the constitution providing for home rule for cities and villages and the recall of elective public officials. There was enacted the first law in the Nation giving women equal rights with men in all respects and an act conferring upon counties the right of self-determination in all matters involving the joint expenditure of county and State funds. Governor Blaine was responsible for more than doubling the appropriation for capital expenditures at the State charitable and penal institutions and provided better schooling, housing, and educational facilities at the institutions for neglected, dependent, and delinquent children. It was during his administration that the Memorial Hospital was built and the soldiers' rehabilitation law passed. Never has Wisconsin had a Governor who did more for the betterment of the dependents and defectives of the State.

During Governor Blaine's administration inheritance taxes were doubled, the secrecy clause in the income-tax law was repealed, and the system of field audits was instituted which has made possible the collection of millions of dollars of back income taxes. With his recommendation the personal-property tax offset which canceled more than 40 percent of the income tax assessed was repealed and the additional revenue resulting thereby used to reduce property taxes. The State property tax for highway purposes was abandoned and in its place gasoline was taxed and motor-vehicle fees increased.

It was his record as Governor, made under great difficulties, which accounted for Governor Blaine's election to the United States Senate. As a Member of that body he was conscientious, able, influential. He was a hard fighter for what he believed to be right. He served on some of the most important committees and made a name for himself as an investigator, exposing single-handed the frauds in post-office leases, and played a prominent part in the investigations of the lobby and the stock exchange. He was one of the authors of the Federal anti-injunction law and blocked legalization of the Chicago water steal, strongly opposed branch banking, and criticized the national administration for extending relief only to great financial and industrial institutions.

His interests were universal and his labors tireless. With a buoyancy of spirit and youthfulness which characterized his entire life, he thoroughly enjoyed his arduous duties in the Senate and contributed much to its deliberations. He did his own thinking and voted as he deemed to be for the best interests of the country. In one term he established himself as one of the most useful Senators, and in his last session scored perhaps his greatest legislative victory when Congress adopted the Blaine resolution submitting the twenty-first amendment to repeal the eighteenth amendment to conventions in the several States.

As a director of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Mr. Blaine devoted himself to his task as whole-heartedly as he did to every other position he had held. To this work he devoted his entire energy. He kept completely out of the limelight, but he had his thumb on everything that the Corporation was doing and played a large part in deciding its policies.

Whether as Governor, Senator, or member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, John J. Blaine was a man of high ideals. He voiced his public sentiments in words of singular strength, clarity, and beauty. The following sentiments have been taken from some of his speeches:

"I refuse to permit designing, cunning, and scheming men to become engines of mischief in this State."

"I used all the constitutional and legal means at my disposal as Governor to preserve the constitutional guaranties of freedom of speech, freedom of press, and freedom of assembly."

"I fought back the forces of bigotry and intolerance that have divided the people of many States because of differences of religion and nationality."

"Criminal extortion and profiteering have become a menace to every housewife, making her heartsick in caring for her family. The principle of the law of usury should apply to the profiteers. Willful profiteers in the necessities of life, upon conviction of jury, should be jailed and their unlawful profits forfeited to the Commonwealth."

"The narrow and bigoted view of 'Americanism' recently proposed in our legislatures and promulgated in some educational circles is born of ignorance and intolerance."

"Education should be founded on the broad and liberal principles designed by the founders of our Government recognizing the various elements which have made this a strong and virile Nation."

"Extravagance does not mean progress—it spells ultimate failure and bankruptcy, defeat not victory, ruin not prosperity."

"I trust that any attempt that may be made to arouse personal animosity and jealousies to play the game of politics and to prolong the legislative sessions will be met by the prompt disapproval of the majority of this legislature."

Few Governors of a Commonwealth have possessed that great strength of English and vigorous marshalling of ideas exhibited by John J. Blaine in his numerous speeches.

Throughout his life the late Senator Blaine was something of a lone fighter. He was loyal to his friends and ever faithful to the causes in which he believed. He appreciated the necessity of teamwork to produce results, and was willing to compromise where principles were not at stake. He worked best alone, and made up his mind independently. Above all, he was a man of courage, never hesitating to follow his convictions regardless of consequences. Not once did he waver in his devotion to the progressive cause. One of his great gifts was his understanding of the temper of the people. He knew what the people wanted because he was one of them. His roots were among the people of Wisconsin, and he never thought of himself as having risen above them. He distinctly knew what was in the minds of the great mass of the common people, and to them he addressed all of his arguments and for them he expended all of his energies.

It is rare to find in a man, whose personality and character have so impressed themselves upon the history of a State, the humanitarian qualities with which John Blaine was so richly endowed. He had that precious thing, the common touch that made all men his friends. Those thousands who followed his leadership did not do so in awe of his high position but because of love for the warmth of the man and complete confidence in his integrity.

He enjoyed the daily routine of life; his hobby was the appreciation of simple things. He liked the outdoors, and often would go to Glen Park, Tower Hill, or other picturesque spots in Crawford County and cook a meal or two on the open fire. He took much pleasure in going on hunting or fishing trips with a few intimate friends to retreats he knew near Hancock or Park Falls. He enjoyed spending a week or so at the forestry headquarters on Trout Lake with Mrs. Blaine, tramping over the quiet and peaceful trails with a ranger as his guide. When the National Guard was encamped at Camp Douglas he liked to spend a week there, riding horseback and fraternizing with the men.

Although he was an ardent baseball and horse race fan, he never let those enjoyments interfere with his work. In fact, while he was in Washington, Senator Blaine never attended any of the many horse races outside that city, so intense was his sense of duty to his work.

Patience and perseverance were his strength; discouragement was a stranger to him.

He loved the companionship of his fellows and liked nothing better than to entertain his friends at his home in Boscobel. His home held a large place in his affections, and he always dreaded leaving it. He was happiest when he sat before a crackling fire in the fireplace with his family around him.

Senator Blaine died while still in the prime of life and far short of the Biblical three score and ten. His career was cut short, but the memory of his works will remain far beyond the lives of any now living. In honor of the memory of this great leader, whose life has enriched the lives of countless thousands: Be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That this resolution be spread upon the journals of both houses and that when both houses of the legislature adjourn on this day they adjourn in honor of this great son of Wisconsin; and be it further

Resolved, That duly attested copies of this resolution be sent to Mrs. John J. Blaine and to Mrs. Don M. Farris, daughter of the late Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], I take this occasion to pay tribute to the late Senator Blaine who came to the Senate after a long political career which qualified him for important service in this body.

During his service in the Senate I had the pleasure of intimately associating with Senator Blaine upon a number of committees. He had served his State in various capacities, and had exhibited ability of a high order. As Governor of the State of Wisconsin he had demonstrated great executive capacity, and had contributed in many ways to the progress and development of his State. He had a profound knowledge of the law which enabled him, in his service in the Senate, to speak with authority when constitutional and other questions were involved.

By reason of his services in the Legislature of Wisconsin and as Governor, Senator Blaine brought to his work in the Senate a knowledge of legislative questions which enabled him to render most valuable services to our country. He was a member of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and the estimate in which he was held by the members of that committee is recorded in a letter which was addressed to the President of the United States on March 26, 1933. Though he was not of the political faith of the majority of the members of the committee, every Democrat upon the committee, as well as others who were available, joined in the letter referred to, signifying their regret at his departure from the committee, and their high regard for him as a man and as a public servant.

Mr. President, I believe this is an appropriate occasion to have inserted in the RECORD the letter referred to. I had the honor of presenting the letter to the President of the United States; and I am happy to add that the President, recognizing the ability and the splendid record of Senator Blaine, shortly thereafter appointed him a member of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. His services upon this important Federal agency were all too short. While there, during his brief tenure, he served with marked ability, and won the confidence and esteem of his associates.

Mr. President, would the Senator from Wisconsin object to having inserted in the RECORD the letter to which I have referred?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on the contrary, I should be delighted to have that wonderful estimate of Senator Blaine's services by his colleagues on the Judiciary Committee incorporated in the RECORD of this day; and I thank the Senator from Utah for making the suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter referred to by the Senator from Utah will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26, 1933.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The undersigned have been members of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate for a number of years and during such service had full opportunity to become acquainted with Senator John J. Blaine, who, during his service in the Senate, was a member of this important committee.

He was one of the most active and energetic members of the committee and discharged with courage and ability the responsibilities placed upon him. During his services many important measures, some of which he prepared and introduced, were considered by the committee and brought to the floor of the Senate and there debated and passed. His service in connection with these measures was outstanding, and demonstrated his great ability as a lawyer and as a legislator, and his profound knowledge of political and economic questions. He was also a member of other committees which reported important measures for the consideration of the Senate. He enjoyed the confidence and esteem of his associates upon the committee and impressed them with his honesty, integrity, and ability. He was eminently fair and impartial in the consideration of all questions before the committee, as well as before the Senate, and materially aided in the enactment of important legislation. He was an effective advocate of progressive measures and gave convincing proof of his knowledge of our Government and our political institutions. As a lawyer and student of public affairs and a patriotic public official, he endeared himself to his associates. Because of his fine character, his broad statesmanship, his industry, and outstanding qualities of leadership, he won the confidence and esteem of his associates; and they experienced a feeling of regret when he left the committee of the Senate.

The undersigned, because of their high regard for Senator Blaine, take the liberty of bringing his name to your attention for such consideration as you may deem proper in connection with Federal appointments.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.
WILLIAM H. KING.
HUBERT D. STEPHENS.
CLARENCE C. DILL.
SAM G. BRATTON.

COMPENSATION OF NON-INDIAN CLAIMANTS—PUEBLO LANDS BOARD

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to non-Indian claimants who were found by the Pueblo Lands Board to have occupied and claimed land in good faith, but whose claims were not sustained and whose occupation was terminated under the act of June 7, 1924, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from Georgiana Arpin Buckley, of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis., transmitting an old-age home-insurance plan, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Kiwanis Club of Baltimore, Md., favoring the return of the frigate Constellation to Fort McHenry, Md., as a naval museum, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of several national committeewomen of the States of Kentucky and Virginia, praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial of sundry citizens of South Dakota, remonstrating against war and favoring the enactment of legislation to take the profits out of war, which was referred to the Special Committee on Investigation of Munitions Manufactures.

Mr. PITTMAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

Assembly joint resolution memorializing the President of the United States to initiate and carry into effect a movement, within his discretion, to furnish new employment in the mines of the United States

Whereas the return of seigniorage charges on the current production of silver to the producer thereof would greatly aid in the restoration of normal employment in the Western States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of Nevada, That the President of the United States be memorialized, in his discretion, to make such Executive order or promulgate, through the Treasury Department or any other Government agency that may be deemed proper to administer the provisions of any such order, to pay to the miners of silver in the United States the profits of the Government received from the production of silver in the form of seigniorage charges on their respective current productions of silver until such time as employment in the United States shall have reached a normal level, or until the domestic price of silver shall have reached $1.29 per ounce; and be it further

Resolved, That it is suggested for the consideration of the President in this respect that restrictions or regulations concerned with the disposal of said seigniorage may be subject to any or all of the following provisions: (1) That any miner of silver to whom said "seignoirage" charge is returned shall expend the entire amount of same for new employment wages, as follows: (a) The payment of wages to men employed on new underground development work; (b) the payment of wages for renovation and construction of plants and installation of equipment undertaken subsequent to the promulgation of the President's order. (2) That any producer of silver to whom the "seigniorage" charge is returned (in addition to the amount of the "seigniorage" to be spent for new employment wages, as outlined above) shall expend an amount equivalent to at least 50 percent of the amount of said "seigniorage" for labor, materials, equipment, power, and other ordinary expenses required in connection with said new development work, plant renovation and construction, and equipment installations undertaken and carried on subsequent to the effective date of the President's order; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States is urgently requested to give to this resolution his best consideration; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, with the request that it be adopted in substance by the other silver-producing States, be sent to the Governors thereof, with the request that in all those States in which the legislature is now or may soon convene that the Governor submit these resolutions to such legislatures for appropriate concurrent action thereon, and in all other cases the Governor is requested to express to the President of the United States such representation regarding the matter as may be proper and within the authority of such Governor; and be it further

Resolved, That properly certified copies of this resolution be sent to each of our Senators in the United States Senate and to our Representative in Congress, with the request that they and each of them use all honorable means to make such representation to the President of the United States as will tend to be in keeping with the desires expressed in this resolution.

Mr. TYDINGS presented the following resolution of the Senate of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

I, Enrique González Mena, secretary of the Senate of Puerto Rico, do hereby certify that the following resolution was unanimously approved by the Senate of Puerto Rico on March 11, 1935:

"Resolution to request His Excellency the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin Delano Roosevelt; the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States; the Chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions of the Senate of the United States; the Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives of the United States; the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes; and the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington, the Honorable Santiago Iglesias, that approval be given to the legislation introduced in the Congress of the United States amending the Organic Act of Puerto Rico in the sense that the municipal bond issues to carry out self-liquidating projects be not charged against the borrowing capacity of the municipalities, and for other purposes

"Whereas a bill has been introduced in the Congress of the United States providing an amendment to the effect that the bond issues of the municipalities of Puerto Rico to carry out self-liquidating projects be not charged against their borrowing capacity; and

"Whereas such legislative measure, if definitely approved, would redound to the great benefit of the municipalities of Puerto Rico and would be of great use in improving the economic conditions thereof: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of Puerto Rico:

"First. To request from His Excellency the President of the United States, the Honorable Franklin Delano Roosevelt; the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States; the Chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions of the Senate of the United States; the Chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives of the United States; the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes; and the Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington, the Honorable SANTIAGO IGLESIAS, the approval of the legislation introduced in the Congress of the United States amending the Organic Act of Puerto Rico in the sense that the bonds issued by the municipalities to carry out self-liquidating projects should not be charged against their borrowing capacity."

For transmittal to the honorable the Chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions of the Senate of the United States, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the seal of the Senate of Puerto Rico on this 12th day of March 1935.

[SEAL] ENRIQUE GONZÁLEZ MENA,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS also presented the petition of members of Snow Hill Council, No. 167, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Snow Hill, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation to reduce immigration quotas, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions adopted by members of the St. James Holy Name Society, of Baltimore, and Santa Maria Council, No. 1733, Knights of Columbus, of Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, remonstrating against alleged religious persecutions in Mexico and favoring an investigation in the premises, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against alleged religious persecutions in Mexico and favoring the recall of the American Ambassador to that country, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petitions of Joseph J. Green and Paul Young and sundry other citizens of Baltimore and vicinity, in the State of Maryland, praying for an amendment to pending old-age-pension legislation permitting employers to continue present annuity plans which are more favorable than those proposed, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of members of the Seafood Dealers' Association of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by members of the Holy Name Society of St. Cecelia's Church, Walbrook, Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called "Hastings birth-control bill" or any other similar legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONSTRUCTION OF SCHOOLS IN BOROUGH OF QUEENS, N. Y.

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution of the Parent-Teacher Association of Public School No. 140, Jamaica, N. Y., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is much unemployment in the borough of Queens, city of New York;

Whereas this unemployment can be relieved considerably by the immediate appropriation of P. W. A. funds for erecting and equipping much needed public schools in this borough;

Whereas we have eight senior high schools with a combined seating capacity of 27,003 and an enrollment, as of January 1935, of 43,676 pupils;

Whereas we have two vocational high schools with a combined seating capacity of 2,996 and an enrollment, as of March 1, 1935, of 2,506 part-time pupils and 2,134 full-time pupils: Be it

Resolved, That the Parent-Teacher Association of Public School 140, with an enrollment of 130 members, urge the immediate allocation of P. W. A. funds to New York City for the building of public elementary and high schools in the borough of Queens.

EXTENSION OF THE N. I. R. A.

Mr. WAGNER presented resolutions adopted by code authorities in New York City, N. Y., which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK STATE CODE AUTHORITY,
FOR THE RETAIL TOBACCO TRADE,
New York, N. Y., April 8, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: At a regular meeting of the Independent Retail Tobacconists' Association, held at the Hotel Edison on April 2, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the National Industrial Recovery Act, by its elimination of predatory price cutting and unfair competition, has proved of inestimable benefit to the retailers of tobacco products; and

"Whereas were it not for the existence of this act many of the small retailers of tobacco products of the Nation could not have continued in their business: Be it

"Resolved, That the members of the I. R. T. A., consisting of 500 small tobacco retailers, are in favor of the continuance of this measure and plead for its extension."

Yours very truly,

ERIC CALAMIA.

CODE AUTHORITY,
INFANTS' AND CHILDREN'S WEAR INDUSTRY,
New York City.

The following resolution was duly authorized at a meeting of the Code Authority for the Infants' and Children's Wear Industry, held at its offices, 225 West Thirty-fourth Street, New York City, on Tuesday, April 9, 1935, at 8 p. m. o'clock:

"Whereas members of the infants' and children's wear industry were given an opportunity by a poll to give expression to their sentiments and desires with respect to the continuance of the N. R. A.; and

"Whereas the result of this poll overwhelmingly indicates that it is the wish and desire of the infants' and children's wear industry that N. R. A. be continued, with the minimum wages, maximum hours, abolition of child-labor provisions, and the fair-trade-practice provisions; and

"Whereas it is the desire of the Infants' and Children's Wear Code Authority, as representatives of the infants' and children's wear industry, to give public expression thereof: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the infants' and children's wear industry, having been under code jurisdiction for a period of 1 year, it is the consensus of opinion of this industry that sufficient value has been demonstrated to insure to it an opportunity by self-government of overcoming unfair competitive practices and destructive trade abuses, but that much more needs to be done to overcome shortcomings of code enforcement and compliance by the recalcitrant minority; be it further

"Resolved, That this industry places itself on record as approving the recommendation of the President of the United States that the National Industrial Recovery Act be extended for an additional period of 2 years, and it is its further conviction that to abandon the N. R. A. at this time and not to create legislation which will not only regulate wages, hours, and eliminate child labor but also establish fair trade practices would cause irreparable monetary injury to this industry; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to all Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States."

I, Max H. Zuckerman, executive secretary of the Infants' and Children's Wear Code Authority, do hereby certify that the above is a true copy of a resolution duly authorized at a meeting of the Infants' and Children's Wear Code Authority, held April 9, 1935.

MAX H. ZUCKERMAN.

Dated, New York, April 11, 1935.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. KING also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1572) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 495) thereon.

Mr. ASHURST (for Mr. MCCARRAN), from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2416) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved

July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 498) thereon.

Mr. HATCH (for Mr. DIETERICH), from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2453) to amend section 80 of chapter 9 of an act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, reported it without amendment.

He also (for Mr. DIETERICH), from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2471) to amend section 80 of chapter 9 of an act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No 500) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2467) for the retirement of William J. Stannard, leader of the United States Army Band, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 496) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2292) for the relief of Emanuel Wallin, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 497) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 2276) to authorize participation by the United States in the Interparliamentary Union, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 499) thereon.

FUNDS OF FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 115) relative to the distribution of funds placed under the administration of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration (submitted by Mr. COUZENS on the 8th instant), reported it with an amendment to the preamble.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 2588) directing the issuance of patents to certain persons for homestead entries and for stock-raising homestead entries; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 2589) to authorize the presentation of a Congressional Medal of Honor to Lewis Hazard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2590) for the relief of James E. McDonald; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 2591) for the relief of Lyman C. Drake; and

A bill (S. 2592) to amend the act approved February 20, 1931 (Public, No. 703, 71st Cong.), entitled "An act to provide for special assessments for the paving of roadways and the laying of curbs and gutters"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. STEIWER:

A bill (S. 2593) to amend section 6 of title I of the act entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government", approved March 20, 1933, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mrs. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 2594) for the relief of Felix D. Houck; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2595) granting a pension to Minnie Clark; and

A bill (S. 2596) granting a pension to Edward H. Wolff; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 2597) for the relief of Irene de Bruyn Robbins; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 2598) to extend the benefits of the United States Public Health Service to fishermen, trapmen, net tenders, and other persons subject to the laws relating to American seamen; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 2599) for the relief of Elijah W. Leonard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2600) for the relief of John T. Millan; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 2601) granting a pension to John O. Pelto; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 2602) to provide equipment for Hardin Post, No. 8, American Legion of Montana, to be used in conducting military funerals at Custer Battlefield National Cemetery, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO ANTILYNCHING BILL

Mr. ROBINSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 24) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. METCALF submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1807) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE TAYLOR GRAZING ACT

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2539) to amend sections 1, 8, and 15 of, and to add section 17 to, the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), commonly known as the "Taylor Grazing Act", which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION BILL

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON AIR COMMERCE AND CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. BYRD, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. DICKINSON, jointly, submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 118), which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting on page 30, after the third line of paragraph 1, the following:

"Committee on Air Commerce and Civil Aviation, to consist of 12 Senators."

MYTHICAL MILLIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BARKLEY

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I tender a copy of a speech made by the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] over the radio, April 14, 1935, describing some of the financial proposals which now are presumed to be offered as relief for the present evil called poverty, and particularly as they relate to the pending financial measures before the Senate committees. I ask the privilege of having the address incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I shall discuss with you this evening some of the more fantastic remedies which are being proposed for the sudden solution of our present difficulties, and for their prevention for all time to come.

In looking into the merits of these so-called "remedies", it is well to remember that this is an old world in which we live; that from the beginning of human history men have thought, prayed, written, and fought over the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that from the beginning men have sought the means for the enlargement of life, of its opportunities, and its gratifications; that in all ages the questions of poverty and wealth, of good and evil, of right and wrong, of justice and injustice have engaged the thoughts of men in search of a solution; and that so far no sudden flash of genius has brought forth full-grown the one and only brand, blown in the bottle, which can assure us against the weaknesses of the flesh or the caprices of fortune.

Death itself is the only process by which all distinctions may be leveled, and we postpone that remedy as long as possible.

In the time at my disposal I can discuss only two of the nostrums which are now being advertised as a sort of twin assortment of Kickapoo Indian Salve, guaranteed to cure everything from which the body, the spirit, the mind, or the imagination can suffer.

I am sure the world would welcome some genuine potion which could translate us to a perpetual dreamland, where we might find refuge from all the sordid bedevilments which beset our feet on this earthly pathway which we are consigned to travel.

But there is no such potion and has never been.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

First, let us examine the so-called "Townsend old-age-pension plan", said to have been conceived by Dr. F. E. Townsend, of somewhere in California.

I have no doubt that Dr. Townsend is a gentleman of kindly disposition and generous and gentle inclinations; and I assume that when he discovered or invented his pension proposal he thought he had unearthed the longed-for panacea for which the world had waited through all the centuries.

So thoroughly convinced was he of this that Members of Congress are receiving post cards on which in red letters appears a threat of defeat to all who do not rush to slake their thirst at the Townsend mirage of imaginary waters.

What is this Dr. Townsend's new discovery? The good doctor in his testimony before the committees of Congress boasted that he is not an economist. With this assertion we may all agree with safety.

The Townsend plan proposes that out of the Treasury of the United States a pension of $200 per month shall be paid to every resident of the United States who is 60 years of age and not in jail, provided each of them agrees to spend the entire sum during the month in which it is received. The pensioner is also required to cease all forms of work and loaf the balance of his or her life, except as they may be kept busy trying to find ways to spend the pension before the end of the month.

As proposed by Dr. Townsend, this $200 monthly pension is to take no account of need or circumstances. Henry Ford and John D. Rockefeller are to take their places in the line with those who have nothing, and draw down $200 per month, if they will just quit work.

Dives and Lazarus, Croesus, and the beggar at the well will find a common level. Dives and Croesus are required to spend Uncle Sam's $200 per month but not their own.

MYTHICAL MILLIONS

There are today approximately 11,000,000 people in the United States who are 60 years of age or older. If 10,000,000 of them draw this pension, it would cost $24,000,000,000, or twenty-four thousand million dollars per annum.

This would be more than one-half of the total income of all the people of the United States for 1934, and one-third of the total income of all the people for the peak year of 1929.

Ten million people constitute about 7 percent of our population. So that 7 percent of our people would draw out of the National Treasury more than the total income of the other 93 percent of the people upon the basis of our national income for 1934, in order to support this fabulous pension.

There are about 28,000,000 families in the United States today. The average income of these families is little more than $1,000 per annum. But in order to pay a pension of $24,000,000,000 per year to 7 percent of the people, these 28,000,000 families would be taxed more than $850 each per annum.

But in his testimony before the committees of Congress, Dr. Townsend stated that he was not interested in the cost.

According to the tables of mortality recognized in this country the average expectancy of life at the age of 60 years is 15 years. According to this expectancy it would take $360,000,000,000 to pay the pensions of those now 60 years old, taking no account of those who will reach 60 in the future.

It is difficult for the average mind to grasp the immensity of such figures. This is more than the total wealth of the United States at present by more than $100,000,000,000.

This plan compels all those who receive the pension to spend it during the month in which it is received. If they do not spend it all they do not get the pension for the following month and are taken from the rolls until they again qualify.

They are not required to spend it for things they need, or things that would be beneficial or of value. They may not need anything. But they must spend it any way. They must "blow it in" if they cannot get rid of it in any other way. They are not to be allowed to save any of it. They may spend it for "services" as well as "things."

They might hire their children, or relatives, or friends, or neighbors to do some nominal "service" in order to consume the whole $200 in each month. In order that the Government would know at the end of the month whether all the money had been expended and none of it buried, each pensioner would have to be constantly accompanied by a Government inspector, or all the neighbors would have to join the ancient and amalgamated order of snoopers.

Then all those under 60, who would be paying the cost, would be reporting to Uncle Sam on all those over 60, and those over 60 would be reporting on one another.

This process would undoubtedly absorb much of the present unemployment. But it would not help to produce the goods the pensioners would be required to buy nor the $24,000,000,000 with which each year they would be required to buy it.

This scheme requires the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit in some bank in the United States $200 each month to the credit of each pensioner.

The average annual income of the Government in normal times is about $3,000,000,000 from all sources. Even in abnormal times it is not over $4,000,000,000.

Yet this absurd proposal involves an expenditure equal to eight times the normal annual revenues of the United States Government.

PROPOSES PANACEA

But the Townsend panacea proposes to raise this vast annual outlay by levying a 2-percent sales or transactions tax on every transaction in the United States by which a dollar changes hands during the year.

Let us see what this will do to the American people. It is claimed that the dollars in circulation in the United States in 1934 turned over or revolved 34 times during the year, that in 1929 each dollar turned over 132 times, and that under the Townsend plan each dollar would turn over 528 times. Just why it would be 528 instead of 527 or 529 is not explained. But the advocates of this plan, at least those who are bold enough to claim that they understand it, assert that if 10,000,000 elderly people were required to spend $24,000,000,000 each year for something, then the demand for goods of one kind and another would be so great that each dollar would revolve exactly 528 times in each year.

In other words, each dollar would be so busy turning over each day of the year that every pocket in America would look like a bed of silvery ants in the hot seasons of the summer.

In order for this to occur four times as much business would have to be transacted each year as was ever transacted in the busiest year we have ever experienced in the whole history of the Nation.

If a 2-percent sales tax is collected on every dollar expended for any purpose in each year, then every dollar that turns over 34 times would involve a tax of 68 cents.

The dollar that revolved 132 times would be taxed $2.64; and if the dreams of the Townsend proposal should be realized, then for every dollar in circulation there would be a tax of $10.56 per annum.

EXORBITANT TAXATION

In other words, every farmer, every laborer, every professional man or woman, every teacher, in short, every consumer, in addition to all the taxes now being paid into National, State, and local treasuries, would be taxed an average of five or six times 2 percent on every article of luxury or necessity used during the year in any way that involved the spending of money.

If this scheme had no other defect, it would suffer from the fatal infirmity of not being able to work according to its plans and specifications. The dollar would not perform the miracles which are attributed to it under this paradise regained.

It has not done so in any country in which it has been tried.

In 1933 France, with a population of 42,000,000 people, collected $301,000,000 from a 2-percent transactions tax.

Germany, with a population of 69,000,000 people, collected $249,000,000 through a 2-percent transactions or sales tax.

In other words, on a 2-percent sales or transactions tax France collected $7 per capita and Germany collected $3 per capita in 1933.

There are in the United States approximately 130,000,000 people. If such a tax collection in this country ran as high as in France, it would raise only about $900,000,000, which is less than one twenty-fourth of the amount required to pay the annual pension.

If we collected twice as much as France in proportion to population, it would raise but $1,800,000,000 with which to pay $24,000,000,000.

In order to realize the required amount, we would have to collect 26 times as much per capita as France could collect on the same tax.

It is necessary only to state such a grotesque proposal to demonstrate its utter futility and impossibility.

In addition to all this, every person who produced anything for sale, or engaged in any business of selling anything, would be required to pay to the Government a license and secure a permit, the amount of the license to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

No farmer could sell a hog, a sheep, a chicken, a bushel of corn or wheat, a basket of potatoes, or a goose egg without obtaining a license so to do from Uncle Sam's Secretary of the Treasury.

No person engaged in the business of selling anything produced by another could engaged in that business without obtaining a permit under the Townsend dispensation.

We have been hearing much of regimentation during recent months. This would be a form of regimentation never conceived of by the most militant regimentor.

It is in behalf of such a fantastic and chimerical proposition that many well-meaning and honest people have been induced to join the organization set on foot by its original sponsor and to pay their modest sums as contributions to the cause.

The President and the Congress are now considering as a part of the economic-security bill a sound old-age pension plan.

While some of the States have enacted old-age pension laws, this is a new field of social legislation for the National Government. It is not a field which can be completely occupied at one step.

We must crawl and walk before we can run. We must build a solid foundation upon which we can expand in the years to come.

If we undertake at once to construct a fabric that will collapse of its own weight, we will retard indefinitely the progress we all hope to make toward a better social condition for all the people. However good or wise one may think he is, or others may think him to be, there is no greater enemy of mankind than he who holds before his fellows some fantastic or theoretical Utopia impossible of attainment anywhere on this earth.

DELUDING THE DESTITUTE

To delude the people is to betray them. No greater delusion has been fabricated out of the heart-rending extremities through which we have been passing than this Townsend prescription for the attainment of mythical millions.

I now come to the second of the visionary, political, intellectual, and economic hallucinations being vociferously and boisterously promulgated by the generous Don Quixote from Louisiana, Senator HUEY P. LONG.

He calls it the "share the wealth" decoction.

Whatever else depressions may do to the world, they offer periodical encouragement to those who would prey upon the misfortunes of the people by feeding to them unpalatable political and economic husks which have been passed from one generation of demagogues to another.

The pages of history are littered with the shattered hopes of countless millions whose dreams have turned to mockery before their eyes because seductive and alluring prospects, impossible of fulfillment, have enticed them into the quicksands of social, political, and economic vagaries which they trusted but could not understand.

I do not view lightly or with disdain the struggle, as old as the human race, to find a leveling process for the distinctions of wealth or power or social position. I do not scorn or despise the efforts which have been made through the ages to find some solvent for the elimination of the cruel differences which Nature has bequeathed to her children.

But there is no magic, and has never been, which can find a common denominator for the whole human race.

The creation and distribution of wealth have been subjects for study and suggestion by philosophers, moralists, and political economists in every age and clime and country.

Plato was not unmindful of it when he wrote of his Ideal Republic.

Aristophanes in one of his greatest comedies scoffed the effort to right all human wrongs by means of political reform.

The Master had to deal with it not only in His observation that "The poor we have with us always", but likewise when the rich young man came to Him with the question: "What shall I do to be saved?" to which Jesus replied, "Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor * * * and come follow me." And the story relates that the young man turned away sorrowfully, for he had great possessions.

In later days John Stuart Mill and Adam Smith devoted much of their lives to the study and solution of the problems of wealth. Numerous students and philosophers have in recent years overwhelmed us with divergent opinions upon this vexing problem.

In spite of all these labors of the mind and heart the question is yet unsolved. The wisest of men have found no means to bridge the yawning chasms of difference and division which have been set in the mental and physical make-up of man.

But Senator LONG tells us he has looked into the mystic crystal ball and found the vision of that universal system of liberty, equality, fraternity, which the French Revolution pronounced but never produced.

He calls it "share our wealth." But he has not told us by what method our "share" is to be "shared."

I have no disposition to indulge in personal abuse or vituperation in discussing this question. While I do not admire or approve the methods of Mr. LONG, while I abhor his unfairness and his apparent indifference to accurate statement when he is discussing others, and especially his grotesque references to and his malicious misrepresentations of the President of the United States, yet I harbor for him no personal animosity and can discuss his proposal without heat or personal rancor.

FUTILE HOPES

What is this great boon to humanity which the Senator from Louisiana has brought unbidden to our doors? What is this new astringent proposed by this new mystic healer for drawing together and holding the lose ends of all the financial and social wounds from which we suffer?

What is the nature of this unfailing support which our new chiropodist brings us for all the fallen arches of our economic system? What is this new rubbing process which our modern chiropractor holds out to soothe and strengthen the backbone of our social and moral structure?

He calls it "share our wealth." Whose wealth are we to share, and how are we to share it? The author of this plan has not taken us into his confidence as yet. He has not revealed to us the secret of its details, which are still locked within his own bosom. He tells us we are to "share" somebody's wealth, and that is sufficient.

It is not ours to ask him why.
It is but ours to do and die.

It is proposed by the author of this proposed plan, if it can be called a plan, to have the Government take from all those who have wealth all that they have above "three or four million dollars", in the form of a capital levy or capital tax, to be paid to the Government in cash or in kind, which means in cash or in the property itself which is taken.

It is proposed that with this surplus wealth or money or property so taken by the Government every family in America shall be given a home worth at least $5,000, in addition to an automobile and a radio. In this domestic set-up it should be remembered that by no means the least important item will be the radio; for through it the humblest citizen may enjoy the privilege of listening weekly (if not weakly) to the voice of the author of this great blessing which is to be his "share" of our wealth.

In his last speech on this subject, Senator LONG stated that this capital tax, to be paid in money or in property, would bring to the coffers of the Government $165,000,000,000 of wealth, $100,000,000,000 of which would be used to furnish homes worth $5,000 to all the people, and the remaining $65,000,000,000 would be used to build more and greater colleges and universities for the education of the people.

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY

I desire to emphasize the fact that the author of this plan has introduced no bill in Congress containing the merest suggestion as to how all this is to be done. He has not told us what shall be the standard by which such a program shall be brought about. He has not told us through what agency of the Government, or what personality, or what group, or under what rules or regulations we are to be assured that all of us will have such a home, such an automobile, or such a radio as that which he is holding in wait for us.

We are told that hereafter no person will be allowed to own more than three or four million dollars. But we have not yet been advised whether it is to be three million or four million or whether the scale will dangle somewhere midway between the three and the four million mark which at present constitutes the flexible maximum.

It is true that the Government has the power to levy taxes upon all the people for the support of the Government. It is true that the Government can levy those taxes in many forms. But there is a limitation upon the power of the Government to take property for public purposes without due process of law and without due compensation.

In his speech a few weeks ago undertaking to describe his "share the wealth" plan, Senator LONG gave the Ford Motor Co. and the Standard Oil Co. of the Rockefellers as examples of what this scheme would produce.

He assumed that the Ford Motor Co., owned by Henry and Edsel Ford chiefly, is worth $2,000,000,000, and that he would take from Henry or Edsel Ford all but three or four million dollars. In order to be generous, let us suggest that Henry Ford would be allowed to keep $4,000,000 of the present value of the Ford industry and that his son, Edsel, would keep four million for himself.

That would leave $1,992,000,000 which Uncle Sam would take, either in cash or in property. If the Fords were able to pay this governmental confiscation in cash, they would have to get possession of more than one-third of all the money now in circulation in order to pay the capital-levy tax into the Treasury. This would be manifestly impossible.

Not being able to pay the tax to the Treasury in money, the Treasury would presumably take over the ownership, possession, and operation of all the Ford Motor Co. plants and interests, except the two allocations of four million each to the two Fords. If the Government took over the Ford industry, then the Fords would become minority stockholders in an industry in which they would own but a small interest.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP?

What would the Government do with this property? How would it be divided among the people? If under the Constitution the Government should be required to give due compensation for "property taken for public use" by paying for it, where would the Government obtain so vast a sum? And if under the Constitution the Government should be required to pay adequate compensation for all the property it took in cases where the owner could not pay the tax in money, then where would the Government get the incredulous outlay involved in taking over all this property in order that we might thus "share our wealth"?

In 1929 it was estimated that the total wealth of the United States and all the people therein amounted to $360,000,000,000. The author of the "share the wealth" plan proposes to leave $100,000,000,000 worth of property in the hands of the present owners, and then divide the rest among us. But in 1934 the total wealth of the people of the United States was estimated to amount to only $247,000,000,000. Therefore if $100,000,000,000 should be left with present owners, there would only be about $147,000,000,000 to divide among the rest of us.

But these figures are purely imaginary. No one knows today what the wealth of this Nation is. No one knows how much any man or woman is worth today, when all indebtedness, public and private, is deducted from the estimated value of all property in the Nation.

This proposed plan is to allow every person who is worth $4,000,000 keep what he or she has.

How many people are there today in the United States who own more than $4,000,000 worth of property? And what was the aggregate value of all property above $4,000,000 owned by those who owned that much in this Nation?

BUDGETING WITH BUBBLES

There are no absolutely accurate figures available showing the number of persons who possess wealth in excess of $4,000,000.

But from the most reliable sources available it is estimated that in 1929 there were 1,700 people in the United States who possessed wealth in excess of $4,000,000. The total wealth of these persons for that year was estimated at $20,000,000,000. Their total aggregate wealth in excess of $4,000,000 each was estimated at $13,200,000,000.

In 1932 it was estimated that there were 880 people in the United States who possessed wealth in excess of $4,000,000. Their total aggregate wealth in excess of $4,000,000 each was estimated at $5,480,000,000.

Thus, it will be seen that if the Government, according to the "share-the-wealth" plan could confiscate all the property in this country in excess of $4,000,000 each for those who possess that amount and divide it among the rest of us, the amount so confiscated and divided would be only about $5,500,000,000, which is but little more than the $4,800,000,000 recently appropriated by Congress for work relief and for relief during the coming year.

The author of the "share-the-wealth" plan proposes to allow no person to receive an income of more than $1,000,000 per annum in the United States, and it is suggested that this limitation will be a great boon to those of us who are to "share the wealth" of the Nation under this program.

I am not contending that any man ought to receive more than $1,000,000 per annum in this country, whatever his occupation or station may be. And it is difficult to see how any man who is to be allowed to keep only $4,000,000 of what he has can make more than $1,000,000 or even $1,000,000 as income in 1 year.

But let us suppose that this limitation on income is imposed. What will be the result, and how much wealth could the average man in America "share" as a result of the operation?

The largest number of persons who ever earned more than $1,000,000 per annum was in 1929. During that year, according to the reports of the Treasury Department, there were 513 persons whose income exceeded $1,000,000.

In 1930 there were 150, in 1931 there were 77, and in 1932 there were 20, and in 1933 there were 46.

Now I am wondering, and I suppose you are wondering, what effect it would have on the rest of us in this country—the rest of the 130,000,000 of our people—to have 20 people, or 46 people, or 150 people, or even 513 people, divide among the rest the excess of their income above $1,000,000 per annum? How many homes could we pass around among the people at that rate? How many automobiles could we buy or how many radios could grace our living rooms? How could any honest or sincere man conclude that out of this surplus a sum sufficiently large would be garnered to guarantee to every man in the Nation an annual income of net less than $2,500?

WHIMSICAL PIPE DREAMS

It has been asserted over and over again by the author of this whimsical pipe dream that before his election, and since his election, President Roosevelt committed himself to this silly and impossible remedy for our economic ills.

President Roosevelt believes, as all sensible men must believe, that there has been, and is, too great a concentration of wealth in this Nation for the wholesome development of our highest ideals of justice and equity. I believe that, more than any other man who has ever occupied the high station which he now holds, he has sought to bring about conditions in this Nation under which every man and every woman may enjoy more of the fruits of their toil, more of the fruits of Nature's bounty, more of leisure for mental and bodily relaxation, and more of the spiritual raptures which flow from a feeling of independence and self-respect.

But the President believes, as all sincere and honest servants of the people must believe, that the attainment of such an ideal is not an overnight operation but it must come in an orderly fashion under a Constitution which we all respect and under whose flexible warrants we seek the orderly and progressive solution of the great problems of our national life.

If anybody believes that the Government of the United States could take possession of practically all the property in the United States for the purpose of division or for the purpose of operation, that person is grossly mistaken as to the functions or powers of the Government.

While we all admit that not only in our Nation, but throughout the world and throughout all history, wealth has gravitated into the possession of vastly too small a proportion of the people, the remedy does not lie in taking by wholesale and by force the possessions of those who have and dividing them among those who have not. If such a division could be effected every Monday morning, in all probability by the following Saturday night the same people would have it who have it tonight.

To hold out such a hope to distressed and deluded people is to hold before them the sham instead of the substance. The fruit of such misguidance is bitter disillusionment and blasted hopes.

The first political speech I ever heard, as a boy in knee trousers, was in 1897. The speaker told us how a small portion of the people owned nearly all the wealth of the country and assured us if he could be elected to public office we who had nothing would obtain our "share" of the Nation's wealth. The people elected him to the office he sought. As an immature schoolboy, the speaker impressed me. But my "share" in the Nation's holdings has not materially increased from that day to this. Neither will my "share" nor your "share" increase under the program of futility and impossibility contained in this new vision of a new cornucopia presented by this new Jupiter to his new goat or goats Amalthaea.

It has been said that the devil can quote Scripture for his own purpose. Inasmuch as he has been engaged in this practice recently, may I, without assuming any of the attributes of his satanic majesty, quote the twelfth verse of the Forty-fourth Psalm:

"Thou sellest thy people for naught, and dost not increase thy wealth by their price."

THOMAS JEFFERSON—ADDRESS BY SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD an address on Thomas Jefferson, delivered on April 13, 1935, by the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] before the Jeffersonian Club of Waterbury, Conn.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THOMAS JEFFERSON, THE FOUNDER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

The selection by Thomas Jefferson of the legend for his gravestone, in which he mentioned his authorship of the Declaration of Independence, the Statute of Virginia for Religious Freedom, and the founding by him of the University of Virginia, has been the subject of continuous historical comment and discussion. The omission therefrom of his occupancy of the Presidency of the United States is significant, and it has been critically commented upon by many historical writers. To my mind this omission was due to the recognition by Jefferson of the fact that the occupancy of high office is not in itself of particular importance. The opportunity to create institutions or to enunciate political ideals is of inestimably greater importance. Through his authorship of these two documents Jefferson builded our democratic structure; by the founding of the University of Virginia, he made possible the successful functioning of that structure.

We are prone to misjudge the spirit of the time in which Jefferson lived. We assume that democracy was accepted spontaneously and well-nigh unanimously by the colonial people. In fact the contrary was true. The background of centuries of oligarchic rule had so firmly ingrained in the minds of the people the belief in its necessity that democracy was viewed with suspicion and distrust. The leaders of that day did not believe that the people were capable of ruling themselves. Almost alone stood Jefferson in this belief. He had confidence in the people. He knew that while they might make mistakes, and that while an oligarchy might function more effectively during short periods of time, nevertheless, the people were more capable of guaranteeing to themselves fair and just decisions on their problems than could be secured by the more efficient, but less responsible oligarchic government.

Jefferson, however, was not deceived as to the dangers with which a democracy would be confronted. He recognized that to continue its successful existence a democracy required leadership. He knew that that leadership must possess three outstanding qualifications. First, it must be capable. The problems of government are intricate—they are not easy of solution. Incompetency has done more to retard democratic progress than any other single factor. Second, it must be honest. Under democracy there is entrusted by the people to those whom they have chosen, the most sacred of human treasures; the confidence of the people in the institutions they have created. The betrayal of the people by those who have assumed this trust is the most dastardly of all crimes. Third, that leadership must be understanding. It must have a heart. It must by its experience know of the suffering and the hardships and privations necessary that democratic government might exist. Jefferson believed the best safeguard for a democracy to be a capable, honest, understanding leadership springing from the common people.

In order that American democracy might have this leadership, the University of Virginia was founded. Jefferson created the system of State-supported universities. He knew that through them could best be secured that understanding of the intricacies of governmental problems that was required. He knew that while training does not of itself insure honesty, that on the other hand, incompetency does breed dishonesty. He wanted leadership not merely from the rich and well born, because he doubted the ability of such leadership to fully comprehend the needs of a great people. To my mind the creation of the American system of public universities was Jefferson's outstanding accomplishment.

Why was Jefferson so determined in his effort to protect and preserve the governmental institution he helped to create? Because he knew of the age-old effort of mankind to raise itself to a standard by which it could be reasonably sure of peace, contentment, and happiness. He knew that every page of history was besmirched and defiled by the story of the effort upon the part of the few to deprive the great mass of the people of this assurance. He knew that from earliest time tribal chiefs, kings, emperors, and feudal lords crushed, destroyed, ruined, and killed that this aspiration upon the part of the people might not be consummated. The greed and lust of the few for wealth and power had delayed the attainment of this ambition throughout the centuries. Jefferson knew that oligarchies in any form were fundamentally opposed to human rights and human liberties, so he dedicated his life to the task of creating a new government under which oligarchy could not long exist.

We meet here tonight to commemorate the birthday of this man. We take a peculiar pride in the fact that as part of his activities he founded the political party to the maintenance and success of which we have pledged the fealty of our own political interest. But it will avail us nothing if we are satisfied to bask in the sunlight of his accomplishments. We could do no greater honor to the memory of Thomas Jefferson than to study his teachings that we might apply their principles to present-day problems.

I read the other day a critical comment in one of the papers indicating that the efforts of the present national administration would not be to the liking of Thomas Jefferson. It sarcastically inferred that we have strayed far from his teachings, and that, should he return, he would be most ardent in his opposition. Personally, I have no such misgivings. The life of Jefferson, his writing and his utterances show that his most striking attributes were a hatred of oligarchy, a distrust of privilege, and violent opposition to corruption. I am convinced that Jefferson would realize today that in the course of a century and a quarter, despite the form of democratic government which he created, the industrial and financial interests of this country had built up an oligarchy just as powerful, just as lustful, just as corrupt, and just as inconsiderate of the rights of the people as any Jefferson gave his life work to destroy.

What king, emperor, or feudal baron ever possessed more power over the destinies of a people than did the Morgans and Mellons, or their kind, during the antedepression period? What monarch ever so thoroughly dominated governmental action than did those financial barons during the last decade? What ambitious chief ever perpetrated a more Judas-like betrayal of his tribe than did the American captains of finance, who in the 1920's succeeded in exchanging financial history's most worthless securities for the American people's hard-earned dollars? What autocrat ever evidenced a more callous disregard for the welfare of his helpless and starving slaves than did the leaders of the last administration exhibit toward the millions of unemployed Americans? What more blatant dishonesty has history ever known than was rampant during the saturnalia of corruption from Harding to Hoover? Do you think that Thomas Jefferson would have approved of this regime? Can you conceive of his opposing the efforts of any sincere leader who was trying to prevent its repetition?

The American people have suffered in these last few years; millions have been turned from their jobs into the paths of unemployment; millions have been robbed of their life savings, millions have had their self-respect well-nigh destroyed by being compelled to accept Government aid.

America's financial, industrial, and economic life reached its lowest point on the morning of March 4, 1933. The efforts of the last 2 years, however, bring new hope. The dark clouds of depression have parted, and between them we can see the bright sunlight of a returning prosperity, but as is always the case after the clearing of the storm, those who were most frightened, those who were most helpless, and those who were most abject and lacking in qualities of leadership are now bursting forth bravely in the sunlight, criticizing and carping and attempting to advise as to what should be done.

We should be increasingly conscious of the fact that fundamentally this next 12 months will be the most vital part of the recovery period. We are being constantly reminded that the emergency has passed, and we are being bombarded with the siren call to return to the "good old days." Unless all the suffering and hardship of the last 5 years is to be in vain, we must disregard that call and recognize that the mandate of the electorate in the referendum of 1932 was not merely for recovery, but for a permanent guarantee that never again shall the American people know anguish, want, and suffering.

Outstanding in the criticism is the charge that those reforms of a permanent nature that have been effected are radical. What a favorite has been this term? It has been used by every individual, group, or class which at any time opposed the march of progress. The term radical reform was the argument against the adoption of the Australian ballot. The direct election of the United States Senators was characterized by this opprobrium.

We were told that the use of the right to recall corrupt officials would wreck our system of government because the purpose was radical. Or, if we would go back further into history, we might be reminded that the crime of which Christ was convicted and for which he was crucified was in its final analysis the teaching of a then radical doctrine. Can it be expected that civilization, which has perfected new devices, new methods, and new structures for the operation of every other kind of business, is going to be satisfied with the maintenance of a status quo condition, so far as its machinery of government is concerned? Throughout the weary centuries of the past and into the unknown centuries of the world's great hereafter, divine destiny has set the foot of man toward an ever-receding horizon of perfection. Urged on by this great and noble destiny and inspired by their own history, the American people have taken high resolve to turn both the problems of the present and the possibilities of the future into great opportunities, and from this resolve they are not likely to be turned aside by the silly and outworn cry of radicalism.

The second method of attack is to charge that the Government's recovery measures destroy the American citizen's opportunity for individual advancement. In the first place, American individualism is a snare and delusion. It developed in the last few years to mean not an equality of opportunity, but an unlicensed and unbridled privilege upon the part of the few to cheat and destroy at the expense of the great mass of the people. Who can say that in a nation where 4 percent of the population had 85 percent of the wealth that the term "individualism" or the term "equality of opportunity" had any real meaning?

Some opponents complain that the policies of the present national administration are endangering our economic system. They forget that this economic system had practically ceased to function before the end of the Hoover administration. The purpose of an economic system is to serve human needs. To the extent that it can perform this service it is good or bad. We would be inconsistent with the teachings of Jefferson and not in agreement with Jackson or Lincoln should we maintain that an economic order should not be changed, if the interests of the people so require. Personally, I believe that the policies of the present administration carried to their logical conclusion will restore this economic system to usefulness. I am firmly convinced, however, that unless fundamental and far-reaching changes are made, that within a few years we will experience a depression so devastating that the system the President today is attempting to preserve cannot possibly avoid destruction.

Call it what you may, America's economic system must be placed upon a basis under which an opportunity of employment is given to all who desire employment. The right to have gainful and productive employment is inseparable from the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, which is the foundation of our Nation. There can be neither stability of government, of economic order, or security of lives and property when millions of people live in want and idleness because of forced unemployment.

While employment of all of our people is the first and most vital necessity, it is of equal importance that they be protected as consumers because the capacity of the people to buy will be the eventual gages of production and employment, and no economic system can last capable of enormous production that creates bothersome surpluses that because of low incomes or high prices the people are unable to buy and consume.

Almost as important as employment and purchasing power is the control of the medium of exchange and credit that the people use for the purchase of commodities and the transaction of business. This control cannot safely remain in the hands of a small and selfish group who think only of their own personal fortune.

Thoughtful individuals in this country must recognize that in a majority of the nations of Europe fundamental political and economic changes have been effected. Of the 583,000,000 people in Europe, 447,000,000 live under absolute or partial dictatorship. The people of these nations have faced their problems and have sacrificed their liberties in order to relieve themselves of the economic suffering they have undergone. We, in America, after 5 years of a horrible depression, cannot blind our eyes to the possibility of a similar fate overtaking us.

Throughout the ages mankind has sought to reach two goals. The first of these is political liberty. The second is economic security. From earliest time man has sought the right of freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and freedom of action. We in this country were particularly fortunate to have acquired those rights at the time of the formation of our Government. Political liberty was acquired and has been maintained for us through the bloodshed and death of thousands of our patriots. For over 300 years men and women have sacrificed themselves in order that this institution of free government under which we live might be established and maintained. It is the most precious thing in our national life. It cannot be abandoned. It must not be impaired.

Unfortunately, however, we have always had many people who had the false belief that political liberty was an end in itself. With this conclusion I cannot agree. Without detracting one whit from its importance; without relinquishing to the slightest degree the respect in which it must be held, I must, nevertheless, conclude that the importance of political liberty lies in the opportunity it gives to its possessors to acquire that second goal of mankind, economic security. I do not feel that the right to vote and the right to participate in government, the right to speak, or any other of the political liberties which I cherish, are of particular importance to me if in their enjoyment I and my family are compelled to starve. The security of a home, the security of employment, the security for the future are the all-important things to be gained through the medium of political liberty.

In man's effort to acquire economic security he has met with the opposition of two forces: First, the force of nature, which has placed in his way every possible obstacle and impediment. The specter of famine and starvation has always haunted the human race. Man's problem has always been that of production. he has been faced with the almost insurmountable task of producing enough to supply food for the hungry mouths, clothes for the bodies, and shelter for the families of the teeming millions of the world. Man has conquered this opposition. The technological advancement of the last few years has enabled him to have reasonable assurance that in the future he will be faced with ever-increasing surpluses of the world's goods. From this point on the problem becomes one of distribution of those goods.

Man's second opposition in his effort to acquire economic security comes from a human source. The forces of selfishness, avarice, and greed have always opposed man's desire to reach this goal. That small percentage of the world's population which believes that it is entitled to the privilege of controlling the destinies of its fellowman has always obstructed every effort upon the part of mankind to advance and to progress. Peoples have been enslaved, governments have been prostituted, public officials have been corrupted, natural resources have been exploited, money and credit have been converted from a medium of exchange into a medium of control, all to the end that special privilege might prevail. The irony of the present situation is that today, having conquered the opposition of nature, having progressed to a point where he can produce all of those things necessary for maintenance, comfort, and happiness, man finds the instrumentality of distribution still under dominance and control of this privileged class. In its effort to rob mankind of the fruits of its victory, the privileged class is taking advantage of the very surpluses which mankind is today able to produce, to prevent the reaching of the goal of economic security.

Finding ourselves in this situation, the all-important problem confronting the American people is whether or not they will acquire economic security under the medium of our present political system or whether they will turn like the peoples of Europe to the path of dictatorship. The insatiable desire of our people for economic security will not be denied. The people will not permit themselves to be robbed of this victory. The danger ahead lies in the possibility that in their desire to insure that security, they will be lead to abandon the political liberties which they have so dearly acquired.

In this period of crisis the Democratic Party has assumed responsibility of government. The accession to power by a political party involves not merely the opportunity of acquiring political offices but also the duty of effectively facing the problems confronting those offices. The Democratic Party must give to the Nation an administration that is efficient, honest, and understanding. We must choose carefully our leaders. We must require of them strict adherence to this principle. We must appreciate that mere recovery of prosperity will not suffice. We enter into the dawn of a new era. The glorious opportunity to extend to the American people the hope that the future holds in store for them a reasonable degree of economic security is ours. Whether it shall be called a "new deal" or "new freedom", or by any other phrase, the time has arrived when the Government must assume the responsibility for the protection of the people in their right to comfort, security, and prosperity. The Democratic Party is today having its chance. It must not fail. It must bring to the people of America the sweet assurance of another springtime of opportunity.

THE SILVER PURCHASE ACT—LETTER OF SENATOR M'CARRAN

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a copy of a letter dated April 16, 1935, written by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], containing a very interesting discussion of the Silver Purchase Act.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., April 16, 1935.

Hon. HENRY MORGENTHAU, Jr.,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SECRETARY: I have your letter of April 11 in reply to that of mine of April 4.

May I distinguish the expressed purpose of the Silver Purchase Act from its acknowledgedly true purpose?

The expressed purpose of the silver program is to improve the monetary system of the country and, more specifically, to increase the proportion of silver in the metallic reserves back of our paper currency. I agree that this is the purpose explicitly stated in the President's message and formally declared in the language of the Silver Purchase Act. But behind this language is the true purpose that the proponents of silver had in mind. That purpose was to raise the price of silver to an objective of $1.29 per ounce, and by so doing aid agricultural and certain industrial interests by enabling them to compete on an equitable basis with the silver-using nations whose menace in trade became noticeable coincident to the sharp decline in the price of silver between 1926 and 1933.

I think that we should keep clearly in mind that the monetary interests in this country, represented by the banks and the bankers, by the congressional Committees on Banking and Currency, and even by your own Department, cannot claim the sponsorship of any legislation beneficial in the remotest degree to silver.

On the contrary, is it not well established in the press of the Nation that all monetary interests thus represented were openly hostile to silver legislation, and am I not correct in recalling your own objections appearing in the public press?

Consequently, may I disagree with you in your statement as to the true purpose of the Silver Purchase Act, as distinguished from its formal expressed purpose, and may I recall to your mind that no monetary agency of the Government and that no bank or bankers, I repeat, supported the bill which was designed by silver protagonists as an agricultural measure in accordance with its true purpose to raise the commodity price level.

In carrying out the provisions of this legislation is it not likewise true that though the price of silver has been raised in accordance with the intent of the act, there still remains a wide discrepancy between the amount of silver bullion held in our reserves and the amount which should be held for the formal purposes of the act to have been executed? Certainly silver bullion does not represent substantially any nearer one-fourth of our monetary stocks than silver bullion represented on the day the Silver Purchase Act became law.

In the execution of this legislation you most properly refer to our policy with respect to both gold and silver. On the treatment of these two monetary metals I am deeply concerned. There is no denying that vast differences appeared respecting our treatment of silver and our treatment of gold. Gold was the refuge of the hoarder; gold was the object of great speculation; gold was the medium of the flight of capital from this country in the years 1931, 1932, and early 1933. Trading in gold was subjected to no tax. The statutory price was paid for gold domiciled within our borders.

American citizens can today deal in gold in foreign markets and can do so solely in anticipation of profiting by governmental action without restriction of any nature and certainly without prohibitive taxation. Nor are those who purchase gold abroad in anticipation of higher prices penalized; nor have American citizens who have purchased gold abroad, in anticipation of profits due to governmental action, been penalized; nor are there any restrictions made with respect to residence of citizens 3 months abroad in order to trade freely in gold.

Not so with silver. On silver we have a policy reflecting perhaps the prejudice concerning it which exists in the minds of governmental agencies, banks and bankers, and even monetary committees of Congress. In the name of the national interest or the public interest, silver was made the subject of discriminatory legislation. The American citizen is penalized and denied an equal opportunity to profit in silver as distinguished by his opportunity to profit in gold.

The silver act specifically invites the American citizen to take residence abroad for 3 months to buy silver interests abroad, to buy from and sell to foreigners, if he would seek profits in silver due to governmental action. I repeat, with respect to gold no such restrictions exist, and I cannot reconcile the two policies. Because the President has permissive power to further increase the price of gold, the American citizen could deal in that commodity as a resident of America, and deal solely in anticipation of profiting by governmental action, without restriction of any nature and without prohibitive taxation. Distinguish this fact from the fact respecting silver. The President has the permissive power to further increase the price of silver. The American citizen resident in this country cannot deal in that commodity in foreign markets solely in anticipation of profiting by possible governmental action, without prohibitive taxation. In the case of the one, we simply set out to penalize American citizenship and American residence.

My interest is not in behalf of the hoarder or speculator. The way to control these activities is by exchange regulation. My interest is in the fact that we have given preferential treatment to gold as a monetary metal and we have discriminated against silver.

I firmly believe we should have a market established in America. We did have a silver market. We destroyed this market by law. We need that market today to carry out our silver policies. As a practical proposition our legislation dominates the silver policies of the world, and then our restrictive legislation destroys our own silver market in which the execution of these policies is carried to its fulfillment.

Why penalize the American market in favor of the London market? Why penalize the American trader who might profit by governmental action, and put a bounty on the foreign trader who can profit by the same action? Why assume in a world market that it is only the actions of the Government of the United States that can raise the price of silver, when at any time the actions of foreign nations can likewise raise the price of silver? And why be so solicitous about curbing the profit of the American national while all over the world foreigners can reap the benefits of any actions taken by any governments of the world, including our own?

Finally, and to repeat, why does this legislation run with respect to silver and not to gold?

You suggest with respect to section 6 of the Silver Purchase Act that its repeal, together with the repeal of section 3 of the Gold Reserve Act and section 2 of the Emergency Banking Act, "might paralyze action which the Government may have to take to protect our monetary system from possible crises in the international exchange markets and from speculative dealings in the monetary metals and other foreign exchange."

To my mind neither the acts of Congress nor regulations made in pursuance thereof can control international markets only with respect to American participation therein, and any attempt on our part to police world markets is certain to result in legislation discriminatory in nature with the penalties on our nationals.

In this connection may I ask you frankly what control you now have over gold dealings abroad by private American citizens or private American interests in the light of your statement that such control as is given under the Silver Purchase Act is claimed necessary for this very regulation?

In reply to that part of your letter relating to section 7, I have not overlooked the fact that the order nationalizing silver operated only on silver situated in this country on the date of its promulgation, August 9, 1934; nor can I overlook the fact that the President is empowered to issue a similar proclamation at any time he sees fit.

With respect to the silver tax covered by section 8, I realize that the statute makes adequate provision for abatement or refund of the tax on profits arising from transfers both for industrial purposes and also in hedging transactions in silver and foreign exchange. But the very fact that the tax is payable on silver profits arising from an increase in the price of silver due to the purchases which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make, to my mind as to yours, distinguishes classes within this country and penalizes the American who makes a profit through the advance of the world price of silver, while the foreigner is subject to no such penalty when he makes a profit due to our governmental action.

But beyond this I cannot agree in your assumption that the price of silver is solely the result of our governmental action. We levy a tax on the profits on the transfers of all silver. The profit may arise from contingencies which impel other nations to acquire silver. Profits may arise because other nations desire to hold certain stocks of silver while we are buying, and yet alone among the nations the American must be penalized on any profit that arises from any cause or agency which increases the price of silver.

I am opposed to the tax not because I fail to recognize the distinction between the industrial uses or hedging transactions, on the one hand, and silver profits arising from speculation, on the other; but I am opposed to the tax because it discriminates against American citizenship, because it places a premium on foreign citizenship, because it has destroyed our silver market, because it has transferred the daily control of silver to London, and because under it we seemingly have distinguished our treatment of gold and silver and utterly destroyed our own market, while we are intent on maintaining and strengthening foreign markets.

Nor for the life of me can I understand your attitude expressed in your words, "Surely it is not unfair to those whose profits are due to governmental action that half of those profits should revert to their Government." I had supposed that our whole interest with respect to recovery was the building of profits to the farmer, to labor, to industry, and to investors, and that wise governmental action is the hope of all classes of our citizens in building profit. Your statement cannot mean that profits as such and due to governmental action should revert to the Government to the extent of 50 percent of those profits.

I am wholly uninformed as respects the detail of your purchase of silver. I do not know whether you use any broker, foreign or domestic. I do not see what the standard provisions of all transfer tax laws have to do with the expressed provision of the Silver Purchase Act. I do not see how you can follow the so-called "standard provisions" in the light of the explicit provision of the Silver Purchase Act in levying this tax when the law is clear and definite in stating, "The provisions * * * (the tax) shall extend to transfers to the United States Government (the tax in such cases to be payable by the transferor) * * *."

Evidently it was not the intention of Congress to permit profits on sales to the United States Government to go untaxed, and your reference respecting the standard provisions of transfer taxes I do not think can be used to set aside the express provision I have quoted. This provision levies the profit tax on such transfers. I cannot believe that you have been advised that you are permitted to purchase abroad and that the tax on foreign purchases does not run.

This is not a question of the Government taxing itself. It is a question of the tax running on sales to the United States Government if a profit has been made on these sales. Whatever agency the Government uses must act for the Government and assume liability for the payment of any tax due by the vendor. I cannot understand how such an agency for the Government can safely assume such liability, and I feel certain that the only way out is through an agency or intermediary and that upon close investigation you will find this to be the practice.

Are not sales to the Government or its agent certified under this law? Are not profits certain under a rising silver market? And, between the profit maker and the Government or its agent, is there not an intermediary or dummy used in a "wash sale"? I am sure you will find this to be the practice.

Finally may I call your attention to the statement, "Foreign sellers prefer to offer their silver in their own markets, which, of course, they have every right to do." The converse of this statement substantially represents my whole thought on the question, and I paraphrase your words, "American sellers prefer to offer their silver in their own markets, which, of course, they have a perfect right to do."

It is the denial of this right which I had hoped in the most cooperative manner of which I am capable to bring to your attention that we together may break down some of the more glaring discriminations against silver and restore to Americans the privilege which we have wittingly or unwittingly given to foreigners. I am sincere in my desire to give every help to you in full freedom in executing the provisions of the Silver Purchase Act, and, contrary to a news report, I am making no charges against your administration of the act. I know you understand this.

On the other hand, as respects the policies of this Government, I feel free to press the principle of American rights not only on full equality with but preferentially above the rights of foreigners to profits arising out of governmental action. I am sure that if you will take this view of the subject, I will have that which I solicited and still solicit, namely, your full and intensive cooperation with the amendments to the Silver Purchase Act which I have introduced.

Sincerely yours,

PAT MCCARRAN.

REGULATION OF HIGHWAY TRANSPORTATION OF FREIGHT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a joint statement by representatives of certain agricultural groups and other producers and shippers of the necessities of life relative to the regulation of highway transportation of freight.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A JOINT STATEMENT BY REPRESENTATIVES OF THE AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION, THE NATIONAL DAIRY UNION, AMERICAN NATIONAL LIVESTOCK ASSOCIATION, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETAIL DRUGGISTS, THE NATIONAL GRANGE, NATIONAL COOPERATIVE MILK PRODUCERS' FEDERATION, NATIONAL WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION, AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF CREAMERY BUTTER MANUFACTURERS, AND AMERICAN PORTS COTTON COMPRESS & WAREHOUSE ASSOCIATION

APRIL 15, 1935.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
Chairman Committee on Interstate Commerce,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WHEELER: Representing producers and shippers of necessities of life, the undersigned are unalterably opposed to the so-called "Eastman bill" which proposes restrictive regulation of highway transportation of freight. This opposition, already made plainly manifest during Senate and House hearings on the measure, now is reaffirmed and emphasized because resent developments may have created the wrong impression that users of highway transportation favor this proposed legislation.

No public demand for enactment of this legislation exists. Support for the measure comes almost entirely from those who seek to retain for railroads some vestige of the monopoly they formerly enjoyed and those who want to create a comparable monopoly in the field of highway freight transportation.

We are opposed to the proposed legislation for the following specific reasons:

1. The Eastment bill (S. 1629), if enacted, would increase the cost of highway transportation without respect to the cost of providing that type of transportation.

2. It would impair flexibility of highway transportation, thus taking a valued aid from farmers and other producers and distributors of life's necessities. This would have a direct effect upon the general public.

3. It would vest a Federal Commission with unlimited power to force increases of charges made by motor-truck operators for hire, or it would authorize such a Commission to suspend the schedules of motor-truck operators' rates embodying reduced charges to the shipping public.

4. It would impose rigid and extreme regulation, exceeding even the present extensive regulation of railroads, upon common and contract carriers of freight in the field of highway transportation.

5. Small purveyors of highway freight transportation would be "squeezed out." This would be the result of imposition of the measure's requirements relating to filing and publication of tariffs, filing of contracts and revisions of rates. Reliable and broadly accepted information, developed before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, shows that 85.23 percent of the "for hire" motor-truck operators have only one truck each, and that the average for all such operators is 1.61 trucks per operator. Services made available and rendered by these small operators have kept and are keeping economic disaster from overtaking thousands of producers and shippers of agricultural and dairy products, livestock, and other basic commodities. By the same token, those services have made and are making possible movement of life's necessities from source to consumer with economy and facility that otherwise could not be attained.

Bus operations have many of the characteristics of a transportation system. Interstate bus movements may be regulated in the public interest without adverse effects on other types of vehicles.

We strongly urge that regulation of the bus industry be dealt with in a separate and independent legislative measure. This procedure would provide the Federal Government with opportunity to gather experience in a new field of regulation. Thus necessity of establishing an extensive regulatory system during the experimental stage of regulation would be eliminated.

We, the undersigned, for the organizations we represent, respectfully urge the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce to reconsider the action, chronicled in the public prints, by which it gave approval to the general content of the Eastman bill, a measure which very obviously disregards the public interest by inviting results herein outlined.

We further definitely urge that this measure be defeated.

Respectfully,

Chester H. Gray, Washington representative American Farm Bureau Federation; Charles E. Blaine, traffic counsel, American National Livestock Association; Charles E. Blaine, traffic counsel National Wool Growers Association; R. C. Fulbright, counsel American Ports Cotton Compress & Warehouse Association; Donald Kane, counsel National Cooperative Milk Producers Federation; A. M. Loomis, American Association of Creamery Butter Manufacturers and the National Dairy Union; Fred Brenckman, the National Grange; Rowland Jones, Jr., Washington representative National Association of Retail Druggists.

SUPPORT OF THE ADMINISTRATION PROGRAM

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Daily News entitled "Now Is the Time."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News]

NOW IS THE TIME

President Roosevelt today faces the largest and most vocal lot of chiselers and calamity howlers that have let themselves loose since he came into office.

With the work-relief law passed, many Members of Congress are ready to sidetrack the rest of the President's program. Hostile interests by direct and indirect opposition see a chance to block that program once and for all. They are willing to undermine public confidence in the President as a leader. That their success would play directly and inevitably into the hands of the Longs, Coughlins, and other self-appointed usurpers of the Presidential function, bothers them not at all. But it would bother the Nation plenty.

In normal times the question of whether a President loses his prestige or power is not a grave national issue but something merely for himself and his party to worry about. These, however, are not normal times. The emergency created by the depression still exists. The fate of more than a hundred million individuals is almost completely in the hands of Franklin Roosevelt. Any political enemy who ties his hands imperils the economic lives of the entire American people.

We may like him, or we may not. We may think him allwise, or we may think him a blunderer. Anyway, he is at the wheel—put there by the greatest vote ever given any man. He is going to be there for the next 2 years. These 2 years will see us well on the way out of the danger, or much deeper in. To try to wreck Roosevelt now is insanity. He cannot be wrecked without wrecking the Nation. Run him into the ditch, and American industry and labor go with him. Then we are all through—for a longer time than is pleasant to contemplate.

What is the alternative to cooperation with Roosevelt? It is to let the reactionaries have their way, though what that way is, no advocate of the "old deal" has had the courage or the imagination to state publicly. The alternative is to howl with the Longs and Coughlins—and the net result would be to compound the chaos. The result would be to block the only leadership backed by public endorsement and possessed of sufficient governmental powers to lead; to halt the only recovery program with even a chance of operating within the next 2 years. Even if the Roosevelt recovery program were weak, it would be better than the only alternative, which is no functioning program at all.

But the Roosevelt program is not weak. It is immeasurably stronger than any American dared hope for 2 years ago. We do not agree with all of it, any more than anyone else. We think parts of it will fail and should fail. All of it needs closer coordination. But its faults are few compared with the rich benefits it can bring to our harassed people, if it can be saved from the reactionaries of both old parties, the selfish interests of both capital and labor, and the radio propagandists.

The next step in that unfolding program is the legislative outline laid by the President before Congress. He has requested Congress to extend the N. R. A. and protect labors' rights, to pass the social-security bill for unemployment insurance and old-age pensions, to extend the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to legislate on bank reform, railroads, utility holding companies, pure food and drugs, and the munitions racket.

The time has come to put the spotlight of publicity on the destructive agents, regardless of party, and upon the Democratic congressional leaders who are running out on both the President and their party's pledges. Committees which should be working to improve much needed, but in some instances poorly drawn, bills are loafing or sulking on the job. These men should be called out and bawled out, in a fashion to wake them up and get them back on the job.

The time has arrived for the President to crack down. The people need and want aggressive personal leadership. It must and will come from someone. Our people will not run in group circles indefinitely. We have respected the President's patience and his tolerance with those in high places whom he knows to be putting personal, political, and financial interests ahead of the public good. We have understood the necessity for some resort to political strategy. But we believe the time has arrived to lay aside the fly swatter and use a club. The first job is to uncover the wreckers, and let the people know them by name and by their acts.

Constructive criticism and honest debate are always in order, but now it is time to give the gate to the economic buccaneers, whether they wail in the citadels of big business or whine in the President's own party councils. It is time to call the roll on the wreckers who offer no constructive plans of their own, but who ruthlessly seek to scuttle the President's plan because it frankly refuses to lead us back to the reactionary conditions to which we owe our present plight.

Now is the time to turn the heat on the demagogues advocating revolution under the guise of plans they know will hold no more water than a sieve.

The propaganda to undermine the President's popular support has been ruthless and persistent. So far it has made little headway. But the President cannot remain on the defensive. Inaction will be interpreted as indecision. The people are impatient, it is true, not with the President, but with those who would scuttle his program, whether they be politicians, labor leaders, or plutocrats. Without action this impatience, in time, will seek some leader—and possibly with less wisdom than was shown in 1932.

The voters are not such fools as to turn for help to the financial riggers and business racketeers who betrayed them before. They are still looking to the President as their hope, still ready to back him. But the President must resume the initiative. If the depression is to be licked this year, a quick and crushing blow must be struck at the would-be wreckers of the administration program.

Meanwhile, across the country believers in the new deal and those who still vest their hopes of economic recovery and a better social order in the man they elected as their leader owe it to the President and to themselves, to the present and to the future, to stand up and speak out. On platforms and through the press; by letter and wire to Washington, to the President, to Senators and Congressmen, to political leaders at home; on the air and in public gatherings, let people shout their demands. That will get action. Official Washington has its ear to the ground, and after all it has heard from crackpots and demagogs in recent months will heed a shouted demand for a return to Presidential leadership.

In 1917 our leaders in every walk of life dropped partisanship and petty differences to unite in an epoch-making coalition to help save Europe. The hour and the moment offer a similar opportunity for national cooperation to help save ourselves.

Mr. President, the people today are looking to you for leadership and direction. State clearly and simply what popular support you desire and point out the men or the interests who are blocking action necessary to recovery. You will not be disappointed by the response.

SOIL EROSION—INCLUSION OF HOPS AS A BASIC AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I desire to enter and do enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 7054) to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes, was passed yesterday. I also enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 626) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include hops as a basic agricultural commodity was passed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Has the Senator from Utah any objection to the soil-erosion measure which was passed by the Senate yesterday?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my objection to the soil-erosion bill, so called, is that the administration thereof ought to be put under the control of the Interior Department. I desire to have a consultation with several Senators who are interested in the bill and tomorrow the motion may be taken up. The bill is important and should receive prompt attention.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Did the Senator make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the soil-erosion bill was passed on yesterday?

Mr. KING. Yes; and I consent that it may be taken up tomorrow.

Mr. GORE. That is satisfactory.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the soil-erosion bill, in which, as coauthors of a similar measure, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and I have been particularly interested, is not at this moment being opposed on any major grounds.

Mr. KING. Quite the reverse. I approve its purpose and hope that by whom the measure shall be administered beneficial results may be received.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is desired, perhaps, to have some further discussion of the measure before it is finally passed.

Mr. KING. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator is not asking to have action on the motion to reconsider at this time, is he?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President. I ask that the motion be considered tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator now enters his motion?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] enters his motion at the present time.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, may I take this opportunity to give notice to the Senate that as soon as the pending bill shall be disposed of it is my intention to move to take up Senate bill 24, introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and myself? The bill is usually referred to as an "antilynching measure."

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, not for several years have we had before Congress a river and harbor bill, but such a bill has passed the House and is now pending in the Senate. Hearings on this bill will begin next Monday at half past 10 in the Commerce Committee. I thought I should notify Senators, so that if they have any matters of interest in connection with the bill they may govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Can the Senator from New York give the Senate information regarding the status of the so-called "flood-control bill"?

Mr. COPELAND. The flood-control bill has not been considered by the Committee on Commerce, but we have before us the river and harbor bill, which may have in it projects for flood control.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understood the flood-control measure had not as yet come over from the House. The House Committee on Flood Control has jurisdiction of the bill to which I am now referring.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Committee on Commerce in the Senate has jurisdiction of it.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. It has not as yet come to us.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator does not now know as to its status?

Mr. COPELAND. I am sorry to say that I do not.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6718) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 8 and 58 to the bill and concurred therein; and that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 29 and 60 to the bill and concurred therein, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE TRAFFIC BY MOTOR CARRIERS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 1629) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by motor carriers operating in interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 34, line 16, to insert a proviso after the word "license" was agreed to, as I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. WHEELER. In the committee amendment, on page 34, line 19, after the word "time", I now move to insert the words "not less than 90 days."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana whether he is familiar with the objections filed by the various farm organizations to this bill, setting forth five reasons for their opposition, and, if so, I should further like to ask him whether or not the bill has been amended to cover any of those objections which have been made?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I appreciate the fact that some of the farm organizations have filed protests against the bill. Mostly, however, they have been based on the theory that they were afraid the Interstate Commerce Commission was not going to regulate the busses and trucks as a separate institution; but we have exempted the casual or reciprocal transportation by the farmers from the operation of the bill should it become a law. In other words, any farmer who engages in casual trucking operations, say, from his farm to Des Moines, Iowa, for the purpose of carrying his products and his neighbor's products, is within the exemption.

There has been propaganda by some who do not want any regulation to the effect that this bill would cause an increase of rates up to the standard of the railroad rates. That contention is not based upon any fact, but is based upon pure propaganda, in my judgment, and is without foundation.

Coordinator Eastman has suggested—and we have written the suggestion into this bill specifically—that bus and truck operations should be viewed by the Commission in the peculiar light of their particular business, and that railroad rates should not be the yardstick for the rates which should be established for bus and truck operators.

Mr. DICKINSON. Is it the conclusion of the Senator from Montana that this proposal is based upon a rather false assumption?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

Mr. President, on page 64, line 3, after the word "charges", I move to insert the words "including rules and regulations for weekly or monthly settlement."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. This amendment is offered because of the fact that some of the shippers wanted to make weekly or monthly payments rather than to have to make cash payments each day.

The other amendment which I offered was intended to satisfy some of the objectors who felt that the language should be more explicit, and that a certificate, a permit, or a license should not be revoked until after 90 days had elapsed from the time notice had been served upon the offenders that they were violating some of the provisions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, after line 12, it is proposed to strike out down to line 5 on page 4 and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(c) Nothing in this part shall be construed to affect the powers of taxation of the several States or to authorize a motor carrier to do an intrastate business on the highways of any State. It is not intended hereby to interfere with the exclusive exercise by each State of the power of regulation of intrastate commerce by motor carriers on the highways thereof; and notwithstanding this part, the intrastate operations of motor carriers on the highways of a State shall continue to be subject to the laws of the State regulating such intrastate commerce: Provided, however, That the laws enacted in any State and regulations thereunder that relate to the maintenance, protection, safety, or use of the highways therein, which do not discriminate motor vehicles used in interstate commerce, shall not be deemed to be a burden on or an obstruction or impediment to interstate commerce, and the power to enact such laws and promulgate such regulations thereunder is hereby expressly recognized and confirmed to the respective States: Provided further, That transportation of persons or property by motor vehicle between points in the same State through territory outside thereof by reason of its local character is left subject to the regulation of the State within which such transportation takes place.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, the National Association of Railroad and Utility Commissioners is an organization which represents 46 of the State commissions, which largely have to do with the regulating of bus and motor-truck transportation. This proposed amendment was submitted by me at the request of the representatives of these various State regulatory bodies. The amendment was submitted to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I have before me the hearings of that committee.

I desire to quote here the opinion of this association as to what the wording of subsection (c) as now found in the bill would accomplish. It goes back to the old Shreveport Rate case, to the so-called "Shreveport doctrine"; and apparently it is the desire of the Interstate Commerce Commission to have the same broad powers over motor-truck transportation, even though it has to do with intrastate transportation, as they have with reference to the railroad rates. Irrespective of the fact that motor-truck transportation is, I understand, about 80 percent intrastate, nevertheless it is very clear to me, and is made clear from the quotation which I will make from the hearing, that the language of subsection (c) as now in the bill will give to the Interstate Commerce Commission over entirely intrastate motor transportation the same broad powers it now has as to railroad rates.

I quote from page 167 of the hearings. Mr. Benton, representing this association, was asked a question by the chairman of the committee, and he said in answer:

> Just exactly as it has now the right to regulate the intrastate rates that interstate railroads charge. There is no question, I think, with respect to that, Mr. Chairman.
> I will * * * point out the particular parts of the act which will give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to regulate the intrastate rates under the Shreveport doctrine.

And at the bottom of the page:

> It is because it will subject the intrastate rates not only of every interstate carrier who runs his bus or truck across the State line to the ultimate control of the Interstate Commerce Commission but it will subject the rates of every carrier who operates within the State, but not across the State lines, who carries any quantity of interstate merchandise, however small, to that regulation.

I agree with the contention of the members of the association of these various State commissions that since motor transportation and truck transportation are to a very large degree intrastate in character, jurisdiction over them should not be taken away from the various State commissions.

I quote further from the hearings, at page 168:

> That carrier, although he may not operate across any State line and may merely carry a very small quantity of interstate traffic, will be compelled to come to Washington to defend against that complaint.

I think that is another difference that should be borne in mind—that a small truck operator has not the facilities which the ordinary railroad company has, for instance, for coming here to Washington to defend himself or to appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I have no personal interest whatsoever in the matter. It happens that the man in charge of the legislative committee of the association to which I have referred is a very valued member of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission, and I have a personal friendship with him, as a result of which he asked me to present on the floor of the Senate the contention of the National Association of Railroad and Public Utility Commissioners. Since motor transportation differs so greatly from railroad transportation, I do not think there is any justification for subjecting these people, doing practically entirely an intrastate business, to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I recognize the fact that the committee has been technically advised in these matters by the representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Very likely they would like to have more power; and it would be, from their viewpoint, a proper thing.

I do not intend to take the time of the Senate any more than to present the viewpoint of the various State commissions which have been in the business of motor-truck regulation and understand that subject. I submit that this amendment should be adopted. It would reserve to the various State commissions the power they now have, and which clearly would be taken away under this bill if it should be passed in the language in which the committee has reported it to the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] proposes to substitute the language submitted by him for the language on page 3, beginning with line 12, known as paragraph (c). The statement made by the Senator is hardly correct with reference to the present section of the bill giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission the same power with reference to trucks and busses that they now have over intrastate rates of railroads. This language does not go as far as that of section 13 (4) of the Interstate Commerce Act goes with reference to railroads. What it says is this:

> Nothing in this part shall be construed to affect the powers of taxation of the several States or to authorize a motor carrier to do an intrastate business on the highways of any State, or to interfere with the exercise by each State of the power of regulation of intrastate commerce by motor carriers on the highways thereof, except where and only to the extent that such regulation causes undue or unreasonable disadvantage or prejudice to persons or localities in interstate commerce.

I may say that the Coordinator, as a matter of fact, is not especially anxious about this particular clause. I myself rather favored the idea of leaving out of this bill the Shreveport doctrine; but the members of the committee, after hearing practically all those engaged in the truck- and bus-transportation business who were in favor of it, put in this language. I talked with Mr. Eastman about it, and Mr. Eastman himself feels that the language used in the bill should be included in it. It is not the idea of the Commission, and this paragraph does not give the power to regulate intrastate rates in general.

With reference to the idea of bringing the small shipper down here, as a matter of fact the Interstate Commerce Commission has suggested that the State commissions should be used in fixing the rates between the different States through use of the joint boards; so all the little shipper would have to do would be to appeal to these various boards rather than to come here to Washington.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. I note that the language which was originally in the bill is as follows:

> It is not intended hereby to interfere with the exclusive exercise by each State of the power of regulation of intrastate commerce.

The committee struck out the word "exclusive." It must have done that with a purpose, and it must have recognized when it did it that it would to a very considerable degree result in the regulation of rates as to intrastate commerce, or there would be no necessity of striking out the word "exclusive."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the purpose in striking out the word "exclusive" I think was to harmonize the section with the exception which appears at the bottom of the page.

Mr. WHEELER. And which was put in by the committee itself.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask both the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Wisconsin whether striking out the clause beginning on line 23, page 3 with the word "except" would meet the objection raised by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that would meet the Senator's objection. I wish to point out, however, that his amendment goes further and might seriously conflict with and perhaps render ineffectual the definition of interstate commerce in the bill as set out in section 203. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to go further, and to say to the Commission, "You shall not have any power to regulate rates where a truck goes from a point in a State outside the State and back into the State."

What is happening with reference to that is this: It was testified by some of the members of State commissions and some of the other witnesses before the committee that at the present time truck drivers, in order to get away from State regulation where they are located close to the border, will go outside of a State and then come back into the State, and claim that the State has no right to regulate them at all, because they are engaged in interstate commerce. The definition of interstate commerce found in the bill as drafted includes the constitutional definition of interstate commerce, and it seems to me that that cannot be changed.

Mr. GORE. I inquired whether striking out that clause would meet the main objection raised by the Senator from Wisconsin, because in the main I agree with him as to the object which he is seeking to accomplish, but I was not quite clear as to the scope of his amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. In my judgment the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin is somewhat unfortunate, because it covers several different matters, and it is my opinion that his amendment as worded would not only reach the Shreveport case but it might seriously hamper the Commission in fixing and regulating the hours of service, or it might seriously interfere with the safety provisions included in the bill at the present time. In my judgment, therefore, it would be unfortunate if the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. GORE. I do not wish to vest in the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to regulate transportation by trucks and busses between Oklahoma City and Tulsa—entirely within the State of Oklahoma, and purely intrastate commerce. I realize the doctrine laid down in the Shreveport case, and I am not certain that it would in any event have application to truck transportation; but I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether striking out that clause would practically meet his objection, and rid the bill of the danger to which he refers?

Mr. DUFFY. I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma that I think the language was undoubtedly designed primarily to reach that situation, and I should have no objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Oklahoma. I did, however, use in this amendment the language which was suggested by the National Association of Railroad and Public Utility Commissioners, who have made quite a study of the subject; and I really bowed to their judgment as to the scope of the wording, because I thought they knew more about it than I did.

Mr. GORE. I sympathize with their main objection and with that raised by the Senator from Wisconsin. I was wondering if the Senator would yield to me to enable me to move to strike out that clause. If that motion should fail, then the Senator could offer his amendment. Would that meet the objection?

Mr. DUFFY. That would be agreeable; but perhaps the better way would be to vote on the amendment I have offered, and then have the Senator from Oklahoma offer his amendment, in case mine should not prevail.

Mr. GORE. Very well. I thought possibly a motion to strike out the clause might be a little stronger than the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin; but I yield to his suggestion.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say in conclusion that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin includes several different phases of the bill, and I earnestly hope it will not be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY].

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I move to strike out, on page 3, line 23, the clause beginning with the word "except." I think that meets the main objection raised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY]. I inferred that the Senator from Montana did not urge serious objection to its elimination, although I do not mean to commit the Senator.

I think the clause ought to be stricken out. I do not believe we ought to bring truck and bus transportation, which is entirely within a State, under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission on some sort of remote theory that it might directly or indirectly affect interstate commerce. If experience shall demonstrate the necessity of taking that further step, it can be taken in the future; but I believe for the present we ought to go more slowly and be guided by experience. Therefore I move to strike out that clause.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I myself have no particular objection. I rather took the view taken by the Senator from Oklahoma, but the majority of the committee took the other view. Mr. Eastman thought it was proper that this language should be in the law, but he had no particular objection to it being stricken out and stated that he was willing for the Commission to go ahead and attempt to carry out the law, even if that provision were not in it, and that if they found it was not satisfactory, they could come back to Congress later and urge its inclusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Oklahoma has moved to strike out all the rest of paragraph (c), on page 3, commencing with the word "except", down to the end of that subsection. Is that correct?

Mr. GORE. Yes; and to insert a period at the proper place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "except where and only to the extent that such regulation causes undue or unreasonable disadvantage or prejudice to persons or localities in interstate commerce against undue or unreasonable disadvantage or prejudice caused by any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice of motor carriers made or imposed by authority of any State."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on page 10, I move to strike out the words "supervise and" wherever they appear, namely, in line 4, line 12, and line 24.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have no particular objection to that. Our understanding is that the word "supervise" is used in the bill only in the sense in which the word "regulate" is used. I do not think it adds to or takes anything away from the bill, and I have no objection to its being stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the words "supervise and", on page 10, in lines 4, 12, and 24, be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in line 10, page 2 of the bill, I move to strike out the words "supervise and."

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BYRD subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to have the RECORD show that had there been a roll call on Senate bill 1629, commonly known as the "Eastman bill", providing for the regulation of interstate traffic by motor carriers, I would have voted in the negative.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6223) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, recognizing that an appropriation bill is privileged under Senate rules for the purposes for which the Senator from Arizona now moves, I take this occasion to renew the notice given earlier in the day that I will at the earliest practicable moment, and I hope as soon as action shall be completed on the bill now being presented for consideration, move to take up Senate bill 24, known as the "antilynching measure."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6223) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that committee amendments receive first consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Taking note of the statement just made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], it had been my understanding that, following the disposition of the Interior Department appropriation bill, the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] would move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2367, to create the Farmers' Home Corporation. I understand that the Senator from Colorado expects to move to take up the bill to which he refers at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. On account of confusion in the Chamber I was unable to hear the colloquy between Senators. The Senator from Arkansas has made some statement in which no doubt some of us would be interested.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was merely stating, in reply to the announcement of the Senator from Colorado, that it was my understanding that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] had given notice that he desired to move to take up Senate bill 2367, to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, and so forth, which is a bill pending on the calendar. I also understand that the Senator from Colorado expects, when it is convenient, to move to take up the bill to which he has referred.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Arkansas, perhaps I ought to say that I have had no understanding with respect to the bill of the Senator from Alabama, and that I hope to make the motion of which I gave notice at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill now being presented by the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Office of the Secretary—Salaries", on page 2, line 3, after the name "Secretary of the Interior", to strike out "two Assistant Secretaries" and insert "First Assistant Secretary, Assistant Secretary", so as to read:

Salaries: For the Secretary of the Interior, First Assistant Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $421,590.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 10, after the words "of the", to strike out "Assistant Secretaries" and insert "First Assistant Secretary and the Assistant Secretary", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations, contained in this act, for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the First Assistant Secretary and the Assistant Secretary the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Division of grazing control", on page 4, line 23, after the word "vehicles", to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$150,000", so as to read:

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), including traveling and other necessary expenses, not to exceed $111,080 for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $150,000, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Printing and binding", on page 7, line 18, after the name "Bureau of Reclamation", to strike out "$184,000, of which $35,000" and insert "$239,000, of which $50,000", and in line 21, after the name "National Park Service", to strike out "$45,000" and insert "$85,000", so as to read:

For printing and binding for the Department of the Interior, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, except the Alaska Railroad, the Geological Survey, Vocational Education, and the Bureau of Reclamation, $239,000, of which $50,000 shall be for the National Park Service, $85,000 for the Bureau of Mines, and $46,500 for the Office of Education, no part of which shall be available for correspondence instruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission", on page 8, line 23, before the figures "$55,000", to insert "of which $20,000 shall be immediately available,", so as to read:

Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission: For carrying into effect the provisions of the act creating the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, approved February 25, 1929 (45 Stat., p. 1300), as amended by the act approved June 26, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 1223), of which $20,000 shall be immediately available, $55,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1935.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "General Land Office—General expenses", on page 10, line 18, after the name "Secretary of the Interior", to strike out "$470,000" and insert "$700,000", so as to read:

Surveying public lands: For surveys and resurveys of public lands, examination of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, making fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $700,000, including not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, at the end of line 10, to increase the appropriation for salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices from $73,000 to $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Indian Affairs—Salaries", on page 13, line 23, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$470,290" and insert "$474,790", so as to read:

For the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $474,790.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 5, after the word "therewith", to strike out "$140,400" and insert "$145,000", so as to read:

For lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of agency buildings, exclusive of hospital buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $145,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 15, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$275,000" and insert "$290,- 000 "; and in line 21, after the word "pupils", to strike out the colon and "Provided, That not to exceed $150,000" and insert "and not to exceed $160,000 of applicable appropriations", so as to read:

Vehicles, Indian Service: Not to exceed $290,000 of applicable appropriations made herein for the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of employees in the Indian field service, and the transportation of Indian school pupils, and not to exceed $160,000 of applicable appropriations may be used for the purchase and exchange of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and that such vehicles shall be used only for official service, including the transportation of Indian school pupils.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Indian lands", on page 17, line 6, after the numerals "1936", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the unexpended balances of funds awarded to the Tesuque Pueblo and authorized to be used for water development and irrigation, and the purchase of land, are hereby made available also for the purchase of equipment for the industrial advancement of the Indians of said pueblo", so as to read:

Purchase of land and water rights, etc., Pueblo Indians, New Mexico (tribal funds): The unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made, from the trust funds of the several pueblos, for the purchase of land and water rights, purchase of equipment for industrial advancement and fencing, irrigating, and improving lands, are hereby continued available for the same purposes until June 30, 1936: Provided, That the unexpended balances of funds awarded to the Tesuque Pueblo and authorized to be used for water development and irrigation, and the purchase of land, are hereby made available also for the purchase of equipment for the industrial advancement of the Indians of said pueblo.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 11, after the word "available", to strike out "$500,000" and insert "$1,000,000"; in line 12, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$22,500", and in line 14, after the name "District of Columbia", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That within the States of Arizona and Wyoming no part of said sum shall be used for the acquisition of lands outside of the boundaries of existing Indian reservations"; so as to read:

For the acquisition of lands, interest in lands, water rights and surface rights to lands, and for expenses incident to such acquisition, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat., p. 985), including personal services, purchase of equipment and supplies, and other necessary expenses, to be immediately available, $1,000,000, of which not to exceed $22,500 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That within the States of Arizona and Wyoming no part of said sum shall be used for the acquisition of lands outside of the boundaries of existing Indian reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at this point certain excerpts from pages 86, 87, and 88 of the hearings on the bill. These excerpts I desire to have appear in the RECORD following the adoption of the amendment on page 18, lines 14 to 17, inclusive.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator HAYDEN. I do not understand about how Oklahoma should be considered out of the picture so far as purchasing land for the Indians is concerned.

Mr. COLLIER. Let me explain it this way: Actually the mere buying of land in Oklahoma is possible under the Wheeler-Howard Act as passed, but the extension of credit to Oklahoma Indians is excluded by the act as passed, expressly. They cannot organize; and further, they cannot have credit. The buying of the land when no capital for development can be supplied is useless, and therefore any plan for supplying agricultural land to the Oklahoma Indians is rendered abortive.

If the pending bill be adopted, introduced by Senator THOMAS and Mr. ROGERS, all that is equalized in Oklahoma, becomes eligible to all of the benefits.

Senator HAYDEN. There has been considerable nervousness in my own State with respect to the authority granted by the Wheeler-Howard Act for the purchase of lands for Indians. Whether or not this fear is warranted, I do not know. What you stated a moment ago with respect to checkerboard lands is a problem that we have met through the Navajo boundary bill, and that apparently is a very satisfactory solution——

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Senator HAYDEN. Of a problem that was very acute for many years. But there is continual apprehension in the State of Arizona of a disposition on the part of the Indian Service to go outside of the boundaries thus fixed by law and acquire lands for the Navajos. There is also a fear of a disposition on the part of the Indian Bureau to acquire lands for other Indians in various parts of Arizona, when, as a matter of fact, within the State there is about 20,000,000 acres of land now reserved for use and occupancy by Indians.

In your judgment, is there any necessity for the acquisition of additional lands for Indians in Arizona at this time beyond what has already been provided for them?

Mr. COLLIER. I would answer it this way, Senator HAYDEN: At this time means with the present Indian population. I would say that if we are able to go in and save the range from denudation, stop the rapid destruction of the soil value, no. Generally speaking, no. If we cannot do it, we are going to witness this continuous process of the destruction of the Indian range, and the Indians being forced out and out and out upon other lands.

Senator HAYDEN. But I understand that substantial progress is being made to control soil erosion on the Arizona Indian reservations.

Mr. COLLIER. We are making progress, and we are hoping actually to meet the necessity.

Senator HAYDEN. I am speaking of the existing lands reserved for Indians in Arizona. If properly conserved, will they take care of the Indian population?

Mr. COLLIER. Stated with this qualification about the Navajos, that we may find it necessary—I am not speaking of any actual plan, but of a possibility that we may find that we cannot develop on the existing or proposed Navajo Reservation all of the land for sedentary farming, irrigated land that is needed, to give them a decent standard of living. We may find even after we have taken in for the Navajos some of their land down on the Colorado owned by the Indians, a part of it, still we will be compelled ultimately to go further and acquire some irrigated land.

Senator HAYDEN. I fear that you will have considerable difficulty in persuading the Navajos to leave their high, cool country and go down to reside in the Colorado River Valley where the summer weather is very hot.

Mr. COLLIER. I am not speaking to any immediate plan, and I think the most effective answer would be this, that this little money, $500,000, or a million, as it may be, or 2 million, is utterly insufficient to meet the needs of the Indians who are totally landless, or whose lands are so checkerboarded through allotment that they just as well be landless.

Senator HAYDEN. Then it is not your intention during the next fiscal year to purchase any land for Indians in Arizona?

Mr. COLLIER. Oh, no. I am sure we have no such intention.

Mr. STEWART. Senator HAYDEN, you recall that the Arizona-Navajo extension bill as passed contains a proviso against the use of this Wheeler-Howard Act money for the purchase of land in Arizona for the Navajo Indians.

Senator HAYDEN. We took care of that. But my people are very nervous. There has been over the years a continued expansion, expansion, and expansion, in the areas of land reserved for Indians. We must all frankly admit there has been a great expansion in the numbers of the Navajo Tribe. There were only about 4,000 of them when the Navajos were all prisoners of war at Bosque Redondo on the Pecos in 1865, and they have multiplied now to how many?

Mr. COLLIER. Forty-five thousand.

Senator HAYDEN. Forty-five thousand, which is a tenfold increase in 70 years. Now, if the same ratio of increase in population is to go on and Congress is to continue to buy land for them, within a few generations Arizona would be populated by none but Navajos.

Mr. COLLIER. It would.

Senator HAYDEN. The white people of Arizona cannot contemplate that situation with entire calmness. The Navajo Indians now have a reservation in Arizona and New Mexico that is about as large as the State of West Virginia, which should be sufficient to support the tribe. Under all the circumstances, my people will be reassured if it is understood that none of the money appropriated in this bill——

Mr. COLLIER. No.

Senator HAYDEN. Is to be used to purchase any lands outside of the boundaries of existing Indian reservations in the State of Arizona.

Mr. COLLIER. Yes; that could be stated as a definite pledge, and as a matter of fact the law itself could provide for that.

Senator HAYDEN. There is one other source of apprehension in the State, the so-called "San Carlos extension", an area of land that over a generation ago was eliminated from the Apache Reservation for mining purposes. Under the terms of the Wheeler-Howard Act that land might be again incorporated within the reservation. I think it would be a mistake to return such lands to the San Carlos Apache Reservation for the reason that in the intervening years, all of the valuable sources of water in that area has been acquired and now belong to white people.

Mr. COLLIER. Our office shares that view.

Senator HAYDEN. If the entire area south of the Gila again becomes an Indian reservation, the same story that you have just told of the evils of checkerboard ownership would again exist. It would be necessary for the Indian Bureau to condemn or otherwise acquire all of the white holdings in the area that was ceded by the Apache Indians. They are the strategic holdings and are most valuable, because ownership of the water controls the range.

Mr. COLLIER. We think the Government, however, ought to compensate the Indians for the lands that are admittedly theirs.

Senator HAYDEN. With that statement I am inclined to agree. You will remember that Senator ASHURST suggested at a meeting of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs held at San Carlos about 3 years ago that the land in the extension be paid for to the Indians at the rate of $1.25 an acre. That would require an appropriation of about $275,000. Legislation of that kind I am sure the Arizona delegation in Congress will be glad to sponsor.

May it be understood that the Indian Bureau prefers that kind of solution rather than to attempting to restore to the San Carlos Reservation an area which is checkerboarded and spotted with lands in white ownership and which would be useless to the Apache Indians unless the holdings of the present white residents were bought out?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes; that seems to be the common-sense idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 13, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States and to pay to the Sac and Fox Tribe of Indians of Missouri the amount of $9,153.20, representing the amounts remaining in two separate funds, plus $268.71 interest, which has accrued to and including December 31, 1934, on the amount of $1,141.70 derived from the sale of lands of said Indians: Provided, That prior to the segregation and payment of the above amount to the Indians there shall be paid to certain attorneys who have rendered services to the Indians under an informal contract not to exceed $400, to reimburse them for expenses incurred for and on behalf of the tribe: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Industrial assistance and advancement", on page 20, line 20, after the word "purpose", to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$170,000", and on page 21, line 1, after the word "law", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided further, That not to exceed $20,000 of the foregoing amount shall be immediately available for obligations incurred during the fiscal year 1935", so as to read:

For expenses incidental to the sale of timber, and for the expenses of administration, including fire prevention, of Indian forest lands from which such timber is sold, to the extent that the proceeds of such sales are sufficient for that purpose, $170,000, reimbursable to the United States as provided in the act of February 14, 1920 (U. S. C., title 25, sec. 413): Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of reasonable rewards for information leading to arrest and conviction of a person or persons setting forest fires in contravention of law: Provided further, That not to exceed $20,000 of the foregoing amount shall be immediately available for obligations incurred during the fiscal year 1935.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise to ask for information. I have just learned that the Interior Department appropriation bill is before the Senate, and a hasty examination of the report shows that the bill carries appropriations of $14,471,742 in excess of those of last year. I should like to ask the Senator why there has been such a large increase in the appropriation?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the committee report also shows that the bill is under the Budget estimates for 1936 in the amount of $1,547,000.

The principal items of increase in the bill over the appropriations for the Interior Department for the last fiscal year are, first, the item for surveying public lands, under the General Land Office, in the sum of $666,000. Last year there was no new appropriation for that purpose, the activity being cared for from an unexpended balance and out of the public-works fund.

One of the largest items under the Indian Bureau is an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the purchase of lands for Indians, which is the Budget estimate.

Under the Wheeler-Howard Act there was an authorization for $10,000,000 for a revolving fund, to make it possible to lend money to Indians. The House of Representatives authorized two and a half million, and the Senate committee did not increase the amount.

The appropriation for roads and bridges on Indian reservations is the amount authorized by law, an increase of $2,000,000 over the appropriation for last year.

Under the Geological Survey there is an increase of $287,000 for topographic surveys, being the amount allowed by the Budget and the House of Representatives. The Senate Committee on Appropriations recommends an increase of $160,000 for geologic surveys and an increase of $429,000 for gaging streams. The last sum is necessary in order to bring the total amount up to the State appropriations, which are made to match the Federal appropriation.

Under the Bureau of Mines there is a total increase of $830,000 over the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year. Four or five years ago the appropriations for the Bureau of Mines were two and a half million dollars. This increase will bring the total to about $2,000,000. The Senator is well aware of the importance of the Bureau of Mines to the mining industry.

Mr. KING. I assent to that appropriation very gladly.

Mr. HAYDEN. For the National Park Service there is an increase for roads of two and a half million dollars, that being the amount authorized by law.

In the pending bill there appears an appropriation for public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, that function having been transferred to the Department of the Interior. The bill carries an appropriation of $1,632,000 over the appropriation last year on that account. For buildings and grounds outside of the District of Columbia, there is an appropriation of $383,000.

Mr. KING. Of course those are public buildings for use by the Government itself.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; under the care and control of the Department of the Interior. The Senator from Utah will remember that custody of a great many battlefields and monuments have been transferred from the War Department to the Department of the Interior. Consolidation of jurisdiction in the Department of the Interior accounts for such increases. While in this bill it appears as an apparent increase, it is not necessarily an increase over the usual appropriations for such purposes.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator what is the aggregate of the appropriation for the Indian Bureau? The Senator will recall that two sessions ago there was a very serious controversy over the appropriation, and assaults were made in a friendly way upon the policy of the Indian Bureau in the maintenance of a large number of schools at very great expense. The promise was made that many of the schools would be abondoned and that schools upon the reservations would be established, or more of the Indian children would be brought into public schools of the States in which the Indians were found.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator from Utah perhaps knows from his own observation that the policy of establishing day schools on Indian reservations has been very widely adopted. There cannot be day schools without buildings. There are substantial appropriations in the bill to carry on the building of new day schools on various Indian reservations. The record shows that in practically all Indian boarding schools the attendance has materially decreased. Instead of being sent away to boarding schools, children are being educated near their homes on the reservations.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that there was great resistance by some white people in some of the States against closing the Indian boarding schools, and very great opposition to the establishment of schools upon the reservations for the Indian children.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am sure that anyone who has carefully thought the matter over realizes that young Indian children should not be sent away to Indian boarding schools. It is better to educate them at home. On the other hand, there is a proper use for boarding schools for the more advanced children to give them the education which they cannot obtain upon the reservations. It is the same as the situation in white families. We educate our children in the public schools and then send them away from home to college.

Many Indians desire that their children shall have the same advantage so that a balanced education may be obtained—and, I think, properly so. There should be some nonreservation boarding schools for higher education of Indians, but Congress should also provide for day schools on the reservations.

Mr. KING. I agree with that policy. I was wondering whether the plan which I understood had been agreed upon by Mr. Collier when he came into office that the number of boarding schools should be diminished is being carried into effect.

Mr. HAYDEN. The number of nonreservation boarding schools has been reduced and the attendance at the existing schools has been diminished, but it does take money to establish new day schools. The expenditures are now necessary for that purpose. Ultimately it will cost less to maintain the day schools.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator will recall that not very long ago there were about 350,000 Hawaiians. Today, under the influence of civilization, that fine population has decreased until there are only about 20,000 native Hawaiians left. There has been a movement to get an appropriation to provide homesteads for those native Hawaiians in the hope that they might not disappear as a race. Outside of the appropriation for education in Hawaii and for the Governor of Hawaii, are there any appropriations in the bill looking toward the homesteading feature?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say very frankly to the Senator that the matter was not considered by the Committee on Appropriations. We merely accepted the action taken by the House with respect to appropriations for Hawaii. I doubt the propriety of seeking to amend the bill now for a purpose of that kind unless we have definite information. The Senator's suggestion, however, is entirely proper and should be pursued.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator know whether or not it is contemplated by the Department of the Interior to augment the work now being done in Hawaii?

Mr. HAYDEN. All I really know about the subject is what I learned in a conversation with the Governor of Hawaii when I was in Honolulu last summer. Governor Poindexter stated that they were working on the problem of trying to save the remnant of the Hawaiian race, and that one of the best ways to do it is to provide them with small homesteads.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not at all critical in making the observation, but it seems to me that the same treatment we afford the Indians, so to speak, to some extent should be afforded the Hawaiians. We have gone in there and taken the land in the same manner, after a fashion, and put them up against a type of life to which they are traditionally not suited. They are disappearing from the face of the earth, and it strikes me we have a moral obligation to assist them to get back on the land rather than to have them kicked about as they have been to a large extent by our different endeavors and interference in the affairs of the island. I am hopeful the Department of the Interior sometime in the future will enlarge on the plan now being adopted, and that Congress will appropriate sufficient money to give the people a chance to revitalize themselves, as they formerly lived in homesteads.

Mr. HAYDEN. From my own observation in the Hawaiian Islands, I think the Senator has interested himself in a very worthy purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, line 10, after the word "reservations", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$20,000", so as to read:

For the suppression or emergency prevention of forest fires on or threatening Indian reservations, $20,000, together with $25,000 from funds held by the United States in trust for the respective tribes of Indians interested.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 2, after the word "thereof", to insert "to be immediately available, $116,000, payable from tribal funds as follows: Fort Apache, Ariz., $25,000; Fort Peck, Mont., $30,000; Pyramid Lake, Nev., $11,000; Cheyenne River, S. Dak., $25,000; Shoshone, Wyo., $25,000", so as to read:

Industrial assistance (tribal funds): For the construction of homes for individual members of the tribes; the purchase for sale to them of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, building material, and other equipment and supplies; and for advances to old, disabled, or indigent Indians for their support, and Indians having irrigable allotments to assist them in the development and cultivation thereof, to be immediately available, $116,000, payable from tribal funds as follows: Fort Apache, Ariz., $25,000; Fort Peck, Mont., $30,000; Pyramid Lake, Nev., $11,000; Cheyenne River, S. Dak., $25,000; Shoshone, Wyo., $25,000, and the unexpended balances of funds available under this head in the Interior Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935, and the act of June 27, 1932 (47 Stat., p. 335), are hereby continued available during the fiscal year 1936.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Development of water supply", on page 32, after line 18, to insert:

For final payment to the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District, N. Mex., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to execute an agreement with the Middle Rio Grande Conservancy District providing for conservation, irrigation, drainage, and flood control for the Pueblo Indian lands in the Rio Grande Valley, N. Mex., and for other purposes", approved March 13, 1928 (45 Stat., p. 312), $311,452, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available and to be reimbursed as provided in said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 12, after the figures "$12,000" and the semicolon, to insert "for enlarging hospital, including purchase of equipment, $24,000;", and in line 14, after the words "in all", to strike out "$141,250" and insert "$165,250", so as to read:

Sequoyah Orphan Training School, near Tahlequah, Okla.: For 350 orphan Indian children of the State of Oklahoma belonging to the restricted class, to be conducted as an industrial school under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $114,250; for pay of superintendent, drayage, and general repairs and improvements, $12,000; for enlarging hospital, including purchase of equipment, $24,000; for the purchase of land, $15,000; in all, $165,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 13, after the word "improvements", to strike out "$20,000; for improvements to heating system, $40,000" and insert "including improvements to heating system and shop facilities, $60,000", so as to read:

Chemawa, Salem, Oreg.: For 300 pupils, including not to exceed $1,000 for printing and issuing school paper, $106,500; for local vocational training program directed from the school, $20,500; for pay of superintendent, drayage, and general repairs and improvements, including improvements to heating system and shop facilities, $60,000; in all, $187,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$2,618,575" and insert $2,642,575", so as to read:

In all, for above-named nonreservation boarding schools, not to exceed $2,642,575.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General support and administration", on page 48, line 4, after the name "Fort Apache", to strike out "$24,000" and insert "$50,000"; in the same line, after the name "San Carlos", to strike out "$65,800" and insert "$55,800"; and in line 5, after the words "in all", to strike out "$99,300" and insert "$115,300", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 3, after the word "Interior", it is proposed to insert the following:

Under Secretary (which position is hereby established in the Department of the Interior, with compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and with appointment thereto by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate).

And on page 2, line 6, after the name "District of Columbia", it is proposed to strike out "$421,590" and insert "$431,590."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the nature of the amendment now proposed?

Mr. HAYDEN. The amendment proposes to create in the Department of the Interior the office of under secretary at a salary of $10,000 per annum, the Under Secretary to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The amount proposed to be provided and the language of the amendment were included in the Budget estimates as submitted to the Congress. The item as I have offered it was favorably reported by the House Committee on Appropriations but was stricken out on the floor of the House on a point of order. The amendment was brought to the attention of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Secretary Ickes appeared in person and earnestly urged that he needed the help which will be afforded by the appointment of an Under Secretary, and I was authorized by the committee to offer the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. As the bill passed the House it provided for two Assistant Secretaries. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate evidently changed that to read "First Assistant Secretary and Assistant Secretary."

Mr. HAYDEN. If the Senator will permit me to explain the situation, the law provides, at the present time, for a First Assistant Secretary and an Assistant Secretary. When the bill was reported to the House from the House Committee on Appropriations it contained a provision for an Under Secretary and two Assistant Secretaries. We thought it was proper that the First Assistant should retain his title and that is why the action was taken by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, so that the bill will now provide, if the amendment shall be adopted, for an Under Secretary, a First Assistant Secretary, and an Assistant Secretary.

The amendment merely adds an Under Secretary and does not take the title of First Assistant away from the present First Assistant Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator, does this mean that we are creating another office?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the effect of the amendment.

Mr. KING. We are not abolishing one of the Assistant Secretaries?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not at all. We are leaving the set-up in the Department exactly as it is, with the same titles the present officials now have, and are merely adding an Under Secretary.

Mr. KING. Is it necessary to have another official there?

Mr. HAYDEN. I believe the Senator will agree with me that no member of the Cabinet has such manifold duties imposed upon him as has the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KING. I quite appreciate that, and I should like to give him more duties, because he is efficient.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true; and Secretary Ickes feels that he ought to have in the Interior Department an Under Secretary to whom he can delegate a part of his authority. The Committees on Appropriations of both Houses felt that it was the proper thing to do, particularly since it is estimated for in the Budget.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I believe the RECORD should show that during the past 2 years many activities have been transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, and for that reason this additional officer does not appear to be out of place.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is no question that the duties and responsibilities of the Secretary of the Interior have been very greatly increased during the last few years. Some of them, as stated by the Senator from Oklahoma, pertain to activities that have been transferred to his Department; others relate to duties that are not intimately connected with the affairs of his Department. It seems to me that, under the circumstances, the creation of this new office is justified.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I cannot let this moment pass without bringing to the attention of the Senate that which I feel is due to the Secretary of the Interior. I have the honor to be one of those representing in the Senate the State of Illinois. This particular appointee whom Senators have described as Secretary Ickes is from the State of Illinois. I think it is but fair that we contemplate for a moment that when he became a member of the Cabinet he had previously held no Federal office. He came directly from the profession and practice of the law, largely devoted to what may be called its domestic branch—civil law, property, and local finance. Politically he had altogether aligned himself with matters of governmental reform, particularly against municipal corruption, without regard to the political party which might be in power. He has been trusted and clothed with the privileges of office unparalleled by precedent or example in government. The Senator from Arkansas, the leader of the majority, and the Senator from Arizona, in charge of the bill, have stated, and the Senators from Oklahoma and Utah have confirmed, that a great many duties have been appended to the office of the Secretary of the Interior which heretofore were foreign to it. This gentleman in conducting his office has had to distribute money to the amount of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars, passing ultimately into larger sums of billions. He has had to direct and supervise numbers of contracts of every form and nature, many limited and unrestrained. He has had to administer varied forms of undertaking. With this vast load of toil borne upon him and carrying responsibilities multiplied, there has been no comment from any source other than approval of his industry and devotion to duty. Whatever discordance from time to time there has arisen as to the method of administration from those who may have been desirous or anxious for immediate expedition, it is well to observe here, as I do, that nowhere at any time has allusion been made touching his integrity, but of praise or reflecting upon his official probity only as the highest and most honorable. And this I assert is of universal application in all our Nation where his office and authority operate.

The example this officer has set in his marvelous and helpful results and his achievements guided for the Nation, I, as United States Senator, commend to the honorable Senate. I speak in behalf of this Cabinet appointee from the State of Illinois on his record. I take pride in bringing to the attention of the Senate the great usefulness and distinction of all Illinois appointees as aids to the President. And as to the Secretary of the Interior, I press upon the consideration of the Senate the expression of approval of the proposal now offered to give him relief from the severe burden borne, and with it reflect the deserved degree of honor.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, for the purpose of the record, I desire to have printed at this point a brief excerpt from the hearings justifying this proposed change in the law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNDER SECRETARYSHIP

Secretary ICKES. Under this administration the following new activities have been transferred to the Department of the Interior: Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital; Public Buildings Commission; Arlington Memorial Bridge; Agriculture Department Buildings, 11 for full maintenance, 13 for partial maintenance; Veterans' Administration Buildings, 4 of them; buildings outside the District of Columbia, 11; cemeteries and parks, from the War Department, as follows: 11 national military parks, 2 national parks, 10 battlefield sites, 10 national monuments, 4 miscellaneous memorials, 11 national cemeteries. Then, national monuments from the Department of Agriculture, 16 areas; George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission; Commission of Fine Arts; Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission; the Bureau of Mines; the Federal Board for Vocational Education; the United States Geographic Board; Puerto Rico; grazing control; and as an emergency organization, Subsistence Homesteads.

Now, if I may make a purely self-serving statement, Mr. Chairman and Senators, I really need additional help of a sort that can be effectively given only by an Under Secretary. Since accepting this position, which I did with a great deal of pleasure, I have worked from early morning till late at night. Customarily I am at the office at 8 o'clock in the morning. On winter days sometimes I am 15 or 20 minutes late. I work through till 6:15 without pausing for lunch. I go home for dinner. I come back at night and work till 10:15. That is true of Saturdays also. Sundays I "knock off" at 1 and take work home with me. I do the same on holidays. Now, I love it, and I seem to thrive on it; but I think I could do a more effective job if I had an Under Secretary who in a sense would be an understudy who would help me carry the general load, that cannot be done by a divisional set-up at all.

I told the chairman of the subcommittee I was going to put him on as my witness, because he told me outside here—I will give him away—that if he had his way he would make every head of a department spend at least 50 percent of his time out of Washington.

* * * * * * *

Senator HAYDEN. The fact is that every administrative officer, if he so determines it to be his course, can spend all of his time handling papers in his office. He can also meet people who come from various parts of the United States but whose time is always limited. There is an old Japanese proverb that "One look is better than a thousand words." There can be no question so far as the efficiency of any executive officer is concerned, particularly one who deals with problems such as those which arise in the Interior Department, where great national resources are concerned, where the welfare of hundreds of thousands of people are involved, that to actually see the conditions on the ground is an immense advantage. That is a substantial argument in favor of creating the position of undersecretary of the Interior. The Secretary would then have more opportunity to get out in the field and see things for himself.

You did not mention among your other duties the assignment that was given to you by the President with respect to the Public Works Administration.

Secretary ICKES. Well, I have two other "chores", of course, Administrator of Public Works and Oil Administrator.

Senator HAYDEN. Necessarily, those two "chores" take a considerable part of your time.

Secretary ICKES. Yes; they take quite a lot of time. I thank you for the suggestion. That should not have been overlooked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on page 15, line 13, I move to strike out the figures "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$150,000."

This item is intended to pay the expenses of the Indian Office in assisting Indians to organize chartered corporations. Such corporations were authorized by section 9 of what is known as the "Wheeler-Howard Act." I desire to place in the RECORD at this time the section referred to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The section referred to is as follows:

SEC. 9. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary, but not to exceed $250,000 in any fiscal year, to be expended at the order of the Secretary of the Interior, in defraying the expenses of organizing Indian chartered corporations or other organizations created under this act.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It will be seen that under the existing law an authorization of $250,000 is provided for each year. The Budget approved the item for $250,000, but the House, in its deliberations, reduced the sum to $100,000.

This money is intended to assist the Indians to perfect organizations so that they may participate in the revolving funds. The revolving fund authorized is the sum of $10,000,000, but the Budget cut that to $5,000,000, and in this bill it is only two and a half million dollars. Before the Indians can get the benefit of this fund they must perfect organizations something like a corporation. Of course, they do not know how to proceed; someone must educate them and guide them, and this money is for the purpose of assisting the Indians throughout the United States in perfecting their chartered organizations or corporations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. KING. Two years ago, when we paid a great deal of attention to the Indian appropriation bill, the evidence showed that there were something like, as I remember, 8,000 employees in the Indian Bureau, a number greatly in excess, as I believed, and as many other Senators believed, of any legitimate demand. There were promises of reforms and a reduction of salaries and of the number of employees. The figures showed that there was 1 Indian Bureau employee for every 6 or 7 Indians, and that, while there was a diminution in the number of Indians in the United States, there was a constant increase in the number of employees in the Indian Bureau. In view of that background, I ask the Senator if there are not sufficient employees in the Indian Bureau, and if there are not in that Bureau many lawyers competent to organize the various corporations which are to be set up in order to enable the Indians to secure the benefit of the fund to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if my memory serves me correctly, the estimate given of the number of employees was too large by about 2,000. I think the aggregate number is more nearly 6,000 than 8,000.

Furthermore, the appropriations for the Indian Service have been materially decreased during the past few years. I think the record will show that we are now appropriating less money by something like $10,000,000 than we appropriated a few years ago. If the Indians were all in one State, the argument of the Senator from Utah would, in my judgment, be valid; but the Indians are scattered in 20 States, and in those 20 States they are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the States themselves. In my State, Oklahoma, we have 77 counties, and practically every county in the State has numerous Indians. So we have in my State alone seven different agencies. We have several hospitals; we have several schools; which make it necessary to have an unusually large number of personnel in order to man the agencies and schools and hospitals, and so forth. I submit the amendment, Mr. President, to increase the amount to $150,000.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma correctly states that the budget estimated for this item is in the sum of $250,000. He proposes to increase the amount as provided by the House and as reported by the Senate committee from $100,000 to $150,000. The reason that both the House Committee on Appropriations and the Senate Committee on Appropriations were unwilling to make a very large appropriation for a revolving loan fund to Indians was that heretofore the experience has been that loans made to Indians have not been repaid. The new plan contemplates a form of organization similar perhaps to a local farm-loan committee. It would seem to be entirely proper that the Indian Service should perfect such organizations before Congress appropriates any large sum of money to be loaned to Indians. For that reason I am willing to take the matter to conference, and therefore, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, on page 25, line 10, I move to strike out the figures " $2,500,000 " and insert in lieu thereof " $5,000,000."

The object of this amendment is to provide the amount which the Budget estimated for the loan fund authorized originally in the so-called " Wheeler-Howard Act." The act authorized $10,000,000. In support of this amendment I desire to read briefly from the testimony of Secretary Ickes before the Senate committee:

The Interior Department appropriation was cut $3,297,409 in the House. Of this total $2,997,675 was taken from the Indian Service.

The major cuts by the House, affecting the Indian Service, were cuts in the appropriations authorized by Congress and allowed by the Budget for making the Wheeler-Howard Act, or Indian Reorganization Act, effective.

Congress authorized the $10,000,000 revolving fund for loans to Indians. The Budget allowed only $5,000,000 of this sum, and the House cut it to $2,500,000. There is at present no credit available to Indians, other than an amount approximating $1.25 per capita per annum, which is loaned them in the form of goods. All other credit to Indians is unauthorized and unsecured. Manifestly, $2,500,000 as a credit fund for the 340,000 Indians is inadequate; $5,000,000 should be the minimum sum appropriated. Inasmuch as the Indians cannot borrow under the farm-credit system, to deny them this small fund is a positive discrimination, and its practical effect is to drive them to let whites use their resources and to purchase at inflated prices from traders.

Also in this connection, Mr. President, I desire to read from the testimony of Mr. John Collier, Commissioner of the Bureau of Indian Affairs:

As we see the matter, the two and one-half million is grossly inadequate. It is the industrial loan fund for all the Indians, and there is no other, except these infinitesimal reimbursable loans that come to about a dollar per capita a year, a negligible amount. They cannot borrow from any of the ordinary sources of credit, private or governmental.

So that what we are doing here is to institute the credit fund for all of these Indians all over the country, and the only credit fund, and only $2,500,000, is not a generous amount. Ten million dollars would not be an overgenerous amount.

And further on he says:

There are two classes of reimbursable loans, those extended by the Government direct to individual Indians and those extended by tribes to their members. In the reimbursable loans extended to individual Indians direct I would think that the record is not discreditable, but it is not brilliant. We get repayments. Ultimately we get full repayment, but it lags for years and years. When we get to the tribal loans to the individual members of the tribes, where there is local responsibility for collecting loans, when a delinquency inflicts an immediate injury upon one's neighbors, there we get excellent results.

In the Crow Reservation, for example, we are obtaining substantially a hundred percent collections, because we have organized that loan system upon a local basis, with a credit union arrangement. That is the way we are proposing to organize this credit system.

Senator HAYDEN. The plan is somewhat similar, then, to a local farm-loan association under the Farm Loan Act?

Mr. COLLIER. It is not only similar, but we are adopting the identical methods. We are duplicating that set-up. In the pending Oklahoma bill we duplicate it right down the line.

Again I quote from Mr. Collier:

Now we ask you to restore this appropriation to $5,000,000, the amount which the Budget allowed, and which seemed to us the least that we could hope for. There are 300,000 Indians, or 325,000, and their needs are far in excess of the $5,000,000. We would expect to be able to come back here and demonstrate a greater need and to demonstrate that the loans are being repaid, and thereby to justify an increase up to the $10,000,000 authorized next year.

Mr. President, as I understand, there were two factors which were important in persuading the House committee and the Senate committee not to grant the increase which I have offered in this amendment. One was that prior to the enactment of the Wheeler-Howard Act the collection of loans previously made to Indians was slow; secondly, that the Indians in Oklahoma were not included in the Wheeler-Howard Act, and that therefore a large number of the Indians were eliminated from the consideration of the purview of the Wheeler-Howard Act, and to that extent the committees respectively felt justified in reducing the amount.

I submit, however, that, so far as the first contention is concerned, we are not justified in judging the effective results under the Wheeler-Howard Act until the act shall have had an opportunity to function. And, in the second place, so far as the objection concerning the Indians living in Oklahoma is concerned, there is a bill pending in this body, introduced by the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which will make the Indians in Oklahoma eligible to all the benefits under the Wheeler-Howard Act.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. When this bill was formerly in the House the Oklahoma Indians could not participate in any loan fund, because, as has just been stated, they were not included in the provisions of the Howard-Wheeler Act. Since that time there has been introduced in the Senate and in the House a bill proposing to bring the Oklahoma Indians under the terms of the Wheeler-Howard Act, and another measure which proposes to extend the loan privileges to the Oklahoma Indians.

In the entire country there are about 300,000 Indians. Of that number, 140,000 are in Oklahoma. Because almost one-half of the Indian population were not included under the Wheeler-Howard Act, the House committee saw fit to reduce the item one-half, or to two and one-half million dollars. I have every confidence that had the Oklahoma Indians been under the Wheeler-Howard Act, the committee would have allowed the Budget estimate of $5,000,000.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand the Senator proposes to press that bill, perhaps, for enactment at this session?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. During the past week we had hearings on the bill in the Senate committee. The hearings have been concluded. The subcommittee will make report in the next few days, and the bill will be before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is constant criticism of the achievements which are being made in the effort to bring economic rehabilitation to the Indians of this country. Yet at the first opportunity we have had for an appropriation to make it possible to give the Indians loans in order that they may acquire economic independence, the Congress fails to provide even the amount which the Budget allowed.

All Senators know that the Budget Bureau is very circumspect in its scrutiny of every item of which it approves. We may rest assured that when the Bureau of the Budget errs, it does not err upon the side of providing too generous amounts which it is willing to recommend to the Congress for consideration. As a matter of fact, the Bureau of the Budget has already cut in two the authorization contained in the Wheeler-Howard Act for this laudable purpose.

Mr. President, when we consider the appropriations which are being made for all other purposes, it seems to me there can be no excuse for Congress assuming a niggardly attitude and failing to provide the necessary funds to take this most important forward step in an attempt to bring about the economic rehabilitation of the Indians of the country, to place them upon their own feet, so that they may be self-supporting and self-sustaining. Instead of that, we are providing a meager basis of relief which will accomplish little so far as the future of these wards of the Government is concerned.

I am not criticizing any member of the committee or the committee itself; but it was entirely unjust for the committee to take action upon the basis upon which I understood the action was premised, for the simple reason that until we provide a sufficient amount of money in order that this very important forward step may be taken, we cannot expect any concrete, constructive achievements so far as the Indians of the country are concerned.

I sincerely hope the Senate will adopt this amendment, and that the Indians may have this relatively small amount of money; for, after all, I am only asking for an increase of this loan fund by two and a half million dollars, to bring it up to the amount which the Bureau of the Budget itself authorized.

I do hope the amendment will prevail, and that the Senate will not postpone the beneficial results which I think every person who has given any consideration to the purposes of the Wheeler-Howard Act feels certain will follow, once it has been given an opportunity to function.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the committee listened with great attention to the Secretary of the Interior and to the representations made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There was no desire on the part of the committee to deprive the Indians of the United States of proper access to credit. The prime necessity, however, is for the establishment of suitable organizations to make that credit available, because experience has shown that in the past loans made to individual Indians and loans even to groups of Indians have not been repaid. The Indians have accepted such loans either as gifts or have been exceedingly slow in making repayments.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has apparently developed an excellent plan, which is to establish local credit unions, and have local responsibility with respect to making and collecting such loans, just as is provided in the Federal Farm Loan Act. Yet all such local organizations remain to be created, and they will be created not out of this appropriation, which carries the money to be loaned, but out of the appropriation of $150,000 provided for in the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

The House appropriated $100,000 for that purpose. If the Oklahoma Indians are to come in under the Wheeler-Howard Act and to obtain the benefit of this credit, the additional $50,000 will permit them to organize credit unions in that State. If the Indians are properly organized and in condition to obtain the loans, Congress will meet again next winter and can then make the necessary appropriation.

Let me say to the Senate that two and a half million dollars, while it is spoken of as a small sum, is a substantial amount of money, and a much larger sum of money than has ever heretofore been available to the Indians for credit purposes. The judgment of the Committee on Appropriations was sound. Let the Indian Bureau use the $150,000 to organize these local credit unions. Let that Bureau take two and a half million dollars and see what can be accomplished from now until the next session of Congress. If substantial progress shall be made, the Budget can again submit to Congress an estimate, and Congress can then make an additional appropriation for a revolving loan fund.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I agree with the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Complaint is always made every time the Interior Department appropriation bill comes up about the amount of money being spent for the Indians. The amount appropriated for the Indian Bureau has been cut down materially, I think by at least $500,000, during the past few years. If we are going to cut down the expenses of the Indian Bureau, we shall have to give the Indians a chance to be self-supporting.

The purpose of this amendment, increasing the amount of money available for loaning to the Indians, is to give them a chance to make good, to become self-sustaining. It will apply especially to the younger groups of Indians, those who have no money with which to start, no money with which to do anything. If they can obtain loans and secure a start in growing livestock or something else, they can be made self-supporting.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator will admit, however, that the RECORD shows that merely loaning money to Indians is not the whole object to be accomplished. Making a loan to somebody, getting somebody into debt without proper arrangements or safeguards for repayment, may be a positive detriment to the Indians. The Indian Service proposes to go about the matter in a new way by organizing local Indian credit unions. That is the new thought. If the plan proves to be practical I shall join with the Senator and help to obtain all that is authorized to be appropriated by the Wheeler-Howard Act. But there must be a showing that the new system does result in repayments; that the Indians do not consider the money a mere gift, as they have in the past.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is all very true. The loaning of money to the Indians alone does not make them successful, any more than it does in the case of the average white person; but the Senator from Arizona will admit, too, that there are Indians in his State who are self-sustaining because they have been able to finance themselves in the purchase of sheep and goats.

I believe that the Indians in general throughout the Nation can be made self-sustaining if they are given a chance to finance themselves, of course, under proper supervision. That has been one trouble in the past. I believe that under the Wheeler-Howard Act there will be better supervision than there ever has been in the past. The Department, I know, is honestly interested in putting the Indians on a basis that will make them self-sustaining. For that reason, its seems to me, they are entitled to more money than is appropriated by the pending bill.

It seems to me the Indians, as wards of the Government, are entitled to more consideration and better consideration than they have had in the past. I am satisfied that under the new bill the great bulk of the Indians will make good if given an opportunity; so I am strongly in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

I do not question, as I stated a moment ago, the sincerity of the committee; but the committee sets up its judgment against that of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who, after a very careful study of this whole question and after convincing the Bureau of the Budget that the Indians were entitled to a $5,000,000 loan fund and that it should be recommended, have come to the conclusion that it is in keeping with the financial program of the administration and that the Indians can make good use of $5,000,000.

Under those circumstances, with all due respect to the Senator from Arizona and all the other Senators on the committee, I prefer, as an individual Senator, to take the judgment of those who, I submit, are more familiar with this whole problem than can be the Senator from Arizona or any other Senator on the committee, no matter how hard they may work.

I do not mean to imply by my reference to the comparative size of this increase of two and a half million dollars that I am not just as conscious of the fact that two and a half million dollars is a large amount of money as is the Senator from Arizona or any other Senator. However, what I said was that, compared with the appropriations made for other purposes, the two and a half million dollars which I suggest as an increase in this loan fund, in order that we may make a sincere and genuine effort to bring about the economic rehabilitation of these wards of the Government who have been so shabbily treated all during past history, is a small amount. We are spending hundreds of millions of dollars for battleships and for national defense; but this is an item of only two and a half million dollars' increase in the loan fund which I plead for on the basis that these 325,000 wards of the Government should be given the benefits of generous treatment upon the part of Congress and enthusiastic endorsement of the constructive legislation embodied in the Wheeler-Howard Act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] are detained by illness.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily detained.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] has a general pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

I also desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is necessarily absent, and that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is detained from the Senate, attending a funeral.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. MCNARY (after having voted in the affirmative). I recall that I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] and permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 54, as follows:

YEAS—19

Black	Frazier	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Johnson	Norris	Vandenberg

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I entered the Chamber just as my name was being reached in the roll call, and I did not understand the question. I was informed that the committee reporting the bill was opposed to the pending amendment, and I voted "no" with the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, before the bill is passed, may I ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Is the Senator from Arizona satisfied that the bill, through authorized appropriations, adequately takes care of the Bureau of Mines as a scientific agency, and that it will serve the wide-spread demand for increased activities, particularly in metalliferous mining in this country?

Mr. HAYDEN. The committee did not allow all the Bureau asked, but did allow a substantial sum, so apportioned among the various activities of the Bureau that we believe it can properly function.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. NYE, and Mr. STEIWER conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas permit me to make a brief statement?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Twice today I have given notice of my intention to move at the earliest practicable moment that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 24, which is designed to assure persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], our able Democratic leader, has advised me that he has given some assurances to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] that an important measure introduced by the Senator from Alabama would come up immediately following the bill which has just been disposed of. I am likewise advised by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the able leader on the Republican side of the Chamber.

At this moment, in view of the assurances given to the Senator from Alabama, I wish merely to renew the notice heretofore given by stating that at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Alabama, if the Senate shall vote to have that measure taken up now, I shall move the consideration of Senate bill 24. It is my understanding that neither the Senator from Arkansas nor the Senator from Oregon is disposed to interpose objections to having a vote taken on that motion.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, referring to the statement just made by the Senator from Colorado, I recognize his right to move the consideration of any bill on the calendar when the situation of the business of the Senate permits. I appreciate his action in not attempting to get the floor at this time to make the motion he has given notice he intends to make.

There are some amendments which I think should be considered in connection with the so-called "antilynching bill", and, out of order, I ask leave now to tender the amendments, and to have them printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request is granted, and it is so ordered.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, my purpose in rising was to move the present consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

I wish to make only a brief statement in anticipation of the vote on the motion. The motion is being made now with the approval and at the request of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. When the Senator from Alabama introduced the bill, I myself was at work on a draft of a bill looking to the accomplishment of the same purposes sought by Senate bill 2367, which I am now moving to take up for consideration.

The bill is of very great importance. I do not intend to attempt an explanation of its provisions prior to its being taken up by the Senate, but expect that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] first will analyze the bill. If the opportunity shall be afforded I will discuss the measure briefly following the remarks of the Senator from Alabama.

I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the Chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, earlier in the day the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] gave notice on two separate occasions that he would move to take up the bill (S. 24) to assure persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching. The bill is known as the antilynching bill.

That notice creates, under our practice, under our rules, and under our procedure, a priority which cannot be lightly overlooked. Discussing the matter with the Senator who gave the notice, I afterwards passed the word to Senators on this side of the Chamber that the next bill on the calendar to be taken up for consideration would be the antilynching bill, relying upon what is known as the unbroken practice of this body.

I am not going to object to the motion made by the Senator from Arkansas, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Colorado, but I should like to have some status fixed for the antilynching bill. Of course, the Senator from Colorado has the right, as has any other Senator, at any time he may obtain recognition, to move to take up the bill; but inasmuch as on two separate occasions he has stated plainly and definitely that he intended to take action to bring up Senate bill 24, I should like to have a rather definite understanding that when disposition is made of the measure now attempted to have made the unfinished business, Senate bill 24 may be made the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I cannot agree to that order of business for the reason that I have been advised by a number of Senators that they intend to vote against the motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 24 when it shall be made. I think the Senator from Oregon should be content that the Senator from Colorado may make the motion and then the Senate take such action on the motion as it may desire.

Mr. McNARY. I am not asking that the bill be made the unfinished business. I am simply asking that we may have an understanding that the Senator from Colorado shall be recognized for the purpose of making the motion, which is always debatable. That is as far as I am proposing to go.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have stated the Senator from Colorado may make the motion when he takes the floor for that purpose. I do not think it would be competent to bind the Chair to recognize someone to make a motion prior to the making of the motion. I have said that, so far as I am concerned, I shall not interpose any objection to the motion being made.

Mr. McNARY. I do not ask that the Chair shall bind himself. I only seek the cooperation of the able Senator from Arkansas that we may have an opportunity to vote upon the question whether Senate bill 24 shall be made the unfinished business following the disposal of the bill, which he is now asking to have made the unfinished business.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not bind myself to any vote on Senate bill 24. I have stated clearly that, so far as I am concerned, I shall throw no obstruction in the way of the motion being made. I shall reserve absolute freedom of action on the motion and on the bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I desire to make some observations about Senate bill 24. I want to state now, as representing in part the South, that when one studies the bill and its effect he cannot fail to find that it is an open reflection upon the States where the proposed legislation is aimed to operate.

When the bill shall be taken up, the Senate will be thoroughly advised of what has caused the very humiliating necessity of going outside the law at times to vindicate the sanctity of our firesides and the virtue of our women. Senators should not hurry to reflect on the glorious traditions and history of the section to which I belong, beleaguered by influences and forces with which most Senators have not been familiar and with which they have not had to reckon. We went through one bloody war under a misapprehension of the social structure of the country, but with a keen apprehension of the financial and industrial differences.

Mr. President, as one individual—and I am sure that certain of my colleagues will agree with me—I believe the intent is to enact a Federal law which will penalize the South when there has been committed an act beyond the law and by forces which no law can control. Certain acts committed are beyond the reach of any court or jury, in the opinion of any right-thinking man or woman. The virtue of a woman is a thing which should not be displayed in the courts when the criminal is known and has put himself outside and beyond the pale of the law. There have been mistakes made, yes, but we in our sovereign capacity as sovereign States can grapple with the situation as honorable, upright, law-abiding men, and we do not invite the interference of those who know not the bitterness of the trials through which we have had to go.

Senators will find before this bill shall be passed, if it ever shall pass, that the section of the country which has had the problem to face and the humility to suffer will not be inveighed against by those who reck not of the problems involved. Nothing to us is more dear than the purity and sanctity of our womanhood and, so help us God, no one shall violate it without paying the just penalty which should be inflicted upon the beast who invades that sanctity.

It comes with ill grace for any State which does not know the horrors of the problem to come here and invoke the reflection, because that is what it is, which is tantamount to saying that our section of the United States is without law and is barbarous.

Mr. President, this is only the prelude to what will take place when this infamous bill shall be discussed on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No, Mr. President; I desire the floor in my own right.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; and the Senator will want more than that before the bill shall be passed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, with all due respect to the able Senator from South Carolina, I think I ought to say that if the bill now being discussed is a reflection on any part of the country it is for several reasons not to be taken as in any special way a reflection on the notable State from which he comes. One reason is that the Senator's State has itself enacted legislation very similar to that proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and myself.

Another reason is that the latest drive for this type of legislation can be directly traced to tragic events in the State of California in the fall of 1933, when two white youths were lynched at San Jose, Calif. Since then there has been a growing conviction throughout the country that the problem is national, that it calls for a national remedy, and that the proposed legislation which is to be submitted to the Senate is both temperate and wise.

It should be added that the measure which I plan to call up when the bill of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] shall have been considered is supported by great numbers of southern men and women of outstanding character and finest leadership, and that the development of such support in the South is one of the memorable evidences of the value of the present legislative proposal.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am quite sure that there is no section of the United States which more deeply deplores lynching, whenever and under whatever circumstances it may occur, than does the South. I have never been an apologist for lynching and never shall be. In days past, when I have been honored by my people with judicial position, I have taken my own life not only politically but physically in my hands in the effort to give full protection to men who were charged with crime and against whom mob violence was threatened. I would do so again.

I take occasion to say now that this deplorable offense against society probably would be better handled by the States themselves if there were no attempt to interfere with them through Federal legislation. It is worth while considering the question which I now submit.

I rise to express the hope, Mr. President, that this particular bill will not be taken up, or at least disposed of, during this week. For reasons entirely beyond my control, and due to illness in my family, I must leave Washington this afternoon. I cannot hope to return before the end of the week. I would hope that the distinguished Senators who are in charge of this bill would defer its consideration until I could return, because I have not a shadow of doubt in my own mind that the whole scheme is unconstitutional; is not authorized or justified under the Federal Constitution; that if it were justified by the Constitution, we would have broken down every single possible semblance of State sovereignty through the enactment of this kind of legislation. Not because the South has a peculiar interest in this proposed legislation but because it has a just interest in it, I had hoped to be here when the measure was considered, and I again express the hope that the Senators in charge of the bill may not see fit to press it, at least, to a final vote, during this week.

Those of us who believe, as I believe, that this measure is clearly beyond the scope of Federal power certainly have a right to be heard. While we have no right to ask for the postponement of the consideration of any bill merely because we cannot be present upon a particular date, in all the circumstances and in view of the long history of attempted legislation of this kind, it does seem that the consideration of this measure might well be postponed when any Senator in good faith, takes the position that he desires to be heard upon it because of a profound conviction that it is unconstitutional, and, more than that, that the assertion by the Congress of the United States of the constitutionality of this measure completely and ultimately destroys any possibility of the functioning of a dual system of government under our Constitution.

Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss the merits of the proposal at this time or to go into a discussion of any particular provision of the bill, but I again wish to say to those who propose the legislation that had they lived in sections where they may think the crime of lynching is condoned altogether and had they been called upon at the dead hours of the night to stake not only political but physical life for the protection of the humblest of our citizens against a threatened mob, they would understand something of the real attitude of the honest men and women, not only of the South, but of every part of this Nation who do not condone lynching.

We have made marvelous progress in every part of the country in ridding our civilization of this blot, of this offense. Nowhere has greater progress been made than in the South. We will make surer progress if there shall be no attempt through the stretching of the Constitution, through extraconstitutional means and measures, to drive upon a people, already conscious of their obligation and determined to meet their duty, the will and edict of the Federal Congress.

If today I wished to promote the cause against lynching, as I do; if I wish to hasten the day when lynchings would be no more, standing in my place, I should oppose any effort by the Federal Government to resort to extraconstitutional means and measures to enforce upon any section or upon any State or upon all the States the so-called "national will", upon the nebulous theory that the offense itself has become a national evil and a national problem, as if all problems are not, in the final analysis, national. I would rather say that the means we have adopted and the methods we are pursuing are making more certainly for the safety and security of life against mob violence than any that it may be possible to inject by proposed legislation of this character.

Let me say again, Mr. President, that I am no apologist for mob violence. Long ago I set my face like flint against it. I know very well that every act of violence, following the primal law of increase, tends to bring forth seed after its kind. I know very well that a mob, whatever may be the motivating cause, is simply primal humanity in motion; and I know, too, that for the Federal Congress to declare that a State has denied equal protection of the law or due process of the law simply because there has been a failure to prevent mob activities in a given instance, for a Federal act to attempt to define a mob as the concerted unlawful action of three or more persons, is to pursue a course ill-calculated to promote the very purposes of the distinguished Senators who have introduced this bill. On the contrary, such action is calculated to retard those wholesome influences that day by day and year by year and decade after decade have minimized the very evil this bill seeks by its terms to eradicate.

Mr. President, if it be possible so to define a mob within the meaning of the Constitution and to bring into force and play Federal powers upon the flimsy pretext here asserted, then like Federal power may be invoked against kidnaping, against every other conceivable crime in the category when committed by three or more persons; and the State, with all its power of local self-government, must inevitably disappear from the American system if the Supreme Court ever holds legislation of this kind constitutional.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Senate bill 2367.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I shall undertake first to make a statement about the provisions of the bill and then proceed to a brief statement of some of the reasons why the bill should be passed.

In the first place, the bill creates what is known as the "Farmers' Home Corporation", which is to be patterned after the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in its structure and organization features. The bill provides for a board of directors of five members, three to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Governor of the Farm Credit Agency are made ex-officio members of the board. That has been done with a view of coordinating with this organization the Agricultural Department with its agencies and helpfulness on the one side, and the credit agency of the Government, through the Farm Credit Agency, on the other.

The bill provides for the original capital, a minimum of $50,000,000, by authorizing such transfers as the President may see fit to make from the funds provided by the emergency relief act, either from the funds specifically allocated for rural rehabilitation or under any other power given him by the act.

It may be recalled that an amendment offered by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], was incorporated in the emergency relief measure and is now a part of the law, specifically authorizing the President to make transfers and allocations for the very purpose of this bill, in financing farmers, farm tenants, crop-sharers, and farm laborers in acquiring small farm homes. So securing the original cash capital is provided for by law in the event the President should see fit to use it for that purpose.

Then the bill authorizes the issue of $1,000,000,000 of bonds, the principal and interest of which are to be guaranteed by the Government. Such bonds, however, can be issued only with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, so that at all times the continued administration of the program rests in the power of the administration in charge, whether the present or some subsequent administration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do I understand that the President is to be free to use his own discretion in respect to making this subscription, and that if he should conclude not to make it that would terminate the experiment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Unfortunately that is true, as provided. The bill at present does not contain any other burden upon the Treasury than that already placed there, so far as the original capital is concerned. I will say to the Senator, however, that that provision is included in the bill because its author has full confidence—and has good ground, I think, to have it—that the President will make a suitable allocation for this purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The effect of the bill will be really to authorize the issuance of an additional $1,000,000,000 of United States bonds?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true in its long-range application. The bond issue, as I stated, is to be similar to the bond issue authorized in the Home Owners' Loan program and in the Federal land-bank program for the refinancing of agricultural credits.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator happen to have available information as to the present sum-total of guaranteed bonds?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I regret that I have not undertaken to gather those figures for this occasion. However, I desire to call the attention of those who are seriously considering the proposition to the fact that this is expected to be a self-liquidating program. It proposes simply to provide credit facilities to carry out this new homestead idea.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Wherein does this measure create additional facilities beyond those provided by the Farm Loan Act and the act establishing the Federal land banks? They are all authorized to make loans on farms, and to issue bonds to secure money for that purpose. I am wondering just where this new organization fits in.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there is a very fundamental difference between the program now proposed and the Federal land-bank program. I am sure the Senator from Florida, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency which handled that bill, realizes that the Federal land bank, under the authority given it to issue bonds is engaged in saving farms presently owned but under mortgage, by way of renewing the mortgages and giving additional time for payment.

That program was primarily intended for and has been exclusively used for farmers who then and now farmed their own farms, not to enable farms to be acquired but to finance obligations upon farms now owned. Not only that, Mr. President, but the times for repayment of the loans are so entirely different that the programs are in no sense analogous. It is recognized by all the agencies of the Government that have given this matter consideration that the farm-credit agency, under its power and authority, and under the organizations it has built up, is not now in position to handle the program which is provided for in this measure.

I have stated the financial structure of this program. The bill provides for the purchase of small individual farms, preference to be given to farmers, to farm tenants, sharecroppers, farm workers, and those who have had actual experience in farming operations.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I am asking for information which may have been supplied.

I note in the bill that the capital stock is fixed at $50,000,000, and it is provided that such original capital stock "may be subscribed" by the President. My inquiry is, in the event the President should not see fit to make the subscription, how does the bill provide that the capital is to be furnished?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is very frankly recognized that unless the President shall be sympathetic with this program it will not be administered.

Mr. ADAMS. Then the bill is dependent upon the election of the President to make use of the relief fund in order to provide the capital?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true; and not only in respect to the capital, but also with regard to bond issue, for it is provided in this bill, as it is in the Home Owners' Loan Act and in the Federal Land Bank Act, that the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury is necessary for the issuance of bonds, which at all times puts the financing of those programs under the control of the administration. So, unless the President is sympathetic with the program and disposed to see it put in operation and continued in operation, I very frankly state that it will not be put into operation. Such action will be the equivalent of a veto on his part.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Was the Treasury Department represented in the hearings before the committee? Did it pass upon the general question of the effect of a billion dollars additional of guaranteed bonds?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the Treasury Department was not brought into the question at all.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is there any report from the Treasury Department respecting that aspect of the matter?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The matter was not referred to the Treasury Department.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that this bill contemplates the acquisition of real estate and personal property, and so forth, for the purpose of carrying on the project.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not a single project, but a number of individual projects; that is true.

Mr. BORAH. I mean the scheme.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Is the manner by which those properties are to be acquired described in section 4, on page 8?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is one part of it; yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. Where is the other part that covers it? This part says:

> In carrying out the provisions and purposes of this act, to enter into contracts and to acquire, by purchase, gift, or otherwise—

What does the term "otherwise" mean there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator refer to the methods of acquisition?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Does it mean acquire by condemnation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, sir; and if the Senator from Idaho desires to make that specific, I will accept an amendment to that effect at any time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there may be, and doubtless are, many persons who would be willing to contribute large areas of land for this purpose. I think I know some who would be anxious to do that; and the language used in that particular seems to me to be very appropriate to the purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I do not object to the acquisition of land and personal property by purchase or gift; but the word "otherwise" might mean the power to condemn. It must mean some method other than purchase or gift.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the language is used to cover any voluntary donations that might be made by philanthropists or others who are interested in this program. It is expressly stated to the Senator from Idaho that there is no thought of condemnation; and if the Senator has any doubt on that score—certainly no authority to condemn is given here—I have no objection to a provision making it clear that condemnation is not authorized or contemplated.

As I was proceeding to state, the bill is intended to aid farm workers, primarily tenants and other farm workers, to acquire family-sized farms. It authorizes, where necessary, the purchase in addition to the land of livestock, farm equipment, and implements, to become a part of the purchase price of the farm. Payments are authorized to be amortized for a period as long as 60 years, with as low a rate of interest as the Government can secure the money for. I have an amendment to clarify the provision regarding interest which I shall offer later. The amendment provides that the purchasers are to have as low a rate of interest as that for which the Government can secure the money, plus a reasonable charge for administration, not to exceed 1 percent.

It is further provided that, so far as practicable, the operations of this program shall be conducted so as to avoid an expansion of production of crops where the prices are now at a parity level. In short, Mr. President, it is intended, so far as possible, to leave farm workers, so far as it may be properly done, in the communities and in the settlements where they are now working the farms of absentee landholders.

As we all know, one of the great evils of the tenancy system is the constant moving of tenants from one farm, one community, one county, or one State to others. There is no thought here of any general shifting of population. There is no idea of doing anything that is not wanted both by the present landowner and by the farm worker. The primary purpose is to leave the farm workers, so far as possible, upon the farms where they now reside, or, where proper land cannot be so acquired, to let them go where it may be acquired, and then to set up a permanent residence and home ownership.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have just been able for the first time to see the bill. I inquire if there is any provision in the bill for amortization of the loans?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, sir; not to exceed 60 years.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator means that the loans may run for 60 years?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. But there is no provision fixing the amount of amortization annually?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That, of course, if left to administration. When the period of amortization shall have been adopted, I assume they will naturally put it upon an annual basis in equal amounts.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a further question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has been describing farm tenancy. May I ask if this bill applies largely to the cotton section? Is this essentially a cotton problem, or is it essentially a national problem?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am very glad, indeed, that the Senator has asked me that question. I had intended, of course, coming to it. I send to the clerk's desk and ask to have read by the clerk a table showing by States, beginning with the highest figure and going to the lowest, the percentage of all farms in the United States operated exclusively by tenants.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that would be very valuable information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Percentage of all farms operated by tenants, 1930 census

	Percent
Mississippi	72.2
Georgia	68.2
Louisiana	66.6
South Carolina	65.1
Alabama	64.7
Arkansas	63.0
Oklahoma	61.5
Texas	60.9
North Carolina	49.2
Iowa	47.3
Nebraska	47.1
Tennessee	46.2
South Dakota	44.6
Illinois	43.1
Kansas	42.4
Kentucky	35.9
North Dakota	35.1
Missouri	34.8
Colorado	34.5
Delaware	33.3
Minnesota	31.1
Indiana	30.1
Florida	28.4
Virginia	28.1
Maryland	26.5
Ohio	26.3
Idaho	25.3
Montana	24.5
Wyoming	22.0
New Mexico	20.2
West Virginia	18.6
Wisconsin	18.2
California	18.0
Oregon	17.8
Washington	17.0
Arizona	16.4
Pennsylvania	15.9
New Jersey	15.6
Michigan	15.5
New York	13.2
Nevada	12.9
Rhode Island	12.5
Utah	12.2
Vermont	9.7
Connecticut	6.2
Massachusetts	5.6
New Hampshire	5.3
Maine	4.5

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the statement seems to indicate that the major problem is a cotton problem. Is that a fair assumption?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should not say so, by any means. The percentage of tenancy is heavier in some of the cotton States than in some others; but if the Senator will observe the situation in the West and East and North Central States he will find the percentage of tenancy about as high as it is in the Southern States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Would it be fair to assume that in the operation of the proposed corporation the bill would apply, generally speaking, about in ratio as indicated by the tenancy figures?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Permit me to say to the Senator from Michigan that, so far as my purpose and desires are concerned, this is contemplated as a new national homestead program, for the benefit equally of every tenant, wherever he may live in the United States. Permit me to say to the Senator with all the earnestness of my soul that, while this program, of course, is greatly needed in the Southern States, we have no thought on earth of its being a local southern program. I desire to have it apply from Maine to California. I desire to have it apply in any State in the Union where there is a tenant worthy to be placed upon a farm, and who desires to be so placed. I should not think of proposing a program for the benefit of a few States alone; and when the Senator observes the situation in North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, and the other States, especially in that particular section of the country, he will observe that there is as great a need for it there as in any State in the Cotton Belt.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator misunderstood the purport of my inquiry. I had no thought of suggesting the objective to which the Senator is addressing himself was sectional. My thought was that inasmuch as the resources are relatively small compared to the extent of the national problem, the perfectly natural net result would be to concentrate in the beginning at the points where the problem is of major challenge.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that I have very grave doubt, from the appointments heretofore made, whether there will be a southern member of the board. The board is to be selected by the President. There will be a western man and an eastern man on the board, the two already selected as ex-officio members of the board, so that with that start it seems perfectly clear that no sectional program is contemplated.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I repeat that I am not suggesting that a sectional program is contemplated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will understand that there is no likelihood of such a thing. Certainly no one desires it, and the very machinery, as I have indicated, discloses in the beginning that there is no thought of such a program. The only two selected are one a western and the other an eastern man, and, of course, in a program of this sort, which is nationally so greatly needed, the President, whoever he might be, would set up a board which would give a national administration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the problem did concentrate to a larger degree in the South, there is no reason in the world why it should not have that larger degree of attention where it concentrates, and I am not complaining of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I frankly stated that, judging by the percentage of tenants, it is more greatly needed in the southern than in many other sections of the country, but in comparison there is not much difference between the Southern States and the States in the Central West which I have mentioned.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. It is impossible to judge of the number of people who would be benefited by the bill, if enacted, by the mere percentages mentioned, by reason of the fact that some of the States which have the highest percentage of tenants have the smallest populations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. BLACK. Some of them which have a smaller percentage of tenants have a far larger population.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In 1930 the average of all farms in the United States operated by tenants was 42.4 percent, nearly half. While we have not the accurate figures, it is well known, not only to observers but to the agencies of the Government, that, unfortunately, there has been a tremendous increase in the percentage of tenancy since the census of 1930.

This condition has been brought about by two situations: In the first place, a great many people were drawn from the farms by the lure of industry during the boom days. When production declined, when employment in industry decreased, they found their way back to some location on farms somewhere, not as owners but as tenants or croppers or laborers upon the farm.

In the next place, and more heartbreaking than that, have been the developments growing out of the loss in purchasing power by the tillers of the soil. We know that during the years from 1925 to 1930 farm values were very greatly inflated. We know that many farmers bought farms upon those high valuations. We know that many farmers borrowed money and placed mortgages upon their farms for improvement purposes and other purposes; and then, when the great fall in the prices of their commodities occurred, when their purchasing power almost disappeared, as Senators from agricultural States upon this floor well understand, by the thousands the farmers were driven by foreclosure from their own farms, or, if permitted to remain on them, were converted from farm owners into tenants, renters from their former mortgagees.

The percentage of tenancy unfortunately has been growing since 1880, 50 years ago, and with great acceleration, resulting from the depression. With probably more than half of the farms now operated by tenants, I submit to the Senate that there is no graver or more fundamental problem confronting us than to meet that situation fairly and squarely and in a fundamental way, and to do what we can do to bring about a new group and a new class of home-owning and home-loving farmers in this country.

Mr. President, many foreign countries undertook to solve this program years ago. Some 50 years ago in Ireland nearly all the farms were owned by landlords. There is Denmark, which now has become one of the most prosperous agricultural nations in the world, starting nearly 50 years ago with no small farm owners, with a class of landlords owning all the land, and a group of workers toiling upon the land. Finally a system similar to that now proposed here was inaugurated by the Danish Government, and all over that little country the farmers now operate through their cooperative agencies, sending their farm products out to the world, and even going into the markets of London with their own ships.

I say, Mr. President, that no country can continue to survive with such a large proportion of its agricultural workers moving from their farms, as it is shown in the hearings they move every 2 or 3 years, and with the number growing. That is an economic waste.

A tenant working for an absentee landlord, some mortgage company or some bank which has acquired the property under foreclosure—and the Federal land banks have much of it—has no incentive to protect the soil, to prevent soil erosion, to work in the interest of soil preservation and conservation. Such tenants have no incentive to keep their buildings in condition and to erect new ones.

Many of us know that practically all of the benefits which have come to the prosperous farmers have been through accretions, from their building up their farms year after year, thereby giving them more value, as a result of soil conservation, and the improvements upon them, building up larger herds of stock and cattle in the natural order of things, by accretion. A tenant cannot do that. He does not know this year what farm he will occupy next year. So that there is a great economic waste.

Then think of the social problems involved in the case of a man with a family, who recognizes that even in a few years, under the average conditions, he must move on into some other community. His wife cannot take the same interest in church and social organizations. When the children move, they get out of touch with their schoolmates. It means a general break-up of the social order, with no stability on the part of the tenant and his family.

I say, therefore, that it is high time that the United States should face this problem as foreign countries have been doing. A hundred years or more ago we recognized the value of farm ownership. Our Government owning all the public land in the country, Congress passed the homestead law—the "bit" law, as it was sometimes called—and other laws, making it easy for farmers to establish homes of their own upon the soil. Unfortunately, proper protection was not afforded in the law for the preservation of such home ownership, and as the result of speculation, of fluctuation in prices, and for other reasons, many of those homes have gone into the hands of others, and are now worked by sharecroppers and tenants.

Mr. President, there are other Senators who desire to discuss this program and I shall not take more time now.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he concludes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BLACK. As I understand, the bill also offers an opportunity for an experiment which many have thought should be made. The bill does not limit assistance to those who have been working at share-cropping and as tenants.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it does not.

Mr. BLACK. But, giving a preference to those who are married and have dependent families, who are unemployed, and who have the ability to farm, it would offer to deserving men the opportunity to acquire farms, and an attempt would be made to settle this problem in that way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. BLACK. I think the Senator might well mention that in order that it may be understood the bill is not limited to share-croppers and tenant farmers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall cover that matter and endeavor to make it clear to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is also my understanding that the bill is not confined in its provisions to those who happen now to be tenants or share-croppers, but those who have lost out in the depression and may find themselves at the present moment unable to make arrangements for continuation of their activities as tenants and share-croppers would also be eligible.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall read section (b) on page 9 in support of the Senator's contention. There is no limitation in the bill to any class of people who may acquire farms. Nothing is inserted except the preference, and as to the preference I call the Senator's attention to paragraph (b), on page 9, reading as follows:

(b) Preference shall be given applicants who are married or who have dependent families, have good moral character, and are experienced in farming and familiar with farm operations, or who are or recently were farmers, farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers.

There is really no limitation of any sort in the bill, but a preference is expressed for those who have had that sort of experience which would lead us to believe they are more likely to be able to retain ownership.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer another interruption?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is also my understanding that the bill safeguards the ownership of the person who is benefited under the terms of the bill and therefore would prevent the same thing happening which happened under our homestead laws. In other words, as I understand, they are not going to be permitted to alienate the property for some considerable period of time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is correct about that, and I regard it as a fundamental phase of the program.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I agree with the Senator on that point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I ask the Senator whether the purpose of the measure is to increase, if possible, the ownership of land by the small farmers?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the sole object of it, to enable farmers of some kind, who do not now own their own farms, to become owners of farms.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it intended to be operative throughout the United States?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sorry the Senator was not here when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] asked that question. Of course, it is a broad national program, just as broad as the old, original homestead laws.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is aware, I have no doubt, that various proposals are being made from time to time, one at least of which was enacted into law during the past session, which tend to put an end for all time to homesteading upon the public domain.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I really have not followed the laws which have chief application to the Western States. Government land in my section of the country has all been homesteaded, so I have really not followed in detail the legislation on that subject, which had special application to the Western States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I rather gathered from what the Senator said that he believes in the principle that the land should pass into private ownership.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That principle has my absolute support. That is where the ownership ought to be, in my judgment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is likewise in principle opposed to the establishment of a vast Federal overlordship with respect to the land resources of the country; is he?

Mr. BANKHEAD. What I want to do here is to provide that wherever there is a worthy, dependable tenant or farm worker, or a farmer who has lost his home, whether in Wyoming, Nebraska, New Mexico, New England, or in the South, he shall be given an opportunity, through the credit facilities to be provided, to establish or reestablish himself in a home of his own selection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Wherever that land may be?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; wherever it may be, leaving it entirely to the purchaser to determine, provided, of course, the Government can acquire the land on proper terms and on such terms as that the purchaser can afford to assume the obligation and in time to pay it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If an amendment were offered to the bill to provide that such homes may be established upon the public domain, it would not be contrary to the theory of the Senator's bill, would it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will not burden the program with a local controversial subject. I hope he will not do that. Let us go ahead with this program without injecting an issue which might tend to develop division among people in his section of the country or among people interested in other lines, and which does not concern this particular farm program.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have gathered from what the Senator said that he is more or less opposed to allowing the land to fall into the ownership of a limited number of people and that he feels that the greater the distribution of ownership the better it will be for the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no doubt about that in my mind. If there had been any such doubt, the bill would not have been sponsored by me.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That would apply to the Government as well as to any class or group of individuals?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It applies everywhere. What we need is more individual home ownership. We have 6,500,000 farmers in the United States, nearly half of them drifting from year to year, hunting a place to roost, so to speak, at the end of the year. Farm ownership is what we need. Wherever the land may be properly acquired we need to establish these roving men and women in homes of their own—"Mine! Mine!"—so they will feel that way about it. That is my philosophy about the proposed program. I have looked upon this, as I have often expressed it to friends, as a program in favor of the underdog in agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am quite in sympathy with everything the Senator has said about the ownership of land. I am wondering, however, if the bill before us is sufficiently broad to protect against liens which may be created either voluntarily or involuntarily. I note the provision "that if liens are created, the entire indebtedness shall thereupon become due and payable." Is there any other provision which will prevent creating liens against the land after it is purchased from the Corporation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Two methods of procedure are permissible under the bill. One is for the corporation to hold title to the land, if it sees fit, until it has been completely paid for. Under such a program, with a long amortization period and with the title virtually in the Government, of course, the purchaser could not create a valid lien upon the property.

There is authority, whether express or implied, after some substantial proportion of the purchase price has been paid, the proportion to be fixed by the corporation, for the corporation to make a deed subject to the unpaid balance of the mortgage. That feature of the bill was deemed desirable. In that event, when the purchaser reaches the point where the title lies in him, it is provided in the bill that the creation of any lien, either voluntarily, as by making a mortgage or other property lien, or involuntarily, as by permitting a tax lien to lie, then the corporation shall have the right to take the property back. That is the only protection I conceive that can be given. It is notice and warning to all creditors of that man not to try in any way to impose upon him, not to try in any way to get a claim or lien upon his home, because if they do here stands the strong arm of the Government, with power retained under the provisions of the bill to declare the whole mortgage due and thereby to take back the property unless the obligation shall have been paid in full.

Frankly, I do not know any better way. I am exceedingly anxious to protect these beginners in home ownership, most of them doubtless new to the farming business or farm management, from being taken advantage of in a way by speculators or by designing traders. If the Senator has any well-thought-out plan which would give them more protection than is provided in the bill, first by the reservation of title in the Government and then, as against involuntary or voluntary action at a later time, by power to declare the mortgage due, I hope the Senator will present it, because he must see how I feel on the subject.

Mr. HATCH. I am sure the Senator is quite correct. My observation was called forth by the fact that in the western section of the country I have seen homesteaders go out and live on lands throughout the entire homestead period of 5 years without creating liens on the land, because they could not do so under the Federal law prior to final proof. After final proof and after issuance of patent I have seen liens created, and those homesteads lost within a few months. I should like to see this bill guard against such a contingency as that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The bill gives the power, of course, to the board simply by reserving title in the Government.

Mr. HATCH. That would be better, in my opinion, than simply making it possible to declare the entire indebtedness due and payable.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have power, as I conceive, to give all the protection that can possibly be given under any reasonable administration.

Mr. President, I do not want to take further time. There are other Senators who have very definite views upon this proposed program. Permit me, however, briefly to call attention to some of the endorsers of this bill who are not Members of Congress.

Since the news went out about the introduction of the bill covering this program it has received the most widespread approval throughout the country from all classes of people, from the tenant farmer and the present farm owner on up, from colleges, from students of sociology, from patriotic citizens and educators.

I wish to read a brief statement made by Dr. George Foster Peabody, one of the great educators and philanthropists of the country, who has given 50 years of his life to the promotion of the cause of education, devoting to it his means and his time. He is now 83 years old, but when he heard about this bill he came out of his old-age retirement and from Warm Springs, Ga., issued this statement:

I have no doubt but what this new tenant bill if passed and properly administered will help to remake many of our agricultural sections. What we need in America is more home owners and fewer tenants. Change a tenant to a home owner and you plant the seed of stability and permanency. You lift the social, economic, and moral standards of the community. You change indifference to interest and shiftlessness to thrift. In short, you remake both the individual and the community. That is undoubtedly the reason the churches are supporting the measure. They see in it a program of more homes instead of merely places to stop a while. And the home is the backbone of our civilization. It is what the churches and the schools build on, and it is these things that have made America what it is today.

I will read a statement from Mr. William Green quoted from an article in the New York Times:

The American Federation of Labor departed from its long-established policy of limiting its activities strictly to problems directly affecting labor and endorsed today the Bankhead bill, designed to rehabilitate approximately 10,000,000 share croppers and tenant farmers, Negro and white.

This endorsement was made known by William Green, president of the Federation, in the following words:

"I have given special consideration to the Bankhead bill. We are in hearty accord with this proposed legislation and gladly extend all assistance and help possible in any effort which may be put forth to secure its enactment into law."

Mr. Samuel Crea Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, gave out this statement:

As a result of studies made by its department of research and education the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has become actively interested in the problem of tenancy, particularly in certain of the Southern States. The more extensive studies made under the direction of the committee on minority groups in the economic recovery have intensified that interest and created a conviction that constructive measures should be taken for settling destitute tenants upon land of their own and making it possible for them to become self-sustaining. The present plight of the share tenant and share cropper seems to us to be one which must enlist the alert sympathy of all people of humanitarian sympathies.

I, therefore, am eager to see the Bankhead bill enacted into law. While not undertaking to pass judgment upon the more technical aspects of this measure, its objectives will certainly commend themselves to thoughtful Christian people of all denominations and in all parts of the country.

Dr. Edgar Schmiedeler, director of the rural life bureau of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, has given full endorsement to this bill.

Mr. President, I wish now to read a communication which reached me just 2 or 3 days ago from the wife of a tenant farmer in Georgia. It is an effort, though in crude poetic form, to express the ambition and the heart throbs of a humble woman, and I hope Senators will listen to it. The poem is headed "A Home-Loving Tenant", and reads as follows:

Oh, Mr. BANKHEAD, I've always wanted a home,
But over the country I've had to roam.
We've rented land here, we've rented land there,
In fact, we have lived just anywhere.

We have farmed on halves and hired, you know,
And there's never enough money or clothes to sew.
When the grocery bill is paid no money is left.
We are most naked, I'm barefoot myself.

Willie, a young man fourteen right now,
He can cut wood, saw, clear land, and plow;
He's got no britches, he's outgrowed them, see,
Old overalls so ragged, it's a sight to see.

He loves a mule and works like a man,
He's smart and works all he can;
He works from early 'till it's quite dark,
He'd work like a mule to get us a start.

Next a little girl, six, named Louise,
Sweet little girl, as bright as you please;
She can wash dishes, sweep, and dust,
Tend the babies, rock them, and fuss.

And there is Max, he's just three,
A cute little tyke, as noisy as can be.
He can cry, scream, holler, or bawl—
Do anything he can to start up a squall.

And last, but not least, are the twins,
To look at those children would make you grin;
Rachel the girl, and Sidney the boy—
We all love the twins, they are such a joy.

Daddy works hard at anything he can do,
It takes a lot to keep grub to chew;
We are trying to teach our children to love God,
To be honest, good-natured, and work the sod.

We don't crave riches or great wealth,
But just a few acres and lots of good health;
A five-room house we can call home,
So over the land we won't have to roam.

I want a front porch and one in the back,
A big pantry with lots of shelves well stacked,
A smokehouse for the lard and meat
When the hogs are killed, and meat to eat;
Sausages are canned and hams sugar-cured,
Lard in cans, and it's all pure.

Lots of chickens, turkeys, and ducks;
A house for Rhode Islands, a pen for hogs;
A barn for two cows, old Cherry and Tip;
A dog in the yard, little feist named Gyp.

There are two mules and a wagon, too;
The wheels are red and the bed is blue.
In the shed are tools to farm the land,
God over all and daddy a Christian man.

We'd be up by three in the morn,
The garden to hoe and plow the corn;
Flowers to plant, weeds to hoe,
Clothes to wash, and things to sew.

Oh, what a joy this all would be,
A happier family you'd never see;
On Sunday morn to church we'd go
To worship God as best we know.

What a busy, happy life this family would lead
Being a neighbor and help someone in need.
We are in need and know how heavy the load,
So we'd try to help someone else along the road.

So, Mr. Senator, do the best you can,
You are trying to do more for us than most any man;
Fix it so a poor tenant can get a loan
To buy a little place he can call home.

—Mrs. Z. M. Cooper.

ARMUCHEE, GA., April 10, 1935.

Mr. President, that appeal from the heart of that woman, crude, as I said, though it may be in poetic form and in language, really tells the whole story involved in this program. Those of us here may differ, and do differ, in political philosophy; we may differ and do differ in political allegiance; but there is one subject on which I know we are in full accord and that subject is the value of home ownership. Mr. President, we all know that no poem ever written and no song ever sung so truly expresses the longing and the craving and the emotions of the human heart as the old song "Home, Sweet Home."

It is my judgment, Mr. President, that this bill carries more values in the long run—economic, social, moral, spiritual, educational, citizenship values—than any other legislation in which I have ever been interested, and I sincerely hope that, without a dissenting vote the Senate may pass this measure, put it on the way to become a part of the law of the country, and thereby hold out hope to a great mass of our industrial workers, many of whom are destitute, many of whom are in despair, moving, moving here and there.

Mr. President, by this measure we can give them some hope of stability in their homes. So, I hope the Senate will proceed without any real controversy to pass the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will turn to the top of page 6, I should like to refer to the sentence which reads:

The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, its loans and income, and its real and personal property shall likewise be exempt from such taxation—

"Such taxation" referring to any property taxation by the United States or any subdivision. Then I ask the Senator to turn to the top of page 12, where the bill provides:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property acquired and held by the Corporation, or held by any purchasers from the Corporation, from taxation by any State—

And so forth. I am unable to harmonize the two provisions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They cannot be harmonized, I will say to the Senator from Michigan. His keen mind has promptly developed a conflict which I will cure by amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. A moment ago we were discussing the question of liens, and I ask the Senator to turn to section 6 on page 11. It has occurred to me that under the provisions of the bill as it is now drawn the burdens are all placed upon the landowner who may make a transfer, or give a mortgage, or create a lien against the land. I know that it is often not the fault of the owner of the land. He is induced to give a mortgage. He becomes indebted, and the creditor induces him to give a mortgage or give a deed or an assignment, and thus secures control of the property. I believe it might be more effective in reaching the ends the Senator desires if there should be inserted the word "mortgage" after the word "assignment" in the clause on line 8 of page 11, which reads:

If any sale, lease, transfer, assignment—

And so forth. Would such an amendment meet the Senator's approval?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Following the insertion the language is:

Or conveyance of any such property is made without such written consent——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the other section covers the matter, where it provides for the creation of a lien, which, of course, a mortgage does. I think it is already covered.

Mr. HATCH. But this is the language I desire to insert after the word "consent":

Such sale, lease, transfer, or assignment shall be void.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that. I desire to protect these people.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator, as a good lawyer, think that such a provision would be valid as against the laws of the State, under which title to real estate has always been determined?

Mr. HATCH. I think that such a provision would be perfectly valid in this bill. In this measure the Congress has the right to include any condition it desires in making these contracts.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator think Congress has the power to exempt from a man's debts his property in spite of the State law?

Mr. HATCH. I think where Congress grants a man privileges under this bill Congress may make a condition of the conveyance of land that no lien shall be created against it.

Mr. ADAMS. This is a corporation which is to make the sale, not the United States Government. I can understand that when the title to the public land was in the United States the Government was able to impose exemptions as to it; but here is a corporation which proposes to buy property from private individuals, and then to seek to impose an exemption from the debts of the persons to whom they sell the property. Practically every State in the United States has homestead laws. In my State people can be protected by filing a homestead statement on the records up to $2,000 in value. So in most States the machinery is already provided. Personally, I am unable to concur with the Senator's theory—I concede that I am probably wrong—that the Congress can exempt real estate in a State from the application of the laws of the State.

Mr. HATCH. I will say that the Senator from Colorado is probably correct instead of probably being wrong. My thought is, however, that Congress has the power to include this provision. I should like to see it included, at any rate, and let the courts say whether or not it is a lawful provision. I do not believe there will be much trouble as a result of taking mortgages on land of that sort if such a provision is included in the bill which provides for those mortgages. I think it will have a very salutary effect, whether the provision shall be held valid or otherwise.

Mr. ADAMS. Suppose the purchaser wishes to obtain a loan from the Federal land bank for some purpose, when under the proposed provision a lien secured by a mortgage would be void.

Mr. HATCH. Not so, Mr. President. He could obtain the written consent which the bill provides, and the mortgage would be good under those circumstances. I am quite sure from my experience that the Federal land bank would not make any unwise loan or lose any money under such circumstances.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am quite sure that so long as the title is in the Government no lien can be created on the property anyway.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is providing, however, alternative methods, one of which would be a conveyance, the indebtedness to be secured by mortgage. In that case there would be a title in the purchaser, but it would be subject, of course, to the mortgage.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We must bear in mind that a mortgage is a conveyance, an alienation of title, and subject to defeasance, and is, therefore, covered by the language of the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. But the amendment which the Senator from New Mexico suggests would forbid any second mortgage or any assignment being put upon the equity, regardless of the advantage that it might be to the holder of the property.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in sympathy with the Senator's amendment. I desire to protect these people from liens. I wish to preserve their homes against liens.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Alabama, I will offer an amendment, on page 11, line 10, after the word "consent", to insert "such sale, lease, transfer, or assignment or conveyance of any such property shall be void."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think that would be in the appropriate place, because in line 10 there is an alternative, "or if any property is abandoned." I think the Senator would have to put it at the end of that section. Following the Senator's proposed amendment the provision would read:

Or if any property is abandoned the Corporation may declare—

And so forth. The Senator is putting two declarations in the same sentence, one of which is the declaration that an action is void and the other providing for installments becoming due and payable.

Mr. HATCH. I do not wish to suggest the amendment unless it meets with the approval of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the provision has been properly prepared. It has been submitted to the legislative drafting service and the attorneys, and has been gone over by them. Those particularly interested in this phase of the subject have gone over the provisions, and I think it amply protects those whom it seeks to protect.

Mr. HATCH. I know the Senator has in mind the same thing that I have. I have not given to the bill the study that he has, and unless he will accept the amendment I shall not offer it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would rather not have the Senator offer his amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Very well; I shall not offer it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Alabama a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. PITTMAN. Does the question just discussed relate to section 6 on page 11?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I read section 6, it does not affect an involuntary sale directed by a court for a debt.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No.

Mr. PITTMAN. In effect, it is a condition in the contract, which probably will be recorded in the proper county of the State, providing that in the event of an attempted sale, lease, and so forth, all payments shall immediately become due.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the way to cover it in the contract of sale. This provision gives the corporation authority to take such action.

Mr. PITTMAN. I mean, if this does not apply to involuntary sales, I do not see how it would affect a State law in any way whatever.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think it does affect it. I think it is a perfectly legitimate power. In a contract of sale, by agreement of the parties, there may be incorporated any provision of this kind as the parties see fit.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is quite customary to place in contracts of conditional sale provisions preventing attempted assignment or sale of the contract without the consent of the grantor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. PITTMAN. And conditions may be put in that if any such attempt shall be made, all payments shall immediately become due, both principal and interest.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I fully agree with the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I thought probably there was incorporated in this measure a provision attempting to prevent a sale under execution by a court or a tax sale.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is a provision in section 5——

Mr. PITTMAN. That is the one with which I was dealing.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is a provision in that section which authorizes the corporation to declare the mortgage due in the event of an involuntary lien—which, of course, a judgment would be—or a tax lien, where taxes were permitted to go to default, so that a lien comes about in an involuntary way, which, of course, might be done by subterfuge.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not see that even that is any violation of State law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I do not think so.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the property were sold for taxes, the contract would immediately become due and payable, and the corporation could pay off the tax lien and take over the property.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I agree with the Senator that there is no infringement of State laws. No fundamental principle is involved that is not permissible under our power.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I address an inquiry to the Senator from Alabama?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wyoming for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have had an opportunity only to glance over the measure, and I have been unable to find anywhere in it a restriction upon the amount of money which may be loaned to any particular individual. Does not the Senator believe that such a restriction would really be in aid of the objectives of the measure?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I may say to the Senator that that is expressly omitted, for the simple reason that in different sections of the country land values differ, and the size of family-size farms necessarily differs. I am sure that in my own immediate section a smaller farm would be required for a family than out in the open West, where they use large acreage in a wheat farm. I am sure also that a farm in my section can be bought much cheaper than it can be bought out in that section of the country, where land values are higher than they are in the South. So it seemed to us, on thorough consideration of the subject, that the only way properly to administer the bill so that it may be administered with latitude and as a national program is to leave that subject just as the subject was left to the Federal land bank in deciding the amount of mortgages, but leave it to the administration to fit the conditions to different sections according to the needs. If we should fix a limitation either on amount or acreage, it might obstruct a great many desirable efforts to put tenant farmers upon the farm.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I also observe that the bill appears not to contain any restriction as to the character of the individual or person to whom a loan may be made. I have in mind that under the bill, as it is here presented, this new Federal corporation, without any limitation upon the amount of an individual loan, could also make loans to corporations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, no; the bill says "to farmers", and they must have previous farm experience. Besides, the bill, on page 9, also expressly says "small, individual farms."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The phrase "small individual farms" does not necessarily mean that the loans may be made only to an individual person, however. A corporation might have "small individual farms" as well as any natural person, Therefore, I ask, does not the Senator think an amendment to prohibit loans to corporations might be a valuable one?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no sort of objection, because I know such loans are not authorized and are not contemplated; but if the possibility of such loans gives the Senator any uneasiness I have no objection. It is always necessary to place confidence in administrative officials to carry out the purpose and spirit of any program. Absolutely inflexible rules cannot be made for a program that spreads from Maine to California and from perhaps a 5-acre tract to a 160-acre tract.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator will permit me, I think the sky is the limit in this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think so myself—the sky and the cellar, both.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does not the Senator believe that a limitation prohibiting loans in excess of $10,000 and loans to corporations might be a valuable addition to the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know. I have no objection, so far as my part of the country is concerned, to such a limitation. I do not know whether or not that would be a desirable limitation in the West.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield; yes.

Mr. MURPHY. I should say that a valid objection would lie against such a limitation in my State, due to the high value of the land there.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I contemplated.

Mr. MURPHY. But, having reference to the comment made by the Senator from Wyoming, it occurs to me that the virtue in this bill is dependent upon the virtue in the board created to administer it. The Senator from Alabama inadvertently fell into error in a statement having reference to the Federal land banks. It is provided by law that such banks shall not loan in excess of 50 percent of the appraised value of the land. In this case the board which we create may loan in an amount equal to 100 percent of the value of the land——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the board may even loan more than that, because it is expressly provided, and the proposed legislation contemplates, that advances shall also be made for equipment, livestock, and supplies. That provision is necessary if the aid under the bill is to reach the class of persons who really need assistance.

Mr. MURPHY. I thank the Senator for that interpolation; and I was about to add that it might loan even more than 150 percent of the value of the security offered by the land and the improvements put upon it.

The board created to administer this proposed act may be a board entirely sympathetic with the purposes of the Senator presenting this bill. On the other hand, it may be a board that will, first of all, consult—as many of our loan commissioners have consulted, and fallen into error in that consultation—the security of the bonds issued against the assets as the prime consideration.

I am wondering, as giving ourselves here some assurance of a sympathetic administration of this measure, if the Senator has given consideration to any language by which we might insure that sympathetic interpretation of the purposes of the bill. It might conceivably limit the loans, as the land bank limits them, to 50 percent of the value.

I have had a great deal of experience with applicants for loans from the land banks and for commissioner's loans; and our refinancing program is falling down woefully in many places. I ask the Senator if he has given consideration to the proposal that we should, somehow or other, adopt safeguards in this bill to insure the kind of interpretation he desires.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that of course that is our hope and our expectation. The whole program depends upon sympathetic administration; but it is impossible, with my limited command of language and ability to express myself, to write into the proposed statute requirements of a sympathetic administration that will have any measurement in their meaning. There is simply no way to say to a board, "You must be sympathetic", and get real, tangible results. The whole bill shows that it is intended to be administered with liberality, because, as stated by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], it authorizes a loan not only for the amount necessary to purchase the land, but for the amount necessary to set the farmer on his feet, if he has not anything but is otherwise worthy. The board is authorized to make a loan of 100 percent for the land and also for the stock and farm implements and necessary supplies, so that the farmer can raise a crop.

Mr. President, I do not know how to provide further in the general authorization in this bill, or how to make clearer to those who are to administer it that a generous and sympathetic program is intended by the Congress.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to recur to the question of a lien by second mortgage. That is what we commonly refer to in this connection. I am afraid of mortgages. I have seen so much disaster come from mortgages, and, particularly from second mortgages, that I should like to see this bill so framed that it would be impossible to create a second lien on the land.

In section 5 of the bill I find it is provided that if an involuntary lien is established on the property, the corporation may declare the entire indebtedness due. That is the penalty for creating a lien—that all the indebtedness to the corporation shall become due. That, however, is not a prohibition against a mortgage; and if the Senator will agree to it, I should like to insert in section 6——

Mr. BANKHEAD. On what page?

Mr. HATCH. On page 11, line 5, section 6, following the word "lease", I should like to insert the word "mortgage." Then the bill would require the written consent of the corporation before a mortgage could be given. Again, in line 8, after the word "assignment", I suggest that the word "mortgage" be inserted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will accept the Senator's amendments.

Mr. HATCH. I offer those amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the word "conveyance" include a mortgage, but I am willing to make it absolutely clear.

Mr. HATCH. The word "conveyance" does include a mortgage, but a mortgage is only a conditional conveyance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I accept the amendments.

Mr. ROBINSON. Where is the amendment to be inserted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed on page 11, line 5, after the word "lease", to insert the word "mortgage"; and on the same page, line 8, after the word "assignment", to insert the word "mortgage."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, before this amendment is voted on, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question.

There is a provision in the bill, on page 8, subparagraph 5, where the Corporation is authorized "to enter into contracts to sell or lease its properties, and to make conveyances under the terms of such contracts." What is the purpose and what would be the effect of the term "lease"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Corporation might want to make a lease contract or sale. There are different forms of contract.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the question for the reason that I do not wish to see this bill authorize the Farmers' Home Corporation to go into the business of farming. I do not wish to see the Corporation made a landlord. It is exactly that from which we are trying to get away. If the Corporation is permitted to acquire lands and then lease them to tenant farmers or share-croppers, we will merely put the Government into the landlord business, and make little advance toward escaping from the growing system of tenancy, which, in my judgment, is a very serious menace to farming conditions.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the things he is pointing out in subsection 5 apply even more specifically to the provisions of subsection 4, on the same page, where the Corporation is given authority to not only buy the property, but to improve it, develop it, maintain it, sell it, and lease it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. Of course, the question applies with equal force to subsection 4 as to subsection 5.

It seems to me, I may say to the Senator from Alabama, and to other Senators who are interested, that under the terms of the bill, unless the word "lease" is stricken out, the corporation which we are creating may acquire an unlimited amount of property. The only limit on the amount it may acquire is the fund which may be allocated for that purpose. Having acquired lands, it might, under some managements, proceed to lease them out to tenants or to share-croppers. If that is not the effect of the language, I should like to have it explained by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that no significance is attached to the word "lease", so far as the author of the bill is concerned; and if there is objection to it, it is perfectly agreeable to have it go out. It does, however, afford temporary protection to the corporation in case of abandonment of a farm by a purchaser, or a foreclosure, in allowing the corporation, while they are waiting, to have another purchaser come along and take it over, so that it may be used under a temporary lease. Of course, no general leasing program is contemplated.

Mr. ROBINSON. There ought to be written into the bill a provision controverting and preventing the construction and application which the language as I now read it would warrant, namely, that the corporation would have just as much right to lease the real estate it acquired as it would have to sell the real estate it acquired. I do not want the Government to go into the business of farming. I think that if a little time is taken, language can be framed which will preserve the right which the Senator from Alabama has in mind.

The Senator from Alabama has referred to the contingency of a purchaser of land from the Corporation abandoning it, as some of them will do. There is no doubt in the world that a considerable number of those who will purchase these lands will move away from them, leaving the properties to fall back to the Corporation, and there ought to be a provision in the bill which would enable the Corporation to handle the property, under those conditions, efficiently, and on the basis of sound business; but there ought not to be provision broad enough to enable some wild-eyed person who might get on the Board, or have an influence with the Board, to influence the Corporation to embark upon a practice of leasing out lands to tenants and share-croppers. I am sure the Senator from Alabama agrees with me about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely; there is no difference between us in our fundamental viewpoint, and I have stated to the Senator that the only significance I attach to the word "lease" here is for temporary conservation and use of the property.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator must admit that there is no such limitation in the measure. The meaning of the bill is to be derived from the language employed, as every lawyer understands, and the language here would give to the Corporation just as much right to lease the property it acquired as it would give it to sell it. It would have just as much freedom to lease it. If someone in the management of the Corporation became imbued with the idea that it was a wise or a sound practice for the Government to become a landlord, to own land and lease it to its citizens, we would have difficulty on that account which would interfere with the accomplishment of the primary purpose of the legislation.

I know that what the Senator from Alabama is trying to do—and it is the same purpose I have in mind—is to lift from the class of tenancy as many as possible, and to place them in the class of landowners, home owners. It would not be very much better to have a share cropper or a tenant owing his obligations to the Government as landlord than to have them owing to plantation owners or individuals who are landlords.

I am sure that there will be little difficulty in revising the language so as to keep in the bill the power of the corporation to handle its property in a businesslike manner, and, at the same time, to remove any question as to the policy which underlies the measure, to remove any question as to the right of the corporation to go into the business of leasing lands to tenants.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will put in the form of an amendment what he has in mind. There is no difference in our real objectives about the matter.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator from Alabama about the provision on page 10 with respect to the interest rate?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have an amendment to offer as to that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WHITE. The provision gives me a good deal of concern. I have in mind that in times past, in connection with other loaning activities of the Government, a great deal of trouble has been encountered both because the loans bore different rates of interest to different borrowers, and because a rate of interest has been granted in many cases that was unconscionably low. I do not know what this language means, "at as low a rate of interest as the Government can secure the money." It seems to me that would necessarily result in one rate of interest for a borrower today and another rate of interest to a borrower a year from today. I do not know whether it means at the rate at which the Government can secure the money at the time the bill is enacted, or when the Government may secure the money at varying times in the future.

If the language is left as it is now, I am sure we will have many of the difficulties which have arisen in connection with loans to shipping companies under the Merchant Marine Act, and it seems to me there should be a very much more definite standard with respect to interest rates than is here fixed.

If, on the other hand, we are to leave discretion to the board, it seems as though we ought to provide at least a minimum rate below which they could not take loans.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The answer to that suggestion is that this is a long-range program, and no one can foresee what fluctuations there may be in interest rates. The best protection we can safely give, with the guarantee that the administration is going on and pay out the money, is that we will not make the interest rate a burden on the Treasury and at the same time we will give all the protection we can to the borrower by requiring the interest rate to be as low as that at which the Government can secure the money.

Mr. WHITE. When? At the time the loan is made or when we pass the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not say.

Mr. WHITE. That is the point I am discussing and to which I am inviting the Senator's attention.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The money might be available at the time. We might average it up over a year. That is a matter of administration. If we should provide a minimum rate of interest and the Government could not get the money at that rate, we would break down the program.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. As a practical and legal proposition it seems to me the language used in the bill means that the rate which shall be given the purchasers of homes shall be the equivalent of the rate which the Government pays. Therefore, when the Government negotiates the sale of the bonds or the securities, the rate would be fixed at the price at which the bonds or other securities should sell and that would fix the rate of interest which the borrower or the home purchaser would pay.

When that fund shall be exhausted and a new loan has to be negotiated by the Government for the purpose of providing funds with which to make loans to purchasers, there might conceivably be an entirely different rate. It is true, as stated by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], that a borrower or home purchaser, whose property was paid for from the first loan, would pay more or less than another purchaser whose home would be paid for out of the second or a different loan. I do not know that there is any particular objection to that.

The point is that the purchaser would be getting the benefit of the best bargain the Government could make. The Government would not be profiting from the transaction. It would be using its credit for the benefit of the purchaser. Of course, a similar thing is done in the case of all loans which are made by the Government during this period of depression, except that we have usually fixed a definite rate.

Mr. WHITE. I would have put the same construction on the language as the Senator from Arkansas does if it did not appear that the committee has stricken out the language appearing in lines 5, 6, and 7, page 10, to the effect that the rate of interest shall be not less than that which the bonds to be issued by the corporation shall bear. That language has something of definiteness to it. But that language being stricken out and the language appearing in italics being inserted, I am left very much in doubt as to the meaning.

Mr. ROBINSON. The rate of interest the bonds bear may be determined in part at least by a number of factors. The Government might desire to sell the bonds at a premium or at less than a premium, in which event the rate of interest would be vitally affected by whatever policy the Government pursued in the disposition of the security.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas as to a term employed in the bill? The provision is that the rate shall be as low as the rate at which the Government can secure the money. If there shall be a loan made, the loan is made by the corporation and not by the Government. I am wondering if some confusion might result from that provision?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that language might be improved. The English of it is not beyond question so far as my thought goes. It is, "at such rate of interest as the Government can secure the money." The thought is that the Government gives its credit and sells the bonds, and whatever rate it has to pay for the money which it thus secures, shall be the rate for making the loans to the purchasers. In other words, I am satisfied the language of the bill is intended to give the purchaser of the land the full benefit of the Government's credit.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think Senators are confusing the facts a little. The Government does not need any money when it is selling the land. It does not ask for any money and it is not going to get any money. It has already bought the land. It is the owner of the land. It is going to sell it. It has already purchased it. We know now what it has cost. We had to borrow the money when we bought it. We know what was the rate of interest. The Government does not immediately sell any given tract of land which it has bought. It may hold it and improve it, or change it around and maintain it a year or two before the sale is made. When the sale is made the Government takes the mortgage and the interest must then be fixed. The Government will not get money every time it makes a sale. It will not have to borrow any money at the time it makes the sale.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; but it may get money by the sale of bonds at a number of different times. When it sells its bonds it pays or guarantees to pay a certain rate of interest. The provision in the bill is that whatever that rate of interest is the purchaser shall be given the benefit of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the Government buys a large tract of land somewhere. That is the time when the bonds are issued. That is when the rate of interest is fixed, so far as the Government is concerned, which it has to pay. It will break that large tract of land into small homesteads. It may have to improve the land in some way; it may have to irrigate the land or level it off, or improve it in some other way. It may be a year from the time it buys it before it can sell any of it to anyone. The rate of interest is fixed at the time it buys the land. The Government charges the rate of interest it had to pay when it bought the land.

Mr. WHITE. If that is the theory, that is definite.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the language does that. I agree the language ought to be changed. Senators were talking about fixing the rate of interest when this piece of land is sold, and another rate of interest when another piece of land is sold. The rate of interest is fixed as a matter of fact when the Government buys the land.

Mr. ROBINSON. What I said was that if the Government sponsored a bond sale to raise a given amount of money, it might effectuate the sale of those bonds at a rate of interest different from that at which it could sell the bonds at another time.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. In that event the rate paid by land purchasers would be different. Of course every time the Government sells a piece of property there is no expectation that it will fix a special rate of interest, nor is it expected that will happen every time it buys a piece of property. The transactions will be rather large ones in all probability.

The whole object of the provision is to protect the purchaser of the land against high rates of interest. It is to give him the benefit of Government credit. In order to do that language has been inserted in the bill which I think could very well be improved. I do not think the mere incorporation of the original provision in the bill would always accomplish the purpose desired, and that is to give the land purchaser the benefit of the lowest rate of interest which the Government could obtain.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that he reconsider a statement he made a few moments ago with reference to subsection 3, at the top of page 8 of the bill.

The purpose of the bill, as the Senator from Alabama has said, and the Senator from Arkansas has emphasized, is to relieve the small farmer, the tenant, and the sharecropper. The Senator from Alabama, in reporting the bill, has provided for the establishment of "small individual farms and farm homes." I can see that it would be exceedingly difficult to determine what was intended by the expression "small individual farms and farm homes."

If we establish machinery throughout the country, and an interpretation is placed upon that language by the administrator in a district such as Alabama, for instance, different than the interpretation placed upon it in South Carolina, there would be more complaint about the administration of the measure. Even though it be true that in some sections lands are more valuable, as we all know, yet it seems to me the Senator could fix a maximum figure which would be of great value to those who are going to administer the measure.

In the Home Loan Act it was thought wise to do that. I can see that a man going to the administrator in charge of the office claiming that he wants to buy a home and wants to put $20,000 or $25,000 in it, when the administrator says that is too large an amount, might say, "Well, you loaned that in some other State." It was loaned by the organization. If it is not intended that he should borrow $20,000, or purchase a farm costing that much, or that he have a $5,000 building constructed on it, could we not agree upon some maximum figure that would be of some advantage to the men who will have to administer the act? They are all human and when they tell the farmer in Alabama that he cannot borrow more than $4,000 or $5,000, or that he cannot be assisted in purchasing a farm costing more than that, and he knows that in another State $10,000 or $15,000 had been invested, it is bound to cause dissatisfaction. I hope the Senator will take that point under consideration, because he has given great study to the question and would know what to do.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. One can readily see the force of the suggestion made by the Senator from South Carolina. On the other hand, when a maximum is fixed, say, of $10,000 or $15,000, you invite into this system applicants who are not intended to become beneficiaries. Anyone, of course, would rather get a loan with which to build or pay for a home under a bill like this than under the Federal Farm Loan Act, for the simple reason that there is and in the very nature of the transactions there can be no arbitrary limitation in this proposed act as to the amount that will be loaned relative to the appraised value of the property.

If a limitation of, say, 50 percent of the appraised value of the property is required, the act would be futile, because the person intended to be the beneficiary would have no way of providing the other 50 percent. He would be helpless. The primary purpose of this act is to get genuine assistance to a class that has no resources, that can offer no security—persons that are willing to exert themselves in order to acquire homes if given the chance to do so.

If we fix a limitation of $10,000, every applicant who ought to go to the Federal land bank or to some other loan institution might be coming to the Farmers' Home Corporation to get his loan there, because he would not have to give any security, because he would get a lower rate of interest than he can get anywhere else. So if we do fix a limitation, it will be necessary to fix a very low one. That of itself might in some cases impair the actual operation of the statute.

My thought is, and I recognize the subject is full of difficulties, that discretion has to be vested somewhere. That if we impose a liberal limitation, it will result in the making of loans that ought not to be made under an act intended to enable poor people to get homes. And if we make a very narrow restriction as to the amount, we will deny opportunity to some who ought to have the chance to get a home under this bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the question I directed to the Senator from Alabama was not with regard to any percentage of the value of the property to be loaned but as to a maximum value. He and I have the same fear. I have feared that as the result of the language now in the bill a man whom we would regard as not a small farmer and not seeking what is generally called a small individual farm, would come to this organization instead of going to the land bank, and that if in some section of the country he asked for $10,000 or $15,000, he would cause great dissatisfaction in other sections. Under the Home Owners' Loan Act every man who borrows does not borrow the maximum. It occurred to me that it might be well to consider that feature.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not see how a rule could be definitely established, because what would be considered a good-sized farm in New Jersey would not be anything out in western Missouri, Kansas, or Nebraska. A man would have to have a larger farm in that western section of the country in order to support a family.

However, the question I wanted to discuss was that raised by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. While he stated that this problem was beset with many difficulties, we will make a mistake, in my judgment, if we try by statute to do anything but to make the most general rules. We must leave it to the administration. In the first place the question of geography will make a difference, as I have pointed out. In the second place, if we put down the amount that a man must have in order to get the land, we will cut out a great many people whom we are trying to help by this proposed legislation.

The bill provides, and it is well that it does—it might be amended to make it more strict—that in order to get the benefits of buying a farm without money and paying for all of it on long-time credit, a showing must be made at the time of making application as to the character of the man who is applying.

It seems to me it should be necessary in a case where no money is put up, or but little money is put up by the applicant himself, that a showing be made not only that the man is of good character, but he should be able to show that there is a fair probability that if the land is sold to him he will, by his diligence and his honesty, be able to meet the payments in time.

Mr. President, such a plan has been tried in other sections of the world. Several years ago, when the Government of Australia was trying to place small farmers upon the land instead of having the very large farms which they had had before that time, a law was passed providing for the taking over of some of the large estates and cutting them up into small farms, dividing them up, and selling them to people who wanted farm homes and land upon which to raise crops. I think some of that land had to be irrigated. The Government of Australia bought, for instance, a large ranch, cut it up into small tracts, and spent thousands of dollars getting it ready, dividing it, according to the contour of the land, into larger and smaller tracts, and then invited settlers. A settler, however, had to make a showing before he could get the land. They would not sell to everyone. He had to be a man of good moral character, and he had to establish that fact to the satisfaction of those in charge. It was necessary for him to show, for instance, in case he was going to raise small vegetables, that he knew something about the business, or at least he would have an advantage if he could show that he had had some experience in that line, that he knew something about what he would be required to do.

It was realized that a good farm might be entirely spoiled and made worthless by a man who in other lines might be a very good farmer.

I think, in a general way, the plan was very successful. A committee was appointed to go to Europe, to Scotland, to England, to travel in other parts of Europe, so that men would not spend their money to go to Australia and get there and find they could not get any land. The committee examined applicants who wanted to go. They looked up their surroundings and found out what kind of people they were, looking for respectable, honest men and women, persons of good character. So the committee brought in a very good class of citizens. There was nothing the matter with them except that they were very poor, and they were the kind of persons for whom the authorities were looking. They gave those persons homesteads.

The experiment worked out all right. I think after the plan had been in operation for a little while it became very popular. The price of land in these large estates went up. The authorities, as I remember, were unable to carry on the plan over a long period of years, because the plan had been so successful that the price of land went up, and the country was settled by a fine class of citizens.

We shall have to do something of that kind here. The administrators of this measure, if we pass it, will have to exercise some judgment. Of course they, like all human beings, probably will make mistakes; but they will have to adopt regulations and supervise this activity in accordance with the facts in each individual case. If they buy a large tract of land in Alabama, they will have to handle it differently than if they bought a large tract of land in South Dakota. So they will be using their judgment, if they are the proper kind of men. They undoubtedly will make a great success of it, with here and there, as the Senator from Arkansas said, a failure, a man who will be a misfit, who will get in perhaps because he is a bad man, and perhaps because he is a good man in a bad place; but there will be some failures.

So I think we ought to leave this matter just as much as we can to the discretion of those who are to administer the measure. If we do, and the right kind of men are appointed, and they go about their duties with the right spirit, the measure ought to be a godsend.

The truth is that the great West was settled up mainly with free homesteads, lands that cost their owners nothing. In my State, for instance, at this time, just about one-half of the farmers of the State are tenant farmers, farming land that somebody else owns. The land speculator gets in, and the idea of private profit and private gain frequently induces men to loan money on land with the idea of getting it under foreclosure, or something of the kind. That ought to be guarded against as much as possible. The State could do that much better than the Federal Government could; but, as a matter of fact, after a man is put on a farm, and gets his home, it ought to be very difficult for him ever to mortgage his homestead. It never ought to be allowed except for purposes of improving the homestead, or perhaps in case of sickness, or something of the kind; but the fact that these homesteads in the great West were received for nothing had a tendency in itself to make men extravagant. It became popular to mortgage them the day the homesteaders made final proof, and it was the exception when that kind of a mortgage was not made. That ought to be prohibited in the case of a homestead.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Will the Senator yield so that I may offer an amendment?

Mr. NORRIS. I was about to wind up my statement by offering an amendment on a different page than the one we are discussing. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that it seems to me the amendment suggested, I think by the Senator from Arkansas, on page 8, ought to be made in this bill.

If Senators will turn to page 8, line 9, in subsection (4), where it says—

To improve, develop, maintain, sell, or lease any such property—

It seems to me that language ought to be amended by striking out the words "or lease" and inserting the word "and" just before "sell"; and on line 17, on the same page, we ought to strike out the words "or lease."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am perfectly willing to have that done.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, if there is no objection, I move, on page 8, line 9, after the word "maintain", to insert the word "and"; and on the same line and line 10, to strike out the words "or lease."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nebraska that there is now pending an amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska could be adopted only by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no desire to interfere with any other amendment. I was not aware that there was an amendment pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Now I desire to offer another amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment. On page 8, line 17, I move to strike out the words "or lease."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Now I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, turning to page 10, section 5, I can find no limitation here as to the amount of acreage or the amount of money that may be contracted for in a sale to any one individual. It seems to me that we ought not to leave a bill like this wide open. If loans are to be made for the purpose of acquiring homes or farms, there ought to be a maximum put in.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that there is another respect in which we might do an injustice, I think, if we should fix either a maximum or a minimum. I presume—and it seems to me that is what ought to be done under this bill—if a man should make the right kind of a showing as to his character, and so forth, the Corporation would sell him a home without his making any cash payment whatever, and let him pay it out on a long-amortized mortgage, running over a great many years.

Following the experiment I mentioned a while ago, which was worked over in Australia, I think, the State of California did much the same thing. The senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is not present, or he could tell me whether or not I am right; but I think, while he was Governor of the State of California the State did, to quite an extent, the same thing that the Government of Australia had done. They borrowed money, bought a ranch, we will say, and divided it up into farms. They usually got water on the land, leveled it off, paid all the incidental expenses, and then sold it to men who wanted farm homesteads.

I think the State authorities went so far, where they had a large tract of land, as to build a village. They cut up the land into lots. They had some provision about the sale of lots. The work that was done on any one of those tracts of land was performed by day labor. Men who were going to take the homesteads, men who were going to live in the village, hired out, worked on their own homesteads, and were paid for their work. Sometimes they were men with a little property. The State authorities looked into their records to see where they came from, what kind of persons they were, and these men settled a community there. A little city was built by poor people, some of whom had something, some of them nothing. Some of them worked with the different gangs that were leveling off the land, and many philanthropic persons became interested in the project. The settlers adopted a community method of stock raising, for instance, and some very wealthy men donated some prize stock to the whole body of settlers who had taken up a particular tract; and I think in this way some parts of California that were waste lands before that time were developed into very fine neighborhoods. The settlers, within shipping distance of a city, perhaps would raise fruit, or something of the kind.

I believe that the experiments which they tried out there resulted successfully. I do not see why, on a larger scale, this corporation could not carry out the same thing all over the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present now an amendment to come in on page 8, line 5. At that point I move to add the following:

And under rules and regulations to be promulgated by the Corporation and the Secretary of the Interior, to finance in the same manner the establishment of individual farms and homes upon the public domain, and upon lands within any reclamation project.

The purpose of the amendment is to make certain that the benefits of the bill may be extended to all of the public-land States, as well as to other States. Let me say that I am heartily in favor of the purpose of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have conferred with the Senator from Wyoming about his amendment. I am not fully informed and do not exactly understand the effect of it, but I have stated to him that I am willing that the amendment may go to conference. If it is all right, and on further investigation we find that it does not conflict with the program in mind, I am willing to have it remain in the bill, but I have stated to the Senator frankly that if it goes to conference and I am on the conference committee, I shall not be committed to it, and am not prepared at this time to say that I will stand by it. If I shall be convinced that it is all right, I shall be glad to support it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, is this a House bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. GORE. My understanding is that it is a Senate bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. GORE. The Senator is accepting an amendment in order that it might go to conference?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the House adopts it, it is all right.

Mr. GORE. I assume the House will adopt it.

Mr. President, this merely illustrates what we may expect. We are opening the door an inch, and now comes the Senator from Wyoming, entirely within his rights, demanding that the public domain shall be embraced within this scheme. I heard a Senator suggesting today that he intended to move to include industrial workers in the cities. Can there be any valid objection to their inclusion? Another Senator has nominated the miners. Who cay say them nay? Someone else suggested that the lumberjacks in the timbered regions be included in the scheme. Why not? What valid objection could there be to their inclusion? Let us make it unanimous.

Mr. President, this country is founded upon the principle of equality, and when we begin to bestow benefits of this kind upon one class of our citizenship, there is no place tc stop. There is no place where we can say "no."

I think some limitation ought to be placed on the acreage, in the first instance. The hue and cry is raised here that it might prove embarrassing or even unjust in some particular cases. For more than a half century our homestead laws were really the glory of our public-land policy. They resulted in the establishment of millions of homes, and a homestead was limited to 160 acres. The system succeeded. It enabled millions of people to acquire homes—to own their own homes. Yet gentlemen are opposed to fixing a limitation in a measure which is designed to enable small farmers to acquire their homes.

There ought to be a limitation as to acreage, and it ought to be 160 acres, founded upon our homestead precedents, and if the day ever comes when that limitation is too restrictive, and when all the tenant farmers who are content to have 160 acres where they can lay their heads and call it home have exhausted that right and that opportunity, if there be tenant farmers who are not content with 160 acres who desire more ample acreage than that, then let Congress make provision for the imperial estates on which such tenants may be content.

Not only should there be a limitation as to acreage, but there should be a limitation as to value. If this measure is in good faith, if it is intended to help the poor man, if it is intended to help the small tenant, if it is intended to help the tenant to acquire a home, then there ought to be a limitation upon the value.

I think it ought to be limited to those tenants, honest-to-God tenants, who are seeking to acquire homes for themselves and their families and those who, in good faith, will be content with a small limitation as to the amount of the loan and a reasonable limitation as to the acreage.

Mr. President, I predict now that if there is no limitation upon the acreage, if there be no limitation provided as to the area which the Government may buy and cut up into farms and sell, we are opening wide the door to scandal.

I speak deliberately and advisedly when I say "scandal." I believe that today I know of an instance in a Southern State where, under one of these Government land schemes a vast tract of land was purchased, and I do not doubt that the sale was made in order to pay off a mortgage held by a mortgage concern upon that land.

I know of another instance where I believe there is a scandal lurking. I know of still another instance, and I know well, where an effort was made to work off on the Government a large tract of land in order to serve the personal interest of the owner, and not the public.

I hope that a limitation will be fixed upon the acreage, and that a limitation will be fixed upon the value.

Mr. President, someone has written a book on Three Acres Enough. The average Roman farm of antiquity was 4½ acres. I have as great a reverence for the sanctity of the home as has any man. I think it the greatest institution ever developed among the sons of men. I believe in a country of home owners. But the Senator from Iowa says that a loan up to 150 percent of the value of the property would be possible under the pending bill. The Senator from Alabama went him one better, and said that under this measure now pending the sky is the limit.

The sky is the limit for what purpose? To help poor tenant farmers who, in the vicissitudes of life, have not been able to own 1 acre, who have not been able to acquire 10 acres, who have not been able to acquire 40 acres where they could lay their heads and call it home; and here, in order to promote home owning throughout the South and permit tenants to become landowners—as God speed they may—we are asked to make the sky the limit.

It is difficult to take such a measure seriously. It is difficult to believe that it is designed solely to help the tenant farmer acquire a home without reference to the reaction upon those who promote the legislation.

Our tenant farmers need help as much, indeed, they need help more than many others who have received help. They deserve help as much as many who have received help, yet they are the hardest to help in some respects. No matter how deserving, it is hard to help them on account of their limited resources; it is hard for them to get off of dead center. I wish it were possible for every tenant farmer who wants a home to own a home—for every tenant farmer who wants a home to buy and pay for a home—to buy and pay for a home by his own toil and his own thrift. Millions are willing, millions, I doubt not, are anxious to do that; but we should go at this business serious, if at all, on a sound and practical basis. We ought to take things as they are and try to improve them. We ought to take conditions as they are and try to build up upon them a better order of things, with ampler opportunities. We ought to enable the tenants to help themselves; we ought to limit the power of the Board; we ought to safeguard the interests of the Government—safeguard the rights of the taxpayer. And, Mr. President, we ought to take heed that in an effort to work out a reform or a revolution in an existing system we ought to take heed that we do not break down and destroy the economic and social system of the South, or the economic and social system of any other section for that matter. It is easier to tear down than to build up. I would not issue this warning if experience had not shown that the "best laid plans of mice and men" sometimes fail to come true.

There is one other point to which I wish to advert. It was raised by the Senator from Arkansas, and another Senator in the rear of the Chamber, with reference to the rate of interest which may be charged upon these loans.

The language of the bill, I believe, stipulates in effect that the rate of interest charged the borrower shall be the rate paid by the Government or the rate at which the Government can acquire the money. We have had experience in this country which ought to serve as a warning. I do not mean to suggest to Senators that we ought to pay any particular heed to the lamp of experience, but we had a few years ago a Farm Board, a rather ill-starred and ill-fated institution, but, judged in the light of more recent events, a rather conservative institution.

The Farm Board created a subsidiary, known, I believe as the "National Wheat Corporation", and breathed into it the breath of life. If that be not the exact name it is sufficient to indicate what I mean. The Farm Board lent this institution some $15,000,000. It was the people's money but what did that matter? I make no point of that. I think the borrower and the lender were both extremely conservative?

They borrowed only $15,000,000. Under the law the loan could be refinanced at the rate of interest paid by the Government in the loan which the Government had most recently effected. It chanced that the Government negotiated a sale of short-time securities at one-eighth of 1-percent interest. This concern, not indifferent to its opportunities, refinanced its loan in accordance with the law and its contract, so that the Wheat Corporation had a loan of $15,000,000 from the Farm Board, which was really the Government, upon which it paid $20,000 a year interest—$20,000 a year for $15,000,000!

It was competing with private enterprise—and I blush to mention " private enterprise ", because there are some gentlemen who think that private business and all sorts of business are a crime and that all kinds of business men are criminals, and that if we could only suppress this crime and these criminals then prosperity would be abounding.

Private enterprise had to compete with that subsidized institution. Private enterprise borrowing $15,000,000 to compete, paying 6 percent interest would pay $900,000 a year against $20,000 paid by this favorite of fate. Private enterprise paying 3 percent on $15,000,000, struggling for existence, struggling to keep its head above water, paying taxes into the Treasury of the United States in order to be lent to these pet institutions—private enterprise borrowing $15,000,000 at 3 percent would pay $450,000 and this Government-endowed and subsidized competitor was paying $20,000 a year for $15,000,000.

I think when the Farm Board became innocuous the contract was afterward abrogated to the credit of whoever did it. That ought not to be allowed to happen under the pending legislation. I should like to see the measure revised and adapted to serve the interests which its real friends had in mind—to enable the little one-horse farmer, who has not been able to acquire a few acres bearing the consecrated name of " home ", buy a few acres and establish a sanctuary and a refuge upon it.

Aye, Mr. President, it is pretty hard to help people without making them helpless. I want to help them to help themselves. Save for the infirm and the indigent that is about the only help that is helpful—other help is often hurtful. When we make it easier to get into debt, as a rule, we make it easier to get into trouble. Debt is a quicksand, and it is easy to get into and hard to get out of.

Our national indebtedness has prevented the Government from resorting to rational measures in an effort to extricate the country from the depression. We have had to relate all our measures to our indebtedness, which has prevented us from adopting measures which but for such indebtedness would have seen us further upon the highway to recovery than we are today.

I shall offer an amendment before the consideration of the measure shall be concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator suggested certain restrictions and limitations as to credit, values, and so forth. What would he think of this kind of a restriction? Let a man have 40 acres, but provide that he may produce only two bales of cotton or so many pounds of tobacco. What kind of restriction and limitation does the Senator think that would be, and how would it help in the situation?

Mr. GORE. I happen to know of an instance where the Government under one of its schemes was promoting the establishment of a colony in the Senator's own State of Florida. They selected a site. The land was fertile, was fruitful. When they made application to the Government agency to proceed with the enterprise they were obliged to abandon that prospective site because the land was good, and were compelled to take inferior land where they would have to work harder and produce less.

I do not believe in limitations of that kind. I do not believe in any theory of destruction. I repeat what I have often said, that we cannot end want by destroying wealth. I have no sympathy with any permanent scheme of enforced scarcity or famine created by law—a famine created by law.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I requested unanimous consent for the consideration of my amendment, and I was under the impression that it was granted. May I inquire of the Chair whether the amendment was stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair is advised that unanimous consent was not granted and that the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming can be considered only by unanimous consent.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nomination of Samuel M. Glading to be postmaster at Wenonah, N. J., in place of J. W. English, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the calendar is in order. The first order of business on the calendar will be stated.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS—SUPREME COURT

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Claro M. Recto, of the Philippine Islands, to be associate justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 17, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 16 (legislative day of Apr. 15), 1935

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 16, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who dost shepherd the night winds and make the clouds His chariot, pass along the horizons of our daily lives. Make more complete our soul needs by leading us to cultivate moral and spiritual power. By faith may we believe in God, in His fatherhood, and in His redeeming love.

Holding our shields above poverty and weakness, may we be heralds of a larger and a better day. Blessed Lord, be abroad on a mission of mercy, cleansing, and recovery; stretch forth the divine hand and bring back all erring children to the Father's side. Forbid that we should be lured to drink from the goblets of spiced sin or let fall the wreaths of manhood from our foreheads. Keep us in the paths of righteousness and truth, hold us by the irresistible power of a constraining and impelling love, and may it sweeten all the common ways in which we live, move, and have our being. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEES TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee may sit during the sessions of the House today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, I understand that general debate on the security bill may consume tomorrow. I shall not object to this request, but I shall be compelled to object to any request that a committee be permitted to sit during the time that the bill is being read under the 5-minute rule. If necessary, I believe the House should also recall any permission that it has given which runs into the future of any committee to so sit.

As I stated on the floor the other day, this practice of committees sitting during the sessions of the House has grown up so that it interferes with the business of the House.

I understand that some committees are even sitting afternoons without any permission, taking votes, and so forth, all contrary to our rules and nugatory if objection is ever made.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I agree with what the gentleman says. I have made the statement on the floor several times that the majority is responsible for this situation and that Members ought to stay here while the House is in session. I take it from what the gentleman from New York has stated that he is going to insist that the Democrats be on the floor during the reading of the bill for amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am, if I am here, and I shall object to any other permission being given that committees may sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not believe that the business of the House has been interfered with by committees sitting to complete business on bills with which they have to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he thinks the rule should apply to the Private Calendar business?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would not object to the gentleman making a no quorum point at any time he desires to do so and as I know he intends to do.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

THOMAS JEFFERSON—AMERICA'S OUTSTANDING RADICAL

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, the birthday of Thomas Jefferson, the accredited founder of the Democratic Party—although in numerous instances the modern Democratic Party has been a fearful caricature of a party devoted to the noble humanitarianism of the sage of Monticello—was 2 days ago. It was widely observed, of course. The observance, unfortunately, was largely lip service. Too few present-day "Democrats" are committed to the idealism of the great Jefferson.

If Jefferson were living today, he would be the target for the same abuse from reactionaries that is now hurled at those usually denominated as "radicals." In comparison with the standards of 1796, 1800, and 1804, Thomas Jefferson was as much of an extreme leftist as any Socialist or Communist of 1935. Like the Progressives of the present, he was accused of getting his ideas from alien quarters. The source of his inspiration, it was charged, was France and the French Jacobins. They could not accuse him of being a paid agent of Bolshevik Russia, for Bolshevik Russia was not then in existence. From the standpoint of the Tories of nearly a century and a half ago, opinions of the French revolutionists were as bitterly hated as the Tories of 1935 hate the democratization of industry in Russia.

Let it not be overlooked that the very word, "Democrat", was originally a term of opprobrium as the term "Bolshevik" is today. The Democratic Party was first known as the "Republican Party." Hamiltonian Federalists, seeking to cover the new party of the common people with discredit, stigmatized it a "Jacobin" or "Democratical" Party whose aims were virtually identical with those of the Jacobins, or Democrats, of France. The name "Democratic" stuck fast. For some years the party was designated by both names—"Republican" and "Democratic." About Jackson's time the title "Democratic" was accepted without further objection, and the party has been so designated ever since. As it was devoted to the principles of democracy, the characterization was no misnomer. As a matter of fact, the name was a better and more accurate one than "Republican", for there are different kinds of republics, some of which are far from democratic, but there can only be one kind of genuine democracy.

Before the development of large industries and the rise of the trusts, it could not be expected that the term "democracy" would be regarded as covering public ownership and democratic management of factories, mines, and mills. Small industries, small shops, and small farms then seemed to offer the best opportunity for genuine democracy. When it became clear that monopoly could not be avoided, that the trust is here to stay, and that either the trust will own the Government or the Government must own the trust, the conception of extending democracy from the field of politics into that of industry began to gain ground. Today it is recognized to considerable degree that the public utilities should be publicly owned—that it is as wrong and inexpedient for them to be owned by private interests as it would be for the schools, parks, roads, harbors, and fire departments to be the property of corporations.

We are simply applying the democratic principle on a large scale. We are admitting that the principle is a correct one. Knowing that enacting laws has less to do with human needs than providing our citizens with the material necessities of life, we can see the insufficiency of democracy that confines itself to making laws.

Over and over again reactionaries have quoted Jefferson's statement that "the government is best which governs least" in support of their objections to interference with corporate greed. However, Jefferson's statement was made in the early days of the Nation, when governmental interference with private matters was likely to be exercised in the interest of the wealthy. At that time the doctrine of minimum interference, or laissez faire, was most conducive to the preservation of human rights. Nowadays the reverse is true. When practically all businesses were small and there was little possibility of anybody "hogging" things, it was preferable to have the Government largely leave the individual alone. But in the twentieth century, when huge monopolies are absolute dictators of the living conditions of millions of people, there must be vigorous interference. Such interference is not enough when it merely tries to break up industrial combinations. They cannot be broken up, for they are inseparable from progress. So what? We can come to no other conclusion, then, than that these vast industries should be nationally owned and administered for the benefit of all. The Government cannot control that which it does not own.

Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS once said, "You cannot put a million dollars in jail", or that a millionaire seldom lands in jail, and if he does land there, usually stays but a short time. He might have added that obviously men owning millions and billions have more power than officials who attempt to "regulate" them. Hence, the only "regulation" that will work is the regulation that will come with public ownership.

Gov. Philip La Follette, of Wisconsin, well stated the case when he said:

> You will be assailed. They will say that you are destructive, although they offer no alternative themselves. They will tell you that the Government cannot put 5,000,000 men to work although they put 4,000,000 American young men to work at the business of war, and squandered $40,000,000,000 of American money in the most wasteful and futile war of modern history. And yet they will say that you are extravagant and wasteful and visionary because you propose to spend millions or billions to build highways and bridges and power plants that will make the farmers' and the workers' life better and happier. You can spend tens of billions to destroy, but nothing to build a richer and finer life.

Years ago Jack London, the writer, said:

Civilization has increased man's producing power. Five men can produce bread for 1,000. One man can produce cotton cloth for 250 people, woolens for 300, and boots for 1,000. Yet millions do not receive enough food, clothes, and boots. If civilization has increased the producing power of the average man, why has it not bettered the lot of the average man? There can be one answer only—mismanagement.

Since Jack London wrote this, productive capacity has increased greatly. Yet millions are jobless and destitute, and the end is not in sight.

Confronted by the existing crisis Thomas Jefferson, whose burning words so scorchingly lashed slavery and injustice, would deliver fiery excoriations of capitalism itself. Those who argue that the existing social system must be unchanged and that obsolete laws should be untouched would find scant sympathy from America's first great Democrat who declared, "No society can make a perpetual constitution or even a perpetual law", and advocated a new or renewed constitution every 35 years.

Recognizing the changed conditions of modern society Jefferson would, I venture, agree with the assertion of Carl D. Thompson, secretary of the Public Ownership League:

The Government has built and operated railroads in Panama, why not in the United States? Even the single city of Cincinnati, Ohio, has built and successfully financed a railroad 336 miles long crossing two States outside of Ohio. Surely if Cincinnati, New Zealand, and Siam can build railroads, the United States of America can.

It is public service which has developed the great leaders of our civilization. Private service could never give us a Washington or a Lincoln.

THE STUDENT STRIKE AGAINST WAR

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the students' strike against war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to heartily commend the letter just sent by my colleague and fellow liberal, Representative FRED J. SISSON, of New York, to Dr. Cloyd Heck Marvin, president of George Washington University, anent Dr. Marvin's attitude concerning the student strike against war and fascism.

Congressman SISSON aimed a very justifiable criticism at the university head when he censured Dr. Marvin for stating that only a few students wished to demonstrate against militarism. The wide-spread activities of students in all quarters of the country showed conclusively that many of the young people who are our future citizens, instead of a few, wished to go on record.

After the regrettable results of the World War, which practically every sane and truth-telling citizen today admits caused almost universal evil and no good whatever, it is encouraging to see young men and young women in our colleges show their opposition to mass murder. It is especially encouraging to find such large numbers of them refusing to be hypnotized and intoxicated by war slogans, propaganda of munition makers, and the glare and glitter of military uniforms and ceremonies.

Representative SISSON already has a well-merited reputation for his courageous opposition to jingoism and imperialism. I quote with the most sincere approval these words of his letter to Dr. Marvin:

I think, however, it is very regrettable that in these times when so much is being attempted in the nature of repression and suppression of free speech, and when there is so much need—both in this country and in the other countries of the world—for movements to awaken people to the importance of the promotion of sentiments and the desire for peace and friendship with the other nations, that the head of a great university should aline himself with the Army and Navy lobby here in Washington, the munition and armament makers, the Shearers, and other provocateurs of war, and what is even worse than that, should deny the right of free discussion upon those vital questions.

I am reminded of the words of Senator James K. Vardaman, on the floor of the Senate in January 1916, as he urged his associates to follow a policy of sanity which millions of Americans now wish had been better appreciated in those sinister days:

These are terrible times, which call for serious thought. Altruism should drive from the heart the cloud of hate and consuming greed for gain should give place to a passion to serve the people. It should be the peculiar function of the Government of the United States at this critical period in the world's history to lead the nations, maddened by lust, back into the paths of peace. So "fair an occasion" seldom calls a nation to serve so well its day and generation.

Mr. BINDERUP. Mr. Speaker, my request before you this forenoon is undoubtedly very unusual. But as I have spent much of my younger life in music, I long since learned to love and admire him whom we, as well as other nations, choose to call the "world's greatest bandmaster", John Philip Sousa, now deceased.

The world has never built a monument in honor of this great citizen, but he built his own monument in the hearts of the American people, and today I want to suggest the inscription for this monument by selecting out of more than 100 splendid marches he has composed the outstanding march of the world, a march played in every civilized land, the Stars and Stripes Forever, and adopting it and calling it the "National March of America."

A little example of the popularity: A few years ago we entertained a visitor from Sweden. We had a phonograph in those days, and started this for entertainment and played the Stars and Stripes Forever. The visitor remarked with a smile, "When I landed in Stockholm for the voyage I heard the band play this march; on board the ship the band played this march many times; and when I landed in New York the first thing I saw was a large Marine Band and they were playing the Stars and Stripes Forever. I heard this in New York from morning until night, where I spent July 4, and all along on the way, and now the first thing after entering your home I hear it on the phonograph, thus showing the universal favor with which this great march is received all over the world."

John Philip Sousa, whom a music-loving public has given the title "The March King", was born in Washington, D. C., on November 6, 1854. Composer of more than 200 outstanding musical compositions, of which more than 100 were marches, he was one of the world's outstanding musicians and probably its greatest band organizer and leader.

Presented with the Victorian Order by King Edward of England, having bestowed upon him the palm of the academy by the French Government, organizer and director of marine bands, serving in the Navy from 1917 to 1919, where he held the title of lieutenant commander, he was named by five Presidents as bandmaster.

His march, the Stars and Stripes Forever, is played wherever marches are played. I think it is beyond question the most popular march in America.

And so I believe it is fitting that we do honor to this great American, this great composer, organizer, and director of bands, whose music has delighted millions in all parts of the world, and to that most popular march, the Stars and Stripes Forever, by naming it the official march of the United States. I am accordingly introducing the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution to honor John Philip Sousa by designating the Stars and Stripes Forever the national march

Whereas John Philip Sousa, famous native son of Washington, D. C., has, during most of his life, patriotically served his country as leader and organizer of many of its great military bands; and

Whereas John Philip Sousa has contributed many compositions of highest merit to the musical heritage of the Nation and has been honored throughout the world for his musical genius; and

Whereas the march known as "The Stars and Stripes Forever" is the most inspiring of the compositions of John Philip Sousa; and

Whereas it is fitting that the name of John Philip Sousa be perpetuated by the Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the musical composition by John Philip Sousa known as "The Stars and Stripes Forever" be, and is hereby, designated the national march of the United States of America.

Mr. BINDERUP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the security bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, the growth of social consciousness in America is not the privilege claimed as due of any one political party, nor is it manifested only in governmental action. It can be traced in the platforms of all the parties, in Presidents' and Governors' messages, in acts of legislatures, in judicial decisions, and in the conduct of municipal affairs.

The cause of this legislation is in striking contrast to these mementos of a day when not even the term "social service" had been coined, for, in its present significance at least, social service and social legislation has been the development of very recent years.

It cannot be denied, to be sure, that in business and in politics we are still individualists, but there is much evidence that even in these fields concern for the common welfare is coming to be a determining influence, while in the field of social legislation there has been within the past few years such expansion and deepening as scarcely has a precedent.

Necessity is said to be the mother of invention. The emergency of depression has developed many and varied plans for the annihilation of depression and the return of prosperity.

Charity in any form has always seemed an abhorrent thing, and it must be so especially to the useful citizen who, through the vagaries of life, finds his old age only a series of disheartening days of dependency upon friends, relatives, or institutions. How much better, more logical, and humane, then, to provide a system on a national scale of retiring our citizens on an old-age-compensation basis? We retire our postal employees, veteran soldiers and sailors, policemen, firemen, teachers, and others. Certainly, to my mind, the rank and file of our citizens, deserve the equal advantages and security in old age which these special groups of citizens enjoy through organization and their willingness to contribute a small share of their earnings to a pension.

Many persons will say that it is the duty of everyone to save for his old age—to lay aside some part of his earnings in stocks and bonds, or in banks, so that he may be assured of enough to live on in his declining years. Others will say that there are institutions for the aged and infirm.

You have only to look around you to see a few of the millions of our citizens who, unfamiliar with the ways of money and finance, saved for years, only to find themselves destitute with the winter of lifetime approaching.

Senator HUEY LONG plans to scatter the wealth by taking from the rich and giving to the poor. He advocates this because the wealth of the Nation is practically $300,000,000,000, and the greater part of it is owned and controlled by a very small percentage of the total number of people in the country.

If this wealth were liquid and capable of division, the plan would not be quite so fantastic. When it is considered that nine-tenths of this wealth consists of buildings, plants, and machinery and its use made entirely impossible if divided into parts, the impossibility of carrying out the plan seems evident. These plants can serve but one purpose—the production of goods. So far as the whole people are concerned, it matters not whether he who designed this machinery continues to operate it or whether some other man of equal knowledge of business shall take it over.

What does matter is that it shall be so operated as to produce the largest amount of goods possible in order that the comforts of life may be more uniformly distributed among the great mass of people.

In ancient times the laws of the Medes and the Persians were regarded as the unchangeable rule of conduct for the human race. These laws have long been abandoned. But the law of gravitation existed before and since. The law of supply and demand was then, as well as now, recognized by all intelligent people and in the long run has controlled the activities of all peoples.

The 1930 census showed that there were 6,633,805 persons in the United States aged 65 or over. Of this group, 2,204,967, or 33.2 percent were gainfully employed. Needless to say, that percentage has greatly decreased in the last few years. The depression had begun when the census was taken, but it was not recognized as a major economic depression until some time later. Even the normal lowering of the maximum employment age which has been an accompaniment of the machine, would make for a decrease since 1920 in the percentage of 65-year-old persons who are gainfully employed. To prove this, one needs only to compare present employment figures of this group with those of some 40 years ago. For an instance, 73.1 percent of the men 65 years or over in 1890 were gainfully employed, but in 1930 only 58.3 percent were so employed.

Pension provisions for old age are by no means lacking. Industry began making them as long ago as 30 years. Trade unions and churches have pension systems, too. Some of the States, including New York, have set up funds to replace the old poorhouse system with modernized methods of caring for aged dependents. According to a report last year by the American Association for Social Security, there were then in this country about 100,000 persons receiving public old-age pensions, about 60,000 receiving care in almshouses, and an equal number in benevolent homes for the aged. In addition, about 140,000 persons were receiving industrial pensions, and about 20,000 from trade unions, fraternal societies, and churches. The number of persons receiving retirement pensions from Federal, State, and municipal employees' funds, including teachers, was placed at 100,000. None of these groups included the military pensioners. At the time the association made this report 477,230 old people were on the unemployment-relief rolls and its report stated that hundreds of thousands of aged dependents were being supported by children or other relatives. As to the efficacy of industrial-pension plans, Murray W. Lattimer, of Industrial Relations Counselors, Inc., reported 2 years ago that industrial pension payments at the beginning of 1932 "probably came close to $100,000,000 per annum." The depression revealed weaknesses in many of the plans and a consequence was the abandonment between 1929 and 1932 of about 10 percent of the industrial pension systems operating in 1929. Moreover, in the case of perhaps 30 percent of the employees still under pension systems in 1932, the benefits had been reduced in various ways from the 1929 scale.

It is not possible in brief scope to present a clear picture of all the ramifications which thus far have made inadequate the existing systems of old-age pensions as the machine increasingly does the work that old but skilled and willing hands formerly did. These few facts, however, help to reveal the size of the task involved.

To finance the cost of old-age benefit in the security plan we are considering, there will be a tax of 2 percent on pay rolls, beginning in 1937. This tax will increase to 6 percent on pay rolls in 1949. The employers and employees will contribute to this in equal amounts.

In the first year this tax is expected to produce $400,000,000. When the tax increases to 6 percent, the yield is expected to be $1,250,000,000 annually. These estimates are based on the wages of today, not on the wages and employment of the flush years of prosperity.

Out of these funds compensation would be paid to workers who lose their jobs and to persons who reach the age of 65 years after having been gainfully employed. It is expected that 50 percent of all persons now gainfully employed, or 15,000,000, would derive these benefits.

There are provisions in the plan for other persons who are not accommodated by the above features of it. These provisions will be financed by direct taxes upon the public. The National and State Governments would assess equal amounts upon the taxpayers.

When the system is in full bloom it will raise $2,082,000,000 every year, based on present employment conditions in the country, as follows:

Unemployment compensation	$600,000,000
Old-age benefits	1,250,000,000
Old-age assistance	99,500,000
Aid to dependent children	49,500,000
Aid to crippled children, maternal and child health, public health, and child welfare	34,000,000
Cost of administration	49,000,000

The plan contemplates that a revolving fund of $32,000,000,000—the greatest in all history—will be accumulated in 30 years from the receipts for old-age benefits alone.

IMPORTATION OF FOODSTUFFS

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD by attaching thereto at this point in the RECORD the result of a study and investigation that I have made in respect to the importation of foodstuffs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, every day the people of our country turn to their daily papers and their radios for information on current affairs. Every day their ideas are formed through these mediums as to what is going on in the Government and in the country. Now, it is very easy for a newspaper or for a person who is quoted by a newspaper to give out a few facts which may be quite true in themselves but which give so small a part of the whole picture as to be absolutely false in their total effect.

For more than a month I have been watching how certain facts are being used in just this way—facts having to do with the imports of agricultural products into this country. I have seen how carping critics of crop control—both in the newspapers and right here on the floor of the House—have used these facts to give a totally wrong impression of the actual situation with regard to these imports. Listening to these critics you would think that the baby beef now being fattened in Iowa and Nebraska are being fed nothing but Argentine corn, and that every day our American school children are sitting down to Grape Nuts made from Canadian wheat. Moreover, you would think that the Secretary of Agriculture had arranged with the United States Weather Bureau to cause a drought last year just so we could import rye from Poland and barley malt from Czechoslovakia.

I do not say that the newspapers or the Members of this House who are telling about all these oceans of imports flowing into the country are doing so with a malicious intent to deceive. But I do say that when they give these figures on imports and then fail to give the real reasons for these imports, and when they fail to tell the whole story about these imports, they are misleading the people.

I am a farmer from a farming district of a farming State. I think I know something about farmers' problems and about farmers' psychology. It is a very serious matter to me when I know that farmers in my State are being misled by statements they read in the papers or hear over the radio about agricultural imports. It is a very serious matter when I know that such statements are being used by carping critics of crop control to confuse the issues that face farmers and to lead them away from their own best interests.

For example, a letter has come to me from a very intelligent and well-meaning farmer, whom I know, which states:

I heard over the radio last night that we have imported a million bushels of corn. Can this be true, especially at a time when the administration has been trying to cut down production?

That man has unwittingly been taken in by these carping critics of crop control. Someone has been holding up this fact of a little dribble of corn coming into this country to try to confuse this man about the problems that face him and other American farmers and lead him astray down an alley that goes nowhere.

In a few brief moments I want to show you the real facts about this important situation. I am not defending the A. A. A. or any other agency of Government. But I do want to try to give you the whole picture about imports, how much they amount to, and what really caused them. Let us see what the facts are, and then you can judge for yourself what the facts mean.

In the first place, let us ask this question: Have we ever imported agricultural products before? It may surprise some people who have been listening to the carping critics of crop control to learn that the United States has been importing certain amounts of agricultural products for years. I will not go into the reasons for that now. But I have here a table compiled from official records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which gives the average imports of our chief agricultural products for the 8 months' period from July through February over the last 10 years. Then it gives the imports of these same products for the last 8 months—that is, up to the end of February. This period is used in order to have a corresponding time comparison with the first 8 months of the fiscal crop year—from July 1, 1934, to March 1, 1935.

TABLE I.—Imports of certain groups of agricultural products, July to February, 10-year average, 1924–25 to 1933–34, and 1934–35

NOTE.—Foreign Agricultural Service Division. Compiled from official records of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Now, what have we been importing over the last 10 years? For each 8-month period, on an average, we imported 366,000 short tons of feeds and fodder; corn, barley, oats, wheat for feed, hay, and so on. We imported 53,000,000 pounds of meats; we imported 481,000,000 pounds of vegetables; we imported 97,000,000 pounds of dairy products. I will not read all the items on this list. But this should make it clear that imports of agricultural products are not unique during the last 8 months, as some people have been trying to make us believe. We were importing all this stuff every year before this administration ever came into office and before such a thing as crop control was thought of.

Now, how do these 10-year averages compare with the imports of the last 8 months that we have heard so much about? It may surprise you again to know that only in the case of grains and fodder has there been any increase in imports over the 10-year average. Sugar imports run about the same, but for the other products we are actually importing less now than we did over the last 10 years. Vegetable imports were 14 percent less, meat imports were 17 percent less, and dairy products were 61 percent less during the last 8-month period than they were on an average over the previous 10 years. Let us be fair about this question of imports and not try to make our people believe that agricultural imports were unheard of before this administration came into office.

Getting back to the feed imports—corn, oats, feed wheat, and the rest—even these were less than three times as large during the last 8 months as they were on the average for 10 years back; and this after the worst drought in the history of our country.

It was these grains that were worst hit by the 1934 drought. The bulk of our grain and fodder crops is grown in the Middle West, where the drought fell with tremendous effect; and you cannot legislate against drought. Let us see for a moment just how badly the drought cut down these grain crops.

I have here another table showing the 5-year average production of our chief grains and then the production in 1934.

[1] No program.

If you add up the average production of wheat, corn, oats, barley, and rye for the 5 years from 1928 through 1932, you get a total of just under 5,000,000,000 bushels of all these grains. If you add up the production of these grains in 1934, you get a total of only a little over two and a half million bushels. In other words, production was cut just about in half during 1934. Now, how much of this terrible loss in grain production was due to the drought, and how much was due to the A. A. A. programs? There were not any programs for barley, oats, or rye. The best figures I can get for the reduction in corn and wheat due to the A. A. A. programs puts the figure at about 50,000,000 bushels for wheat and 200,000,000 bushels for corn. All the rest was due to drought. That makes the loss due to drought in all these grains equal to over 2,000,000,000 bushels, or almost eight times as much as the reduction under the A. A. A. When we talk about imports, let us be fair and put the blame where it belongs. When the worst drought in history comes along and cuts grain production by over 2,000,000,000 bushels, you do not have to look any further to see why we are importing a few million bushels of these grains.

But now, if you will allow me, I will take these grains one by one and see just how much we are importing. I will start out with wheat. Every bushel of wheat that comes into this country comes in under the provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930. During the past 8 months we have imported a total of 16,903,852 bushels of wheat. Everyone knows that's a lot of wheat, but after you find out why this wheat was imported, and how much of it was used for domestic consumption, you will get a different side of the picture. We imported from Canada, duty free, 5,116,867 bushels of wheat to be milled in bond and reexported. These 5,000,000 bushels do not affect our domestic market. They do allow our mills to do that milling and give American workers the employment found in milling that wheat and in handling the wheat and flour. Also, from Canada, we imported 2,271,266 bushels of wheat that paid a special tariff of around 14 cents a bushel, and came in under bond to be milled and re-exported to Cuba. We received the tariff on these imports. Our mills received the profit of milling, and our labor was given employment. All this bonded wheat—over 7,000,000 bushels of it altogether—did not affect our domestic market. Is there anyone who would like to exclude such imports?

From Canada we imported into this country 4,394,957 bushels of wheat that is unfit for human consumption. This wheat enters under a 10-percent ad valorem duty. This wheat comes in to help make up some of the loss in feed supplies due to the drought. It does not compete with wheat that is used for flour. Around the 1st of April this feed wheat was selling in Chicago about 24 cents under No. 2 grade domestic wheat. On April 2, on the Chicago market, Canadian feed wheat was selling at 79 cents per bushel; our No. 3 wheat at $1.03 and No. 2 wheat at $1.03⅓ cents per bushel. I should like to ask the gentlemen from the Northwest who have been so anxious about imports of wheat if they want to place their own high-class wheat in a class to compete with this low-grade Canadian wheat?

All the wheat that is left is 5,115,763 bushels. Probably some of you recall the statement made here on the floor about the huge wheat imports from France. In the last 8 months there has been one shipment from France amounting to 8,751 bushels. Any of you who are aware of the costs involved in this import can figure out the profits of that transaction. The only other country to send wheat to the United States outside of Canada was Syria, with a total 8-month import of 2 bushels.

Thus we have 5,115,763 bushels of wheat to compete with our domestic crop. Why? Practically all of this wheat was of the durum type. Everyone knows that durum wheat is a particularly hard-kernel wheat which is just used in the manufacture of such products as macaroni, for which other types of wheat are not suitable. Now, from 1929 through 1933 our average production of durum wheat was 39,000,000 bushels. But last year it fell to only 7,000,000 bushels. If there had been no reduction program, this amount might have been increased by perhaps a million bushels. In other words, our durum wheat crop in 1934 could have been only 8,000,000 bushels without any control program. There is only one explanation for this falling off of durum production, and that was the drought. We have four durum wheat States—Minnesota, Montana, North and South Dakota—and all of these States were very badly hit by the drought. Our seven or eight million bushels of durum wheat would not have been sufficient to meet our domestic needs. Therefore we have been importing this type of wheat. As I said before, you cannot legislate against drought.

All the wheat we have imported for domestic use in the last 8 months is only about 3 percent of the loss attributable to the drought. Moreover, I might point out that we have imported wheat from Canada before, due to particular conditions in our own domestic production. In the 1923–24 crop year, for instance, we imported thirteen and one-half million bushels.

These are the facts about the wheat imports, and you must take them into consideration before you make your criticism about the crop-control program.

Now, as to the other grains. Over the air, in the press, and here on the floor of the House you hear and read of the imports of rye, barley, and oats, and always the moral is pointed out that these are due to the present farm program. But the fact is, gentlemen, that there were no reduction programs carried on for any of these grains. The drought curtailed production of these grains just as it did for corn and wheat, and made it necessary to take in some imports. In fact, imports of these grains have been relatively larger than imports of corn and wheat. At that, they are actually very small. We have imported only a little over 9,000,000 bushels of oats, in spite of the 50-percent loss in this crop due to the drought, and amounting to an estimated 688,000,000 bushels. We imported 7,824,000 bushels of barley, and the drought loss was over 50 percent, or an estimated 164,000,000 bushels.

The imports have amounted to 5,864,000 bushels. In the case of rye, as in the case of barley, we all know that the repeal of the eighteenth amendment has increased the demand for these grains in this country in the distilling and brewing industries. Meanwhile the drought had reduced our already low production of rye by about 22,000,000 bushels. As there was no reduction in acreage on any of these grains, we are forced to the conclusion that the drought alone was responsible.

Now I come to the most controversial point in this matter of grain imports—the focal point of attack by the carping critics of crop control. I refer to the imports of corn. To hear some people talk, and to read the stories in some newspapers, you would think that this country was being covered with a regular blizzard of shelled corn from Argentina. I am going to present a table showing these imports of corn from July 1, 1934, to March 1, 1935.

	Bushels
Belgium	8
Canada	231
Mexico	4,219,727
Cuba	14,710
Dominican Republic	120,748
Argentina	1,551,452
China	10,705
Kwantung	67,859
Rumania	326,553
Yugoslavia	180,532
Union of South Africa	16,034
Nicaragua	105
Haiti	1,334
Total	6,509,998

Those 6,509,998 bushels represent every last bushel of corn that was imported into this country during the last 8 months, ending March 1, 1935. I realize that these figures do not agree with the press comments that we are importing corn at the rate of a million bushels a week. They certainly do not agree, either, with the figures given by my respected colleagues, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. If I recall correctly, it seems to me that both these gentlemen stated the other day that on February 25, 1935, a shipload consisting of 3,000,000 bushels of corn from Argentina landed at Baltimore, just 40 miles from the Nation's Capital.

Now, the gentlemen who referred to the 3,000,000-bushel import at Baltimore on February 25 were undoubtedly convinced that this amount of corn did arrive in Baltimore on that day. When I heard that statement and realized that official figures showed only an 8-months' import of 1,551,452 bushels of corn from Argentina, I realized that something must be wrong. I found that in the month of February we had an official record of only 974,189 bushels of corn having been imported from Argentina. To get this straightened out I made two telephone calls to the port officials at Baltimore, and what did I find? I found that on February 25 a vessel named Arcgow entered the port and on February 25–26 landed 263,920 bushels of corn. This was not an import at that time. It was a warehouse transaction, as that corn was landed under bond no. 502 and placed in the warehouse. Since that date 112,308 bushels of this corn have been withdrawn from the warehouse and now appear as having been imported. I am illustrating my argument that the figures are so widely disseminated and grossly exaggerated by taking this one instance wherein a 3,000,000-bushel import shrank to 263,920 bushels and finally to 112,308 bushels.

However, to return to the six and one-half million bushels of corn which we did import during the 8 months from July through February. How much corn is this? I should like the gentlemen to realize that this country produces two and one-half billion bushels of corn in an average year. These imports then represent about a quarter of 1 percent of our average corn production, and I do not think that is going to affect our domestic market for corn very much. To put it another way, there are single counties in my home State, Nebraska, that produce that much corn in a single good year.

The drought last year hit the Corn Belt very hard and cut down production by about a billion bushels. The imports of six and one-half million bushels do not begin to touch this tremendous loss in corn last year due to the drought. Also, I should like to point out that these imports of corn are being used on the seaboards of the United States. Corn imports have to pay ocean shipping charges, insurance, handling charges, plus the duty of 25 cents a bushel, and these imports cannot afford to be hauled by rail very far into the interior of the United States. They are not displacing corn that is for sale in the Corn Belt of the United States. They are supplementing in a very small way the short feed supplies on the eastern and western coasts due to the losses caused by the drought. Moreover, when pastures come in this spring, I predict that we will not hear any more of these shiploads of corn landing in Baltimore or anywhere else.

Now, I hope I have made clear the real facts about these imports. In the first place, they were brought about by the worst drought in our history and not by the crop-control program. In the second place, the imports that have actually come in are so small in relation to our domestic production and consumption of the same products as to be practically negligible from a commercial point of view. The newspapers and individuals who are making a noise about these dribbles of imports have got hold of a mouse, and they are trying to blow this mouse up and make it look like a lion, or maybe an elephant. As I said before, I am not defending the A. A. A. or any other administration program, but in all fairness let us see things in their right proportion and not use a few unanalyzed facts to draw a red herring across the trail and confuse the public.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7260) to provide for the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health, and the administration of their unemployment-compensation laws; to establish a Social Security Board; to raise revenue; and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7260, with Mr. MCREYNOLDS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time to talk to the membership on both sides of the Chamber with reference to some of the legislation that is pending before us. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] and myself have been besought by quite a number of Members to gain our consent for the House to adjourn over next Friday and Saturday. The reason assigned for adjourning is that it is Good Friday. Of course, that is a matter for the House to determine. However, because of the legislation which is pending before us, I think the House ought to seriously consider whether or not we are going to take these recesses until we have disposed of some of the very important business before us, some of which must be disposed of before we adjourn. I know there has been a good deal of criticism over the country, and many editorials have been written, accusing Congress of being dilatory in the consideration and passage of important legislation. These critics overlook the fact that this is the first Congress that has met in January rather than in December, and that it was impossible for the House to organize its committees and get started upon the consideration of some of the most important bills that have ever been introduced into Congress, until probably the middle or the latter part of January. That has served to delay matters. I am happy to say, however, that the House has so far kept pace in the consideration of the most important bills as they have been reported from the committees, but a number of committees are now about ready to report out important bills on which they have been holding hearings for weeks and months.

Those bills, I am informed, are likely to be reported very soon, and I shall call attention to some of them so that Members may see just how important it is that the House stay on the job and not adjourn, as we did yesterday, at 4:15 o'clock in the afternoon. We must stay here for a reasonable time each day to dispose of these bills and adjourn, because I am convinced that it is very important from the standpoint of the country that the Congress close up its business at the earliest possible moment, adjourn, and go home. [Applause.]

What have we before us? We have pending this social-security bill. In the remark I made a moment ago about adjourning early yesterday I certainly did not intend to criticize those in charge of this bill, because I understand that it was due to the fact that promises had been made to certain gentlemen that they would be given time to address the House, but when the time came to yield to them they were not here.

I think we ought to have a change in that practice. When a Member has secured time to address the House, I do not think it is right for him to leave the House in the afternoon, thereby holding up the entire proceedings and forcing adjournment probably an hour and a half or two hours earlier than we otherwise would adjourn. [Applause.]

I am frank to say to you that if I were chairman in charge of one of these bills I would have it understood that those to whom I had agreed to yield time must be here, and I would yield them time at the moment I had agreed to yield; but if the Members to whom I had given time were not here, they would have to take their chances in the future.

If we could have proceeded yesterday as planned, this bill could have been finished by Friday night. I am sure of that. There are only three or four important amendments that will take any time. The House will have had 23 hours general discussion in regard to this bill. Therefore, I say that if we could have consumed from four and a half to five hours each day in this general debate, we could have gotten through with this bill by Friday night. I still hope that we can do that and adjourn over Saturday.

Now, after this bill is concluded we have the naval appropriation bill, now ready to be taken up just as soon as the Committee on Appropriations can get the floor. It involves increases, and it will take possibly a little longer to consider that bill than ordinarily.

Then there follows the smaller bill, the legislative appropriation bill, which is ready for consideration.

I understand a banking bill is practically ready for submission to the House and will be ready as soon as we can get this legislation out of the way.

There will probably be some kind of a utility bill reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and a bus and transportation bill.

The gentleman from Virginia, Chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported a bill yesterday which he is very anxious to have considered at this session.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, has one, and possibly two, bills that he is very anxious to have considered.

A day or two ago several bills were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, relating to the control of alcohol. Those bills must be passed. They will not take much time, but they will take some time of the House.

We have the Private Calendar with several hundred bills thereon. We have the Unanimous Consent Calendar with possibly a hundred or more bills upon it at this moment.

Then we have legislation to extend the N. R. A.

The Committee on Ways and Means, which has given as faithful, earnest, and capable work as I ever knew any committee to give in the consideration of this bill, has not had an opportunity to consider the N. R. A. bill.

Then possibly we will have some kind of a tax bill. I do not mean an increase in taxes but an extension of present taxes expiring by limitation—as I hope, some relief for smaller industry. [Applause.]

I could name a number of other important matters that will be up for consideration and will be disposed of if we have time to do it. There are a number of other committees which have bills, and those committees are pressing for action.

I remind you of these things in order that you and I may understand the magnitude of the task before us and the importance of giving our time and attention from now on to the disposition of at least some of this legislation. I do not mean to say that all the legislation I have enumerated will be passed. Certainly I am not putting them on what is popularly known as the "must calendar." There are several of them that will have to be passed before this Congress adjourns, but certainly not all of these to which I have referred.

However, they are all important matters of legislation, being pressed by the committees which have had them under consideration. Those committees and the country are entitled to have them considered if we can do so in a reasonable time. If we are thinking about an early adjournment—and I think all of us ought to think about it in the interest of the country—we have got to make up our minds to stay here on the job and attend to this legislation.

That is all I wanted to say. I simply wanted to make this statement, in justice to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] and myself, with reference to adjourning over on Friday and Saturday. We did not adjourn over for Good Friday last year. It has not been the custom to adjourn for Good Friday. None of the departments are going to quit business. I do not know of anything better, except going to church, than to come here and devote ourselves intelligently and faithfully to the discharge of the people's business; and I hope we can do that. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I appreciate very much the very timely and appropriate remarks of our distinguished Speaker relative to the importance of the membership of the House remaining on the job and diligently prosecuting the work which the Congress has on hand.

I feel somewhat responsible for the time that was lost on yesterday, yet it will be recognized that the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member, my good friend from Massachusetts, must necessarily keep in mind the ordinary courtesies that are due to members of our committee. We both endeavored yesterday to keep Members here who had requested time to speak on this bill; yet, by 3 or 4 o'clock, some of those who requested time were not here. I had one of the clerks of our committee call up Members who had applied for time and urge them to come and make their speeches. But it was a futile effort on my part. I wish to assure the Speaker and the Members of the House that as far as lies in my power, I shall insist on those who have requested time being here when their names may be called, and if they are not here, they will take the chance of going to the foot of the list or losing out entirely. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to confirm what the distinguished Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has just said. Members on the Republican side have been waiting for time to speak on this bill. Unfortunately the schedule of the gentleman from North Carolina, and my own schedule, broke down yesterday. I do not think we ought to be unduly criticized, however, for this one particular occasion. I assured certain gentlemen that they would not be called upon yesterday; and this assurance, to a certain degree, was based on the fact that the majority side, in use of time, was considerably behind us on this side. Unfortunately neither side had a speaker.

I agree with the distinguished Speaker of the House also that we should do everything possible to keep our Members here who want to be heard. Further than that, I think this measure is so vital for or against the interests of the people that the Members themselves, whether they are going to speak or not, ought to be here. We ought to keep a quorum here, Mr. Chairman, when we are in the Committee of the Whole; and, as far as I am concerned, if the Chairman of the Committee sees fit to insist on that feature, I shall be glad to cooperate on my side in aiding in keeping a quorum here during the time of the general debate. It does get tedious. We all know, especially those of use who are obliged to stay, that it is extremely tedious to listen to this debate for 4 or 5 hours on a stretch; and I do not blame the Members for wanting to get away from it. It does seem to me, nevertheless, that it is a duty, not only to our constituents but to the country, to be on hand, and I, for one, will cooperate in every way I can toward this end. [Applause.]

I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. As this seems to be a field day on the work of the House, I think perhaps it would be all right if I said a word or two. I am in entire sympathy with the statement made by the Speaker of the House that we should stay here whenever it is necessary and whenever we have work to do. As far as I, personally, am concerned, and as far as the minority is concerned, we are always willing to do that.

I do not know whether the Speaker's remarks were intended as a lecture or not. As a matter of fact, we all know that the program of the House of Representatives is entirely up to the majority party, and if we have not been working at full speed up to the present time it is because those responsible for the program and responsible for keeping this House in session have not had business before us that we could attend to at the time. While perhaps we have adjourned early sometimes and over Saturday at other times, I think it has been well understood that there was no special business before the House at that time for consideration. If the people who are responsible for this program present it to us and bring us here, we are willing to stay and consider it; and we will stay here just as many hours every day as you want to stay. We are interested in completing the program, getting through, and winding up this Congress as early as possible. [Applause.] You must remember, however, the minority cannot present the program or make it up from day to day, but we will join with you in putting it through if you give us a program, but in no way are we responsible for the lack of accomplishment of this session up to the present time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think the RECORD at this point should show that the majority of the Members of this House work evenings and Sundays in their offices trying to keep up with their correspondence. I do not think the impression should go out to the country that we are playing hookey when we are not in session on the floor of the House. I see Members come out of their offices at 10 and 11 o'clock at night and see them there all day Sunday. Personally, I have not had a Sunday since New Year's. I think the RECORD should show that there is other work for Members of Congress besides attending the sessions of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, in justice to the Membership of the House I ought to say this: We old-timers know that at the present time we have about five times as much office work and departmental business before us every day during this session as we had in former years. Many Members speak to me every day about this matter and ask if they cannot have Saturday off in which to catch up with their office work. Actually, it is a physical and human impossibility for us to stay on the floor of the House several hours each day and 6 days a week and do the work that is heaped upon us and especially attend to it all with only one secretary and one stenographer. I regretted exceedingly that we did not give ourselves an additional stenographer during this term of Congress. [Applause.] As a matter of fact, we all know that another body has from two to five times as much clerical help as we do. They do not hesitate to give themselves an additional session clerk whenever they feel like it, and I feel that we ought to have done so. Members receive from 50 to 300 letters a day—sometimes more. I received 472 letters one day. Some Members have received over 1,000 letters in a day. Our constituents expect us to pay attention to their mail. For this reason, I have on nearly every Friday asked unanimous consent that we adjourn over Saturday, and I may say that the minority have thoroughly and heartily coincided with that request. The minority leader has several times emphasized the importance of giving the Members of the House that chance to attend to their office and departmental work; and I feel that the country ought to know why we have adjourned over Saturday. We do not adjourn over Saturdays because we want to play golf or go to a ball game. We spend all that time attending to official business in our offices. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the Chair kindly inform us as to the amount of time that has been used?

The CHAIRMAN. There remains 4 hours 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and 4 hours 44½ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does that include the 3 hours additional?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, of the hour and a half granted to me under the new program, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], to use as he may see fit.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise not to speak on this particular measure, but to suggest, if it is proper in view of the very justly deserved reprimand to which we have listened, that the committee rise and that we have a quorum call so that the gentlemen who are absent may have the benefit of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are 115 Members present, a quorum.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We have been here on this side of the aisle practically all of the time, and the other day, if I remember correctly, we tried to get two calls, but we could not get them.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a quorum present at the time the suggestion was made.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, the discussions this morning were diverted from the bill, I think very profitably, to consider our errors and inadvertences which have grown in number with the passing of time. As I listened to the remarks of my colleagues I could not help but feel that they constituted a sort of a public confession of sin, in which we all joined, and for the responsibility of which we all accepted our individual share. A public confession is sometimes good for the soul.

I believe that in the consideration of this bill we should adopt that same attitude, because, Mr. Chairman, the bringing forth of this so-called "security bill" is nothing less than the commission of a sin against the people of the United States of America, and especially against those to whom the bill pretends to bring relief.

Last summer I was not a Member of this Congress. I was living out West trying to earn a fair return by following the profession which is mine. It was a period of economic gloom. Depression and despair filled our land. In the midst of that gloom in its darkest aspect was heard a voice—a voice which brought cheer to the depressed and gave to the people of our land courage to face a future fraught with uncertainty and doubt. It was the voice of the President of the United States.

On June 8, 1934, the President sent to this body a message, from which I at this time, with your indulgence, will borrow a few quotations. Among other things he said:

Among our objectives I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first. * * *

This security for the individual and for the family concerns itself primarily with three factors. * * *

The third factor relates to security against the hazards and vicissitudes of life.

If, as our Constitution tells us, our Federal Government was established, among other things, "to promote the general welfare", it is our plain duty to provide for that security upon which welfare depends. * * *

Hence I am looking for a sound means which I can recommend to provide at once security against several of the great disturbing factors in life—especially those which relate to unemployment and old age. * * *

All over this land our people harkened, took courage, and sought in their humble way to assist in the working out of a legislative program which would grant that which was necessary and which all the people recognized as necessary; that is, "security against the hazards and vicissitudes of life," especially as affecting those who have fallen as they made their way along life's pathway because of the weaknesses inherent to old age. Months have gone by. Almost a year has passed since the President spoke those inspiring words, and now the Committee on Ways and Means brings out this bill which they have the temerity to proclaim is the legislative translation of the humanitarian ideas of the great President who leads us during these days of trial.

Mr. Chairman, let us remember that "security against the vicissitudes of life" was promised to the aged. By that promise hope was implanted in the hearts of 7,500,000 of our fellow citizens, men and women, all over the age of 65. In title I of this tragic proposal but $49,750,000 is appropriated for this purpose. A resort to but simple arithmetic, as we learned it in school, reveals that that means but $6.56 for each of our aged each year. Further division discloses that this fund will provide but 54 cents a month—1½ cents a day—for each of those whose shadows no longer fall to the west. If this be security, I no longer know the meaning of that word. It is not even a decent dole. It is a penurious, pauper pension, pittance. Its mere suggestion is an insult to the Nation we love and an insult to the flag we revere.

Mr. Chairman, do not think for one minute that the people of the country are so gullible as to accept this legislative travesty as the fulfillment of the President's promise given and made in his message of June 8, 1934. It is a cruel and ridiculous thing. What faith can we place in the promise of "security" in years to come in the light of that niggardly 1½ cents a day, that 54 cents a month, or that $6.56 a year? What promise can the future hold if they offer only that now? They say in title II of this hated proposal that we shall give the good people who have been compelled because of the ruthless passing of time to give up their lifetime pursuits a stingy $10 a month to serve as their shield of security against the hazards and vicissitudes of old age. If they labor and earn much, perhaps we will give them $15 a month to stave off starvation, to clothe their bodies from the cold.

Mr. Chairman, can the Members of this House go home to the good people who sent them here and tell them that this is an old-age-security bill? Security against what, may I ask? There is security against nothing in this proposal. It is a hideous joke, a cruel jest that you are perpetrating upon the people who are looking to us for salvation.

The other day one of the great leaders of the majority rose in this House to denounce the plan that has been suggested by Dr. Townsend. He said:

There is going to be a day of reckoning for the Townsend planners. It will come when the poor and the distressed people find the snare and delusion of it.

May I suggest to the gentleman of the majority that the day of reckoning is going to be yours, not for those of us who are looking with interest upon the plan which has been evolved by this gentle doctor from the far West. You are the ones who are going to face the day of reckoning when you go back to the people who sent you here, to the aged people numbering 10,000,000 or more, and try to justify yourselves with a pension of $6.56 a year, a pension which will yield to the old people 54 cents a month, a pension which will afford them 1½ cents each day. You will experience difficulties when you try to explain that such niggardly sums as these constitute "security against the hazards and vicissitudes of life"—the security which the Chief Executive of our country has pledged to the fathers and mothers of all of us in his public expressions. Yes; there will be a day of reckoning, and that day of reckoning will be for you, the gentlemen of the majority, not for the Townsend planners.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How many on the gentleman's side of the House will support the Townsend plan?

Mr. GEARHART. I am the keeper of my own conscience. I shall support the Townsend plan.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But the gentleman was referring to that side of the House when he made his statement.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield.

Mr. BUCK. Which one of the Townsend plans does the gentleman propose to support?

Mr. GEARHART. There is no question about that in the minds of any Member here, except those who are opposed to an adequate pension plan. No one is supporting the first Townsend plan.

Mr. BUCK. Is the gentleman supporting the second Townsend plan?

Mr. GEARHART. I am supporting the second plan.

Mr. BUCK. Then the gentleman is not supporting the third Townsend plan, which was introduced the other day.

Mr. GEARHART. If there is ever to be a third Townsend plan, it will be because the gentleman from California or some other has suggested a better plan. So far there has been no third plan.

Mr. BUCK. May I suggest that a fourth plan was suggested the other day by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]?

Mr. GEARHART. I beg to disagree with the gentleman. A fourth plan has not been proposed by anyone. It was simply a perfecting amendment that the gentleman from Oregon suggested.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What will they receive per month from the present Townsend plan?

Mr. GEARHART. I want to be very, very frank with the gentleman. That lies largely in the field of speculation, for the simple reason that there is no experience to guide us in respect to all of the tax details. I am not deceiving you or any of the old people who are looking to us for help in this day of their despair. However, there is one thing that is absolutely fair about the Townsend plan, and it is this: Whatever this tax yields, after the deduction of administration expenses, all of it will be prorated equally among the old folks, not giving, as does title II of the bill, more to the successful earners of large returns than to the poor and unsuccessful.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am in favor of an old-age pension, and I am hopeful of giving a good, substantial one. Under the present bill there is a guaranty of $15 a month, while there is no guaranty in the bill that the gentleman is advocating.

Mr. GEARHART. There is no guaranty of $15 a month in the bill that has been offered here by the majority. Only 28 States have any kind of old-age-pension law, and you do not agree to match their pensions with $15 or any other sum. The bill does not say anything about matching. The bill simply says that the United States, whenever a State has such a law, will remit to the State one-half of the sum so expended for old-age-pension purposes, not exceeding $15 for each pensioner.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In my State we pay them $30 a month, and with the $15 provided in the bill it will mean a total of $45.

Mr. GEARHART. I deny that that is true.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why?

Mr. GEARHART. The gentleman's State gives $30 a month. Under the terms of this bill, as it is now worded, the United States Government will reimburse your State to the extent of $15, and the old folks will not get a cent of it. All of the Federal contribution will go into the State's general fund.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is not true.

Mr. GEARHART. Has the gentleman read section 3 of title I?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I have, and I have consulted the chairman in relation to it, and he has stated on the floor of the House that they would receive the $30 plus the $15 a month.

Mr. GEARHART. Omitting from section 3 the immaterial, qualifying phrases, it provides that the Government shall pay each State an amount equal to one-half of the total sum expended by the State for old-age pensions.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It will be on a 50–50 basis.

Mr. GEARHART. So I say that this $54,950,000 will go to the States and not to the aged people, unless the States in legislation not yet enacted otherwise declare.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It was stated here the other day that there would be $4,000,000,000 under the Townsend plan. What would be the overhead in taking care of the fund and paying it out? That generally runs 30 or 40 percent, does it not?

Mr. GEARHART. It will not in this case, because we have not followed the majority policy of creating new bureaus and setting up new bureaucratic machinery. We propose to avail ourselves of the machinery already set up in the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Assuming that is true, there would not be much left, would there?

Mr. GEARHART. I do not think the cost of administration would be very much, in view of the fact we are using the facilities of the Veterans' Administration.

I must refuse to yield further, as the gentleman has occupied too much of my time.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MONAGHAN. As the gentleman reads the security bill now under consideration by the House, does he not find as I do that under it every farmer in the country, every domestic servant in the country, every one engaged in casual service in the country, every member of the crew of a vessel, or every sailor in the country, every man in the employ of the United States Government or in a subsidiary thereof, or anyone engaged in any service performed by a charitable organization or an educational organization, such as ministers and preachers, would be excluded from receiving consideration under this bill, and when you consider the amount that they must earn it practically eliminates the whole of America from its provisions.

Mr. GEARHART. A more devastating condemnation of this bill could not be stated, and I thank the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Of course, I know the gentleman from California, in commending the statement made by our friend from Montana as being such a devastating condemnation, could not understand for 1 minute that the exemptions referred to by the gentleman from Montana are exemptions that do not refer to any pensioner under title 1. Title 1, which is the old-age-pensions title, has no such exemptions.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Agricultural employees, casuals, domestics, Federal employees, and all those that were referred to as exempted in titles 8 and 9, are not exempted under the old-age benefits. Gentlemen should not miscontrue the plain English of the bill.

My friend the gentleman from California referred to title II giving pensions to the rich and preferring them to those who are poor. The gentleman was sincere in that statement, but title II does not refer to old-age pensions.

Mr. GEARHART. I must decline to yield further. I yielded for a question and not a speech.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Title II refers to the benefits that employers and employees pay for.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I think the gentleman ought to be fair. I yielded the gentleman time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman that if the other side uses the 3 minutes yielded to the gentleman he can let them use it, and then I will yield the gentleman more time.

Mr. GEARHART. I had, for the moment, forgotten the kindness of the gentleman from Kentucky. I am happy to yield further.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. You do not want to confuse title I with title II. Title I is old-age pension—a noncontributory system. Title II provides for old-age benefits for those who contribute.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman from California yield to me to ask a question of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. GEARHART. I cannot refuse the gentleman; I yield.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky how he interprets this provision, and I read from page 14?—

> The term "qualified individual" means any individual with respect to whom it appears to the satisfaction of the Board that, first, he is at least 65 years of age; and, second, the total amount of wages paid to him with respect to employment after December 31, 1936, and before he attains the age of 65 was not less than $2,000.

Now, I do not want to be unfair, but if I am mistaken, I want to be corrected.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I can correct it in a few words. If the gentleman will turn back to section 210 in title II he will see that it provides that the term "employment" means any service of whatever nature performed within the United States by an employee for his employer, except, and then it states the exemptions. These exemptions refer to title II but do not refer to title I.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I am speaking about the term "qualified individual."

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. That definition is in the same section of title II. The first five words in that section, "where used in this title", show it refers only to title II.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield further. Mr. Chairman, I have listened intently to the explanations given by the gentleman from Kentucky, and I fail to see therein a defense of this iniquitous measure worthy of even a moment's consideration. In other words, the exemptions in title II put the pensioner back under the provisions of title I, extends to the pensioner the munificent security of 1½ cents a day, 54 cents a month, $6.56 a year.

Now, I am going to talk about title II a few minutes. This title is absolutely un-American in principle. One of the most un-American provisions ever attempted to be written into an American law. It violates the fundamental American principle of equality. It says to those who earn more, "You shall benefit more under the provisions of this act."

I tell you that that is based on a cruel fallacy, nothing more nor less. Some men have a quality of acquisitiveness which enables them to "take and possess", to accumulate the good things of this world. They do not make the wealth, they merely have the ability to possess themselves of it. But even though they possess themselves of it, it is still a part of the wealth of the Nation—the wealth which the "other fellow" helped to create.

We see the mighty skyscraper on the corner that costs millions of dollars, and you immediately think of the genius that brought it into being, but that building would not be worth the price of a single brick that went into it, if it were not for the poor man, multiplied into thousands, who, day after day, walks by the corner on which the building stands. That is what creates the wealth that put that building there, that gave that building its value. That fellow who, in his small way, contributed his share—measured by his position in life—to the upbuilding of the national wealth, even though the wages he has earned and spent are small, is entitled to share equally during those declining days of his life, because that which we give him comes out of the national wealth he helped to create. It is wrong to say to the poor man, you shall take a measly $10 a month, and it is wrong to say to the man who, through better fortune, has accumulated more, you shall take $15 a month, giving more to those men who by nature's gift have that particular quality of acquisitiveness.

Gentlemen, the Townsend plan treats all equally when they have reached that day of retirement, that day when, because of the passing of time, they must yield to younger and more vigorous hands the carrying on of the work of the world. Such discrimination in the distribution of the wealth of the Nation is un-American, utterly indefensible.

So, I repeat, to again borrow the words of the distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee, the day of reckoning is going to be for you of the majority, who will have to defend these pitifully inadequate and cruelly unjust pensions as the fulfillment of our President's promise of "security against the vicissitudes of life." Do not let anyone tell you that this Townsend bill is not worthy of your consideration. I do not know exactly how much it is going to yield to the old folks, but I do know, whatever the sum may be, that they shall have their pro rata share. The old folks are good enough sports to accept whatever that tax will afford. You ought to be good enough sports to stand with them and thereby justify to a measure, at least, the President's promises to insure to the old people of this land a real security "against the hazards and vicissitudes of life." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman who just spoke took the floor for the purpose of making a home-consumption speech, that is within his right, if he had confined himself to what we generally know to be a home-consumption speech; but when the gentleman takes the floor and undertakes to criticize the provisions of the bill in the manner he does and makes the statements the gentleman does, it shows the gentleman is either intentionally or unintentionally—and I assume unintentionally—uninformed as to the contents of the bill. When the gentleman says that this provides for half a cent a day or a cent a day or 54 cents a month, the gentleman makes a statement which is absolutely inconsistent with the truth.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

On page 5598 of the RECORD of April 3, 1935, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] inserted an extract under permission to extend his remarks from an alleged report by Dun & Bradstreet which refers to "the sharpest rise that has been witnessed in business in the past quarter of a century." I call similar attention to the fact that in this morning's Washington Post there is an Associated Press dispatch headed "Dun & Bradstreet retracts forecast", in which dispatch the president of the company, Mr. A. D. Whiteside, makes a corrected statement, in which he said:

> No significant information justified the inadvertent and unauthorized departure from our policy of not making predictions as to the future business trend which was evidenced in our Weekly Review of Business released under date of April 12, 1935.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the president of Dun & Bradstreet says that whoever released that item did so unauthorized by the company, and it is evident they think the prophecy was very much exaggerated.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include certain excerpts and data to which I shall refer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it has been rather interesting to observe the attitude assumed by gentlemen on the minority side relative to the pending bill. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], the ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, led off with an attack on the bill. He criticized the Democratic majority of the Ways and Means Committee, charged that they had showed a lack of courage in handling the pending measure. He criticized the report and the hearings held, and every phase of the consideration given to this matter. I invite the attention of the House to the facts relative to the consideration of this bill.

Gentlemen on the minority side of the Ways and Means Committee have apparently been uncertain all along as to the attitude they will assume on this measure. They have been for it and against it and for it and against it again. Nobody knows where they will finally land or what their final action will be, but I venture the assertion that when the roll is called most of them will be found voting for this bill.

Now, criticism has been offered as to the consideration of this bill in the committee. I want to invite attention to the fact that during my period of service here, though it has not been very long, there has never been a measure considered, in my opinion, that has received more thorough and far-reaching consideration than the pending bill.

Just for a moment let us bear in mind that during the last Congress the so-called "Wagner-Lewis bill" was introduced and referred to the Ways and Means Committee of this House. A subcommittee was appointed, of which I had the honor to be a member. Extensive hearings were held on that measure. I hold here a copy of the hearings held at that time. Four hundred and twenty-six pages of testimony were taken on that measure. During the present Congress the Ways and Means Committee held extensive hearings on the pending measure. This volume which I hold in my hand contains 1,141 printed pages of testimony on the pending bill.

During the same time the measure has been under consideration by the Ways and Means Committee of the House the Finance Committee of the Senate has been holding hearings. This volume of their hearings contains 1,354 printed pages of testimony taken on this subject—in all, 2,921 printed pages of testimony in the hearings held on the subject matter embraced in this bill.

Then, criticism has been made as to the manner in which the committee has handled the measure. I wish to call to your attention the fact that this committee has given constant attention to this measure since the 21st day of January. From then down to this good hour this committee has been considering this measure.

Now, gentlemen on the minority side have offered criticism about members of the majority agreeing to certain changes and provisions. How different is the procedure that has been used for the consideration of this bill and some of the measures that were considered while the Republicans were in control of this House. It was my privilege to be here when the so-called "Smoot-Hawley tariff bill" was considered by the Ways and Means Committee of the House. The Republican members on the Ways and Means Committee locked the doors on all of the Democratic members of the committee, and 15 Republican members wrote the measure. No such partisan consideration has even been thought of in the consideration of this bill. They have participated in all of the consideration given by the committee to the pending measure.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. The gentleman will recall that the President's social-security committee spent 6 months in addition to the time devoted to the study of this problem to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman. I was going to refer to that.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Could the gentleman give us the names of the members of that committee?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I want to invite the gentleman's attention to the report on this bill. Allow me to simply observe, in passing, that I have never seen, in my experience here, as much gross ignorance—I am not referring to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in that statement; I have never seen as much gross ignorance displayed on any measure as on this pending bill. It is apparent that many of those who have addressed the Committee and undertaken to discuss this bill have either not even read the bill and the report accompanying it, or their powers of comprehension are far less than I have always accredited to them. The statements made by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART], who preceded me a few moments ago, and the interrogations offered by the distinguished gentleman from Montana, as well as the remarks made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION], on yesterday, show that their conception is as far from the real contents of this bill as it is possible for the human mind to comprehend.

Now, then, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], I simply want to invite his attention and the attention of others to the appendix appearing on page 39 of the report. There are three full pages of fine print giving the names of the various committees and individuals in this country who sat in with the Committee on Economic Security in giving study to this great subject. In that group it will be found that every phase of American activity has been included. We have capital and labor, the farmers, agriculture, all types of American interests and activity embraced in that large number of people who contributed to this plan that is here submitted. I am sure the gentleman will recognize the names of some of the outstanding industrial leaders of this Nation, as well as leaders in the labor movement, agricultural interests of the country, and various other types of citizenship in America.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman think, instead of finding fault with this great group of intelligent people it would have probably been the part of wisdom on the part of those who have charge of this bill to have given some consideration to the request made by the Republican members on the committee that this bill should have been separated into its proper categories so that people could understand it?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Of course, I do not agree with the gentleman from Ohio. I do not agree for a moment that he does not understand this bill. I do not think his own admission does him credit. It certainly does not do him the credit which I have always accorded him.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. But I am not on trial. The gentleman made a broad statement, and I think he will live to see the day when he will be sorry. He accuses this Congress of being ignorant of this bill. He and his cohorts are going to drive this bill through. He admits that this great group of people are all ignorant. Now, does he not think—I will say that I do—I think if those who had charge of this bill had divided it up into its individual categories and brought it out in that kind of shape so that somebody could understand it, then the gentleman would not criticize this whole House.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Now, the gentleman has put words into my mouth that I did not utter. The gentleman has misinterpreted and misconstrued my statement on that question. I have not charged any gross ignorance to the Membership of this House. I am not charging lack of knowledge on the part of the Membership of this House.

I said then and I say now that judging from some of the statements made here on the floor, some gentlemen either have not studied the bill and the report or else they simply have failed to comprehend the matter after they have studied it; and I do think and believe the gentleman from Ohio, in his sense of fairness, will admit that some statements have been made on this floor that have been absolutely shocking in the lack of knowledge with reference to this bill, shown in the making of the statements. Is not that true?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman if he has not heard statements made here that he knew absolutely show a lack of knowledge of what was in the bill?

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, our friend from Ohio pointed out to his colleagues from the floor wherein they were in error and stated that the bill should have been separated into several bills. I am fearful that our friend from Ohio is afraid that the bill has been brought in under a rule that will not permit amendment. Any title of the bill can be stricken in its entirety when the title comes up for final consideration.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Replying to the gentleman from Tennessee, I am perfectly willing to admit that the gentleman who has the floor and the gentleman from Kentucky are probably the two best qualified men on this subject in the House.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman gives me too much credit.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. These two gentlemen have had 2 or 3 years' intensive preparation which, added to their own natural acumen, makes them very knowing people. Whenever such a man comes into this House, however, after having spent 2 or 3 years studying this bill, stands before the Congress and uses the words "gross ignorance", which he did and which he wishes perhaps he might withdraw, something is wrong with his line of reasoning. I am not finding fault with him because of all his superior knowledge, but I say that somebody is to blame whenever you bring 435 people together and say that they are all grossly ignorant, something must be the matter with the bill to feel obliged to say that.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. The gentleman has not quoted me with entire correctness. I said then, I say now, and I shall continue to say that some statements made on the floor of the House show a gross ignorance of the contents of this bill; and that statement is true. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I would like to know what the gentleman thinks about those Republican Members who have vehemently denounced the bill because of the small amount of old-age pensions granted when neither they nor their party have ever initiated, thought of, or suggested a thing about old-age pensions.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is true, of course. We must bear in mind that there are two types of attack being made on this bill. There appears to be one group attacking the measure because, as they say, it does not go far enough, it is not liberal enough, it does not do as much as they would like for it to do; and that was the principal argument advanced by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] yesterday afternoon. Although he has served in Congress, either in the House or in the Senate for 10 or 12 years or more, he cannot point to any contribution that he or his party has ever made toward the initiation of a plan for social security such as that embraced in this measure.

My distinguished friends on the minority side of this Chamber now stand here and speak of their interest in social-security legislation and criticize the present administration and the majority members of the committee in this House for bringing forward this measure. I simply invite attention to the fact that all these years their party was in complete control of every branch of this Government they failed to come forward with anything even approaching social security for the people of this country. [Applause.]

On the question of the consideration given this bill, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, the ranking minority member of the committee [Mr. TREADWAY], expressed satisfaction as will be shown by the hearings with the full, complete, and ample consideration that was given, and the gentleman on one occasion made the statement, as is shown by the hearings, that he was not against the bill but that he was for it. He now says, however, that the majority members of the committee had to wait for instructions before they knew what they should do on this bill. I would like to invite his attention, as well as that of other Members, to the real facts. The minority members of the committee after sitting through 2½ months of consideration of this bill, then arrived at the conclusion that they were so fixed in their views, so set in their determination, and so strong in their opposition to the bill that when the time came to vote to report it, every one of them responded "present", would not even vote for the bill or against it. Every Member on the minority side of the committee had the conviction, and the strong feeling, that the bill was bad; yet he stood there and voted "present" on the question of favorably reporting the bill. Why, Mr. Chairman, the whole attitude displayed on this measure shows that there is on the part of some on the minority only the spirit of offering destructive criticism. Do you remember the old expression made some 2,000 years ago that nothing good can come out of Nazareth? Certain gentlemen on the minority side of the House seem to think nothing good can possibly come out of a Democratic administration. [Applause.]

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. The minority states in their report that they favor a substantial increase in the Federal contribution. Did the minority members of the committee offer any practical suggestions as to the method of providing the additional funds?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. No; they have not offered anything of that kind at all.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the group that appears to be criticizing the bill because it does not go far enough, as they say, there is the other group criticizing the bill because of the burden that they say is placed on business and industry of this country. That brings us down to the commonsense proposition, namely, you cannot pick benefits in this country out of the air. If you are going to have benefits somebody has to pay the bill. That is the situation we have here.

I want to pass on and use the few remaining moments that I have at my disposal in order to try to analyze the real purposes sought to be accomplished by this bill, and the provisions of the bill itself. The measure now before the House for consideration is in response to the message of the President of the United States delivered to this body on the 8th day of last June. That great message as it was given to the Congress of the United States immediately aroused the favorable comment and approval of the American people. It came forward with a great humanitarian program for social security in this land of ours, a measure which should have doubtlessly been considered years ago; but the other party was in control of the affairs of this Government and apparently they wanted to continue their time-honored idea of government in giving special privileges to the special interests of the country, with the idea that some good or benefit might trickle down to those in the lower strata.

Mr. Chairman, for the first time in the history of this Nation, on June 8, 1934, that great man in the White House, whose heart beats in tune with the welfare and in the interest of the masses of our people, came forward with his great message calling for social security in this country of ours. I want to invite attention to a part of that message presented to the House on that occasion.

> Our task of reconstruction does not require the creation of new and strange values. It is rather the finding of the way once more to known, but to some degree forgotten, ideals and values. If the means and details are in some instances new, the objectives are as permanent as human nature.

Then this expression was used, which rang throughout the length and breadth of our country:

> Among our objectives I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first.
> This security for the individual and for the family concerns itself primarily with three factors. People want decent homes to live in; they want to locate them where they can engage in productive work; and they want some safeguard against misfortunes which cannot be wholly eliminated in this man-made world of ours.

Following this message to the Congress, the President appointed his Committee on Economic Security, composed of Cabinet members and other officials of the Government. Immediately there was set up quite a number of advisory committees or groups, representative of every phase of American activity. All of these groups—and their names appear on the pages of the report to which I made reference a few moments ago—gave 6 months' study to this question, worked out a plan and a report, and the President submitted this report to the Congress with his message on January 17 of this year.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. In addition there was a supplementary division composed of experts of the Government, which included employers, employees, and the general public. Suggestions were received and entertained from individuals and organizations throughout the entire United States, and later a congress of 300 interested public-spirited citizens, representative of all walks of life, at their own expense, made a trip to Washington before the council made its recommendation to the President.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I would like to read the report on the bill to find out just how broad and comprehensive the program is.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Will the gentleman indulge me just a moment? I want to bring in one other matter before I reach that, then I shall yield to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I also invite attention to an expression in the message of the President of January 17, in which he stated, among other things:

> In addressing you on June 8, 1934, I summarized the main objectives of our American program. Among these was, and is, the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation against certain hazards and vicissitudes of life. This purpose is an essential part of our task. In my annual message to you I promised to submit a definite program of action. This I do in the form of a report to me by a Committee on Economic Security, appointed by me for the purpose of surveying the field and of recommending the basis of legislation.

Then, going over to the closing paragraphs of the same message, we find these expressions:

> The amount necessary at this time for the initiation of unemployment compensation, old-age security, children's aid, and the promotion of public health, as outlined in the report of the Committee on Economic Security, is approximately $100,000,000.
>
> The establishment of sound means toward a greater future economic security of the American people is dictated by a prudent consideration of the hazards involved in our national life. No one can guarantee this country against the dangers of future depressions, but we can reduce these dangers. We can eliminate many of the factors that cause economic depressions and we can provide the means of mitigating their results. This plan for economic security is at once a measure of prevention and a method of alleviation.
> We pay now for the dreadful consequence of economic insecurity—and dearly. This plan presents a more equitable and infinitely less expensive means of meeting these costs. We cannot afford to neglect the plain duty before us. I strongly recommend action to attain the objectives sought in this report.

Mr. Chairman, this measure was introduced by the chairman of this committee, and the gentleman from Maryland Mr. LEWIS, in the House, and Senator WAGNER in the Senate. From that time down to this hour the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and a great part of the same time the Finance Committee of the Senate have been giving consideration to this matter. Mr. Chairman, the committee after giving these months of careful study and consideration to every phase of this great problem that is now challenging the thoughtful attention of the people of this country, has brought forward this measure. It is indeed a most important administration measure. It has the approval of the President of the United States. It presents the rounded-out program of the President and this administration for social security in this country of ours. [Applause.]

I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The gentleman is making a magnificent statement on security, but I am wondering if he can answer the statement of supplemental views by Mr. KNUTSON, of Minnesota, who says in his supplemental report on social security:

1. It is obvious from the provisions of this bill that it cannot be made effective for several years, hence it will be a bitter disappointment to those who have looked hopefully to this administration for immediate relief.

Then he further says:

4. The old-age pension to be granted under H. R. 7260 would be wholly inadequate in the relief of distress. The amount paid would be so small that its effect upon business would be negligible.

This gentleman has studied the measure right in committee and I would like to know how the gentleman would answer the statement made by a distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Of course, I do not agree with the observations made by the gentleman from Minnesota. The gentleman is a distinguished member of the committee, and, of course, has given great thought and study to this measure, yet he did not have the conviction, when the motion was made to favorably report the bill, to either vote yes or no—he voted present. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. If the gentleman will permit, I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to the fact that the Public Works bill is the emergency-relief measure in this program and is not in this bill.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes; of course.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. And if the gentleman will yield further I think the gentleman will bear me out in the statement that the press carried the story that the vote on title I, the old-age pension phase of this bill, was unanimous when the vote was taken on that title and that title alone.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield and apologize to the gentleman for not getting around to him immediately.

Mr. MAY. That is all right. I started to say a while ago that this measure is so far-reaching and so broad in its purposes that I have had a great deal of difficulty, from reading the report and studying the bill, in ascertaining just how far-reaching it is, but to my mind it is like every other great legislative proposal. It grows out of conditions that have fastened themselves upon this country during this depression, and I may say that in the report of the majority of the committee as to the purpose and scope of the bill, I think they state it very soundly when they say that this is laying the foundation for social security in the future, and the very fact it is a measure so far-reaching is an answer to the question with regard to the views of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON]. You cannot build a great structure like this without having grave problems presented.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes; I agree with the statement in the report, of course, because I had the privilege of making some small, minor contribution to the consideration of the report and, naturally, I agree heartily with the quotation referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman tell us when this will become effective? I just heard the question asked, and it was not answered, and I do not know myself. I am not hostile, but I would like to know about that.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Title I of this bill becomes effective just as promptly as State plans for old-age pensions can be enacted by their legislatures, or in the 29 States now having such plans, as rapidly as they can conform to the broad outlines contained in this bill, and as soon as such State plans are approved the people who are beneficiaries immediately begin to receive benefits.

Mr. MICHENER. As a matter of fact, if a State legislature is in session and passes a law making it possible to comply with the terms of this bill, how soon after that will the benefits be paid?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Almost immediately. The appropriation is authorized in this bill. Of course, after this bill becomes law, as the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, who is one of the ablest parliamentarians of the House, well knows, there will have to be an appropriation following the authorization; but so far as the Federal Government is concerned, almost immediately upon the enactment of this measure the Federal Government will be ready to start paying benefits to those who qualify for such payments.

Mr. MAY. And just as fast as the States formulate and put up to the board a plan they approve, and as soon as this is done, all the States, in addition to the 29 now having such laws, will be eligible.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I understood the gentleman to make the statement that this bill authorizes the expenditure of this money as soon as the measure is passed by the Congress, and that the money will be given to the States. I would like the gentleman to explain to me or to the House where you are going to get this money we are expending without making an effort on the part of the Federal Government to secure such funds. Where are you going to get the money? Where will the money come from?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Of course, the gentleman naturally would imply from that question that he wants to draw me into a discussion of the fiscal affairs of the Government. Of course, I cannot take the time out of this discussion to enter into that.

Mr. RICH. I would like to say to my colleague that I am not trying to draw him into it any more than I want to draw every other Member of the Congress to consider it. I am trying in some way to find out how we are going to get the money to meet all these payments, and I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I have the highest regard for him; and I believe if anybody in the House could give us the information the gentleman from Tennessee would be one of the men who could furnish it. However, I have not been able to find this out from any Member of the Congress, and I think it is one of the most serious things that confronts this Congress and the Nation.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I appreciate the very kind remarks of the gentleman and I assure him our feelings are mutual, but I cannot take the time from the consideration of this measure to go into a discussion now of the methods of raising revenue for the Government.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Referring to the query of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] as to where you are going to get the money, may I say that the fiscal affairs of the Government at this time, so far as current expenses are concerned, are practically in balance. We just have the report that for the first quarter of the income-tax payments we are running 40 percent above what they were for the corresponding period last year, and this will provide the money for these appropriations without any additional levy of taxes.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is true. Recent reports show that the revenues coming in this year are substantially 40 percent above those of last year.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I will say that I think the bill for old-age pensions is right. But I would not support anything in excess of that. I do not see how we are going to accomplish this unless we make an effort to get the money. I do not see how we can continue to spend money like a drunken sailor without giving consideration as to where we are going to get that money. If we do not consider it, we will wreck the country.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will withhold that discussion for a while at least.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman gave us the impression that this bill would go into effect just as soon as the States can cooperate. What the gentleman had in mind did not apply to title II, because no benefits can be paid under that until 1942.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I assumed that the gentleman from Ohio knew that, and the gentleman from Michigan referred to title I of the bill.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. And title II calls for no cooperation by the States.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. It must be apparent to everyone that this is an attempt to meet causes which brought about these conditions. Title I for old-age pensions is to provide assistance to these aged people and their dependents, and title II is to build up a productive fund that will preserve their self-respect in the future.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman. Please allow me to proceed for a minute. I realize that every member of the committee should yield to his colleagues, and try to give them the best information he can.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. There has been so much discussion about title II that I would like to ask the gentleman what is his opinion on the constitutionality of title II? I firmly believe that we have no right to pass any such legislation. Title I is excellent, but by legislation on title II you are going to endanger the whole security act.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I assume that the gentleman will agree that the provision at the end of the bill, the separability clause, would save these provisions in the bill that were not held unconstitutional. That clause provides that in the event any part of the bill should be declared unconstitutional it shall not affect the other provisions of the bill. In the event that title II should not be sustained by the courts, and I do not for a moment concede that is at all probable, that would in no way affect title I.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. I would like to see the House pass legislation which will stand, rather than to send it to the upper House and to have them emasculate it, when we have spent weeks and months in the consideration of it in the committee in this House.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Of course, the question asked by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CAVICCHIA] is pertinent, and the House is entitled to know that your committee gave very careful and, I think, as fair consideration as possible to the legal and constitutional phases of the bill. If time permitted I would like to enter into a discussion of those phases of the question, but I invite attention to a memorandum opinion submitted to the committee by the Department of Justice which consists of some 12 pages. I shall not ask the indulgence of the House long enough to read that opinion now, but simply state to the gentleman from New Jersey that the Department of Justice sustains the constitutionality of this act in this opinion, and I think it is sound. I think the cases cited are in point, I think the logic employed in the opinion is sound, and for my part I have no doubt that this measure as presented here will be sustained by the courts.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman will recall also that a request was made of the Attorney General to put the best legal talent he had in the Department to a study of this legislation. He did so, and after due deliberation and consideration they expressed the opinion contained in the paper the gentleman holds in his hand.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. That is true, and I invite the gentleman's attention, without reading the entire opinion, which cites cases and quotes from cases from the time of Chief Justice Marshall on down to now, to the closing part of the opinion:

> There may also be taken into consideration the strong presumption which exists in favor of the constitutionality of an act of the Congress, in the light of which and of the foregoing discussion it is reasonably safe to assume that the social-security bill, if enacted into law, will probably be upheld as constitutional. It is suggested, therefore, that if the Congress deems the bill to be meritorious, it ought not to fail of passage on any prejudgment that it is unconstitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I think it important to put that opinion in the RECORD.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I appreciate the gentleman's suggestion, and I shall include this opinion as a part of my remarks, to go into the RECORD, in order that all Members may have the benefit of it. I think it is very valuable.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. COX. In view of the fact that I am not asking time on this bill I ask the gentleman to yield to me. While this bill takes a long step toward the socialization of American life, and qualifiedly extends the Federal power over what might be properly considered purely local questions, it does contain features that appeal to me. In the first place, it provides for State participation in the interest of Federal solvency, and it also reserves to the State the qualified right of joint control, and in this regard it is a great improvement over the original draft for which I give the gentleman most credit. But the thing that disturbs me is that apparently all thought in Washington has been directed toward centralization of government, and most of what has and is being done here apparently is intended to produce that result. This holds true both with the Republican and Democratic administrations. Traditionally the Democratic Party has stood for State rights. The Republican Party on the other hand has stood for the enlargement of the Federal power.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I have a few observations on State rights that I want to go into if I can.

Mr. COX. But the parties in recent years apparently have been reversing their positions on this question, and I predict that within the next few years the conflict will be renewed and political questions will be fought out along this line, and unless the Democratic Party finds its way back to where it originally stood on these questions, and the Republican Party changes its attitude toward the States and their social problems, a new party may arise to lead the people of this country who adhere to the belief that the Federal Government is a government of delegated powers, and is sovereign only to the extent of supreme and exclusive exercise of those powers. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman. I invite attention to the fact that the purpose and scope of this bill embraces four outstanding objectives. It makes provision for old-age security, unemployment compensation, security for children, and public health. All of these are matters in which the people of this country have been and are now showing a great degree of interest. Certainly on the question of old-age security, we cannot fail to recognize the fact that these citizens of ours who have grown old and become infirm in support of their Government and in rendering service to their fellow men are entitled to more consideration and more beneficial treatment than they have thus far been receiving. It has been argued here by some that this bill does not go far enough. I invite attention to the fact that out of the 29 States of the Union that now have old-age pension plans, this bill provides for more benefits than are now provided under any of these State plans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes additional.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. In the States of New York and Massachusetts, where they pay the largest benefits, there is no maximum provided by law at all. Yet, in experience they have never gone over about $24 in New York and $24.50 in Massachusetts as an average for the State. This bill provides for $30, matched equally between the State and the Federal Government.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will excuse me, please.

It should also be borne in mind that the benefits provided under this bill are more liberal than those afforded by any other country in the entire world for old-age pensions. Now, some may think it should go further, and as some feel, that State participation should not be required. Certainly, without undertaking to quote the President—and it is not my intention to violate any of the proprieties of the situation, I feel I can state that it has been my privilege to confer with him several times, along with others, and he is very definite and firm in his conviction that State participation must be required in this bill.

Under this plan participation by States is required. We have left the broadest possible latitude of discretion to the States in the administration and control of the plan, simply providing that States may, under these rather broad standards set up in the bill, provide whatever they are able to provide for their old people, and the Federal Government will match whatever the State is willing and able to give, up to and not exceeding $15 a month by the Federal Government.

I invite attention to table 1 on page 4 of the report to give you some idea of how this burden will probably increase in the future. We must consider that phase of the matter. This is not temporary legislation; it is not emergency legislation. We are here legislating for the future, for my country and yours. We certainly should consider this phase of the matter. This table shows that in the year 1860 there were only 2.7 percent of the population of the entire country over 65 years of age. In 1930, the last Federal census we had, there were 5.4 percent of the total population of the country over 65 years of age. It is estimated that by 1940 there will be 6.3 percent, and by 1970, 10.1 percent. By the year 2000, 12.7 percent, showing a gradual and steady increase in the percentage of people in this country over 65 years of age as compared with the total population of the country.

That simply shows that we must consider the size of the burden that will be placed upon the States and the Federal Government in the future. For that reason title II is in this bill. It provides for old-age benefits to be built up gradually through the years of the future, so that it will take off part of the burden that would naturally be piled up by the operations of title I. It is estimated that by the year 1980 the burdens under title I would amount to about $2,600,000,000 annually. By including title II, which is of the greatest importance in this bill, that will be reduced more than one-half; so that it is estimated that not more than about a billion dollars will be involved in the burden assumed for old-age pensions in the country.

It has been and will doubtless still be asserted that the social-security bill is designed to coerce the States, particularly in connection with unemployment compensation. Very little objection on this score can be raised as to the Federal grants in aid to the States for old-age pensions, aids for dependent children, and other aids for the extension of public-health services.

The unemployment provisions of the Social Security Act do not violate the traditional provisions and power of this country between the Federal Government and the States. Instead of coercing the States, it rather will have the effect of enabling the States to go ahead with the enactment of unemployment compensation laws which are long overdue but which heretofore could not be enacted without placing a serious handicap upon the industries of the particular State enacting such legislation. The greatest objections raised against proposed unemployment insurance during the last 15 years before the State legislatures has been the assertion that it would drive industry out of the State into neighboring States which did not place this burden upon their employers. As an illustration of this argument, the following quotation from a Memorial on Unemployment Insurance, presented on December 15, 1932, to Governor White, of Ohio, by a delegation of 34 citizens representing the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, in opposition to the proposed unemployment insurance bill then pending in that State, may be cited:

> Ohio is in close competition with such States as Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, West Virginia, and New York. We respectfully submit that Ohio cannot compete with these States while laboring under the handicap of a special tax upon the industries of $50,000,000 a year. The result would be that firms owning plants in other States would gradually transfer their operations, so far as practicable, to those States. Companies having no outside plants would have difficulty in competing with those who do have such plants. The location of new industries in Ohio would be retarded. From this the farmers, merchants, bankers, and all other classes of business would suffer.

Prior to 1935 only one State in the Union—Wisconsin—had enacted an unemployment-insurance law, which was passed in 1932. In 1933 bills were introduced providing unemployment compensation in 22 States and passed one house of the legislatures in 7 States, but failed to pass both houses in any State. Many States have had special commissions on the subject. An incomplete list of these commissions include the following: New York, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Rhode Island, Delaware, Vermont, California, Oregon, and Colorado. In practically all cases these commissions strongly urge the State legislature to enact unemployment-compensation laws, but the States have been unwilling to go ahead until there is a uniform tax measure for this purpose, thus placing industry throughout the country on the same basis.

The following quotations are taken from the reports of several State commissions on employment urging Federal legislation: New Hampshire, Ohio, Massachusetts, and Minnesota.

The 1934 report of the New Hampshire Commission on Unemployment Reserves states:

> The commission strongly favors Federal legislation which will effectively remove the fear of interstate competition in this field through the application of uniform rates of contribution upon all employers in the country.

The report of the Ohio Commission on Unemployment Insurance, made in 1932, stated:

> It would be desirable to extend compulsory insurance to cover all industries and all employees in all the States so that interstate competition might be equalized.

The supplementary report of the Massachusetts Special Commission on Stabilization of Employment in 1934 stated:

> The commission believes it would be better if the Federal Government could require universal adoption throughout the country of some such unemployment responsibility to all industries. * * *

The report of the University of Minnesota Stabilization Research Institute to the Governor of Minnesota on A Program for Unemployment Insurance and Relief in the United States in 1934 states:

If the Seventy-third Congress had passed the Wagner-Lewis bill, unemployment insurance will undoubtedly become general in the United States and employers at any rate will be placed on an equal competitive basis (48–9).

Also:

The Wagner-Lewis measure would remove the chief objection to the adoption of State unemployment insurance legislation, namely, the unequal position with respect to interstate competition of employers in States having an unemployment insurance law.

At the 1935 legislative session 83 unemployment insurance bills were introduced in 25 States. Three States—New York, Utah, and Washington—have so far enacted unemployment compensation laws in anticipation of Federal legislation. Sixty-six State bills are still pending. Twenty-six State legislatures are now in session, and 18 have adjourned.

The social-security bill leaves the States very wide discretion as to the provisions of their unemployment compensation acts. It provides only a minimum of Federal control, designed principally to assure the use of the funds exclusively for this purpose and the safeguarding of the funds by depositing them with the United States Treasury. The central purpose of the Federal bill in regard to unemployment compensation is to equalize the financial burden placed upon employers throughout the country and thereby permit States to go ahead.

With regard to the other features of the social-security bill, many States have gone ahead and enacted new old-age-pension laws or have modified the existing old-age-pension laws of the State to conform to the conditions of the pending Federal legislation. Included in this list are the following States: Wyoming, Montana, Utah, Oregon, Washington, and Kansas. This list is not complete. Amendments to the existing old-age-pension laws have also been adopted in a number of other States, including Ohio, Maryland, and others. Twelve States have enacted State laws setting up a State department of public welfare with blanket provisions for acceptance of Federal aids under such conditions as imposed by Federal legislation. Included in this list are the following States: Georgia, Maryland, Montana, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Utah, West Virginia, Wyoming, and Washington.

A number of States whose legislatures have already adjourned have created special commissions to prepare State legislation on economic security in conformity with Federal legislation to be submitted to a special session of the legislature. A number of Governors have already expressed their intention of calling a special session of their State legislatures as soon as Congress acts on the social-security bill.

The following States have memorialized Congress at the present session for the enactment of this type of social-security legislation: North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee, Wisconsin, California, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana, and New York.

The social-security bill, in connection with the grants-in-aid to States provides a minimum of Federal supervision over the States, much less than is provided in any other recent Federal-aid laws. The State old-age-pension laws are required to be liberalized with respect to the requirements of age, residence, and citizenship, and they must be State-wide in application; but these provisions do not grant supervisory authority to the Federal Administrator. The Federal Highway Act, by way of comparison, gives to the Federal Bureau of Public Roads, the right to withhold aid to States if the State highway department is not adequately organized, equipped, and empowered to administer the provisions of the act or if the State fails to maintain its federally aided highways according to the standards laid down by the Federal Bureau of Public Roads. The Federal Bureau of Public Roads must approve each Federal highway project for which funds are allotted and lay down detailed specifications concerning the type of construction, materials, and so forth. No such powers as these are granted in connection with any part of the social-security bill.

Under the Smith-Hughes Act for vocational education the Federal department in charge could provide minimum qualifications for State officials in charge, but no such provision is made in the Social Security Act. The Smith-Hughes Act also provided that State rules and regulations had to be submitted to the Federal agency for approval, but there is nothing of this kind in the Social Security Act.

No Federal-aid legislation within recent years has accorded wider recognition to the principle of State rights than the social-security bill. The bill does not divest any State of any activities that it is now carrying on. It is strictly in accordance with the Federal form of government in this country. It provides ample opportunity for States to work out these problems in a way which will suit local conditions, and for experimentation in unemployment insurance, which is very desirable at this stage. The social-security bill provides aid to the States, but not control. It enables them to enact unemployment-compensation laws which, as a practical proposition, heretofore they have been unable to do.

In keeping with my statement, I want here to include the memorandum on the constitutionality of the "social-security bill", which was submitted to the Ways and Means Committee by the Department of Justice.

The purpose of this memorandum is to discuss the constitutional aspects of the social-security bill now pending before the Congress, to explore the legislative powers under which its enactment is proposed, and to weigh the objections to its validity, which I understand have been informally advanced in the discussions of this measure. Before entering on a detailed analysis of the bill and a minute consideration of the constitutional questions which it involves, it seems desirable to advert to some basic fundamental principles of constitutional construction, which are sometimes overlooked, but which must always serve as a guide in determining questions of constitutional law.

The formula laid down by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat. 316, 407) must always be borne in mind in testing the constitutionality of an act of Congress. His famous words have been often repeated, but may well be reiterated. They are as follows:

A constitution, to contain an accurate detail of all the subdivisions of which its great powers will admit, and of all the means by which they may be carried into execution, would partake of the prolixity of a legal code and could scarcely be embraced by the human mind. It would probably never be understood by the public. Its nature, therefore, requires, that only its great outlines should be marked, its important objects designated, and the minor ingredients which compose those objects be deduced from the nature of the objects themselves. That this idea was entertained by the framers of the American Constitution is not only to be inferred from the nature of the instrument but from the language. Why else were some of the limitations found in the ninth section of the first article introduced? It is also, in some degree, warranted by their have omitted to use any restrictive term which might prevent its receiving a fair and just interpretation. In considering this question, then, we must never forget that it is a constitution we are expounding.

Three years previously, Mr. Justice Story had enunciated the same principle in somewhat different language (Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. 304, 326):

The Constitution unavoidably deals in general language. It did not suit the purposes of the people, in framing this great charter of our liberties, to provide for minute specifications of its powers, or to declare the means by which those powers should be carried into execution. It was foreseen, that this would be perilous and difficult, if not an impracticable task. The instrument was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years, but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence. It could not be foreseen, what new changes and modifications of power might be indispensable to effectuate the general objects of the charter; and restrictions and specifications, which, at the present, might seem salutary, might, in the end, prove the overthrow of the system itself. Hence, its powers are expressed in general terms, leaving to the legislature, from time to time, to adopt its own means to effectuate legitimate objects, and to mold and model the exercise of its powers, as its own wisdom and the public interests should require,

In entering upon a discussion of the particular measure here under consideration, it is desirable to first analyze its provisions. The social-security bill consists of a number of distinct titles. Title VIII proposes to impose an income tax on the wages of certain classes of employees, and an excise tax on certain classes of employers, measured by specified percentages of the wages paid by the employers to whom the tax is applicable. Title IX imposes another excise tax on employers employing 10 or more persons, the tax again being measured by specified percentages of the wages paid by the employer.

Title I of the bill provides for grants to the States for old-age assistance. In order to qualify for such grants, a State is required to adopt an old-age-assistance plan, meeting certain standards laid down in the bill, and to appropriate funds to match the Federal contribution. Title II seeks to appropriate money for the payment of old-age benefits to certain groups of employees upon their attaining the age of 65. Title III proposes to make grants to States for the administration of unemployment compensation, provided the State adopts an unemployment-compensation law complying with certain standards laid down in the bill. Title IV provides for Federal grants to the States for aid to dependent children, while title V makes similar grants for maternal and child welfare. Title VI makes certain appropriations for the purpose of extending and improving public-health services.

There will first be considered the validity of the tax features of the bill contained in title VIII and title IX.

The first tax sought to be imposed by the bill is that found in title VIII, sections 801–803. It is an income tax on the wages of certain classes of employees. The power of the Congress to levy an income tax is undisputed. Suffice it to advert to the sixteenth amendment, which reads as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.

In levying an income tax the Congress may exempt certain classes of persons or certain types of income, as well as levy varying rates of tax on incomes of differing sizes (Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 240 U. S. 1). The validity of the tax imposed by these provisions of the bill, standing alone, is undoubtedly not subject to question.

Title VIII, sections 804–811, and title IX provide for excise taxes on wages paid by certain classes of employers as defined in the bill.

The grant of power to the Congress to levy excise taxes is found in article I, section 8, clause 1, of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

More comprehensive and sweeping language can hardly be imagined. The Supreme Court, in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (240 U. S. 1, 12), stated that the authority conferred upon the Congress by this provision " is exhaustive and embraces every conceivable power of taxation."

The only limitation on this power is that contained in the constitutional provision, namely, that " all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States." The uniformity required by the Constitution has been invariably held to be merely a geographical uniformity. Thus it was said, in Billings v. United States (232 U. S. 261, 282):

> It has been conclusively determined that the requirement of uniformity which the Constitution imposes upon Congress in the levy of excise taxes is not an intrinsic uniformity, but merely a geographical one. Flint v. Stone-Tracy Co. (220 U. S. 107); McCray v. United States (195 U. S. 27); Knowlton v. Moore (178 U. S. 41). It is also settled beyond dispute that the Constitution is not self-destructive. In other words, that the powers which it confers on the one hand it does not immediately take away on the other; that is to say that the authority to tax which is given in express terms is not limited or restricted by the subsequent provisions of the Constitution or the amendments thereto, especially by the due-process clause of the fifth amendment.

The same doctrine was enunciated in United States v. Doremus (249 U. S. 86, 93):

> The only limitation upon the power of Congress to levy excise taxes of the character now under consideration is geographical uniformity throughout the United States. This Court has often declared it cannot add others. Subject to such limitation Congress may select the subjects of taxation, and may exercise the power conferred at its discretion. License Tax cases (5 Wall. 462, 471). Of course, Congress may not in the exercise of Federal power exert authority wholly reserved to the States. Many decisions of this Court have so declared.

It is understood that there has been no attempt to challenge the constitutionality of the foregoing provisions of the bill standing alone. It is not understood that it is disputed that the Congress is clothed with the power to impose the taxes provided by the pending bill. However, it has been said that the real purpose of these tax measures is not to raise revenue but to establish a Nation-wide scheme for unemployment insurance and old-age benefits; that the tax provisions are part of the warp and woof of this scheme; and that consequently, since there is no express provision in the Constitution granting to the Congress the power to legislate on the subject of old-age benefits and unemployment insurance, these tax provisions must be deemed invalid.

This reasoning completely overlooks the principle frequently enunciated and as frequently applied by the Supreme Court, to the effect that in passing upon the validity of a statute, which on its face purports to be a tax measure, the courts will not consider the question whether the motive of the legislative body was some other than that to raise revenue. This rule has been formulated on a number of occasions and led to upholding the validity of statutes, which, while ostensibly revenue measures, were obviously intended to accomplish an entirely different purpose. Thus, in 1866, the Congress passed an act levying a 10-percent tax on bank notes issued by State banks. The real purpose of the authors of this measure was not to raise revenue, but to eliminate State bank notes from circulation. So effectively was its real purpose accomplished, that little, if any, revenue was ever collected under this act. The validity of the statute was challenged on the ground, among others, that it was not a true revenue measure. Its constitutionality was, however, upheld in Veazie Bank v. Fenno (8 Wallace, 533). Another striking case is that involving the oleomargarine tax. An act adopted in 1902, levying a tax on oleomargarine imposed a low tax on white oleomargarine and a much higher tax on yellow oleomargarine with the obvious purpose of driving yellow oleomargarine out of the market, in view of the fact that it was frequently sold to the public as butter. The validity of the measure was questioned, and its character as a tax measure was assailed, but without success (McCray v. United States, 195 U. S. 27, 59). Holding that the act was a valid exercise of the taxing power, Mr. Justice White stated:

> Undoubtedly, in determining whether a particular act is within a granted power, its scope and effect are to be considered. Applying this rule to the acts assailed, it is self-evident that on their face they levy an excise tax. That being their necessary scope and operation, it follows that the acts are within the grant of power.

He swept to one side the argument that the real motive of the Congress was not to raise revenue, but to drive yellow oleomargarine from the market by imposing a prohibitive tax upon the sales of that commodity.

Perhaps the outstanding case sanctioning the use by the Congress of the taxing power for purposes other than to raise revenue is United States v. Doremus (249 U. S. 86), which upheld the constitutionality of the Harrison Narcotic Drug Act. Under the guise of a revenue measure, the Congress placed all dealings in narcotics under severe and stringent restrictions. It was urged again that the statute was not a true tax measure, and, consequently, beyond the constitutional power of the Congress to enact, and again this contention was overruled. The Court stated that an " act may not be declared unconstitutional because its effect may be to accomplish another purpose as well as the raising of revenue. If the legislation is within the taxing authority of Congress, that is sufficient to sustain it " (p. 94).

The latest expression of the Supreme Court upon this point is found in the case of Magnano Co. v. Hamilton (292

U. S. 40, 47), decided on April 2, 1934, in which the Court made the following significant statement:

> From the beginning of our Government, the courts have sustained taxes, although imposed with the collateral intent of effecting ulterior ends which, considered apart, were beyond the constitutional power of the lawmakers to realize by legislation directly addressed to their accomplishment.

The conclusion is inescapable that the motive of the Congress in enacting a law, which, on its face, purports to be a revenue measure, is immaterial and will not be considered by the courts in passing upon its validity. If a statute is ostensibly a valid exercise of the taxing power, the fact that such authority is invoked to accomplish an object other than to raise revenue, has no effect upon the constitutionality of the act. It necessarily follows that the fact that the taxes sought to be imposed by the social-security bill may constitute an inherent part of a legislative scheme for old-age benefits and unemployment insurance, in no way detracts from their validity.

Those who advance a contrary view rely on the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Child Labor Tax case (259 U. S. 20) and Hill v. Wallace (259 U. S. 44). Upon close analysis, however, they will find but little solace in these decisions. It is only by giving them implications far beyond their actual holdings and by construing them as overruling the line of cases which have been just discussed that any support can be found in them for the suggestion that the social security bill may possibly be invalid.

In the Child Labor Tax case the Supreme Court held unconstitutional an act of Congress which imposed a tax equal to 10 percent of the net profits realized by any employer who employed child labor, knowing the children to be below a certain age. The Supreme Court held that this law did not impose a tax, but exacted a penalty. It emphasized the fact that the provision, which imposed the so-called "tax" only on a person who knowingly departed from a prescribed course of conduct, made the impost a penalty rather than a tax. Chief Justice Taft remarks that "scienter is associated with penalties, not with taxes." He expressly adverted to the line of cases to which reference has been made in this memorandum and reiterated their holdings as sound law.

Likewise in Hill against Wallace the Court declined to uphold a measure seeking to impose a so-called "tax" on dealings in grain futures, except as to contracts executed through a member of a board of trade designated by the Secretary of Agriculture and complying with prescribed requirements. The Court ruled that the so-called "tax" was a penalty exacted for failure to comply with the requirements of the law (p. 66).

It is manifest that these two cases are not germane to the present discussion. Surely no one will contend that the taxes sought to be imposed by the pending measure are in fact penalties.

It is also not without significance that in the Magnano case, supra, decided less than a year ago, the cases heretofore discussed by me were cited with approval by the Supreme Court and the Child Labor Tax case explained as being based upon the proposition that the law which it held invalid imposed in fact not a tax, but a penalty.

Thus far there has been discussed the validity of the tax features of the bill in general. There is one specific provision that deserves additional consideration. Title IX, which imposes a tax on wages paid by employers, also provides in section 902 that the taxpayer may credit as against the tax any contributions paid by him into an unemployment fund established under a State law, provided that the total credit shall not exceed 90 percent of the tax. This device was approved by the Supreme Court in Florida v. Mellon (273 U. S. 12), in connection with the estate tax imposed by the Revenue Act of 1926, which contained a provision that the tax should be credited with the amount of any estate taxes paid to any State, such credit not to exceed 80 percent of the tax. It was asserted that the tax was unconstitutional, in that its purpose was to act as an incentive to the States to enact inheritance-tax legislation, and that it especially discriminated against the State of Florida, which levied no such tax. These objections received but scant consideration at the hands of the Supreme Court, which declined to hold the law invalid. Thus the credit provisions of title IX constitute an expedient sanctioned by the Supreme Court.

The consideration heretofore discussed lead to the conclusion that the tax features of the bill are valid and constitutional. It is now desirable to pass to a consideration of those sections of the bill which seek to appropriate money for the payment of old-age benefits for the making of grants to the States for old-age assistance, the administration of unemployment-compensation laws, aid to dependent children and maternal and child welfare, and for the purpose of extending and improving public-health services. The suggestion that the power of the Congress to appropriate money is in any way restricted or circumscribed is indeed a novelty. As we turn back the pages of our history we find that it has never been successfully contended that the authority of the legislative branch of the Government to appropriate money is limited to the specific purposes enumerated in article I, section 8, of the Constitution. The Congress has invariably by its own actions placed a different construction upon this power. It has always been customary for the Congress to appropriate money for purposes not enumerated in the Constitution. To select but a few such instances at random, we may refer to grants made to agricultural colleges many years ago; subsidies to transcontinental railroads; grants for maternity care, exemplified by the Sheppard-Towner Act; appropriations for the extermination of pests, such as the boll-weevil and the Mediterranean fruit fly; appropriations for scientific research, and many other examples that could be multiplied without number. A construction consistently placed upon the Constitution by the legislative branch of the Government in a series of acts over many years ought not to be lightly disregarded, as was remarked by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland, supra, at page 401.

The Supreme Court has recently held that a taxpayer has no standing in the courts to question or attack the validity or the constitutionality of an appropriation made by the Congress (Massachusetts v. Mellon, 262 U. S. 447, 486).

It follows hence that those titles of the bill which seek to appropriate Federal funds for specific purposes may not be successfully assailed as to their validity.

The fact that by the pending bill it is sought to exercise the powers of the Congress in an unaccustomed manner, does not affect the validity of the measure. Powers heretofore dormant may be called into action and invoked to meet new contingencies arising in the progress of the life of the Nation. The political, the economic, and the social history of the United States is marked from time to time by new departures in Government, all of which were attacked at the time as unconstitutional, but whose validity was eventually upheld as coming within the purview of the powers conferred upon the Federal Government by the Constitution. Thus, the power of the Congress to charter a bank was seriously challenged at one time, and yet today we have in this country a network of national banks. Many statesmen questioned the power of the Federal Government to acquire territory when President Jefferson purchased the vast areas known as Louisiana. Had their views been followed, this country would still consist of 13 States bordering on the Atlantic coast, instead of being one of the great powers of the world. The power of the Congress to provide paper money and make it legal tender was seriously assailed. Today paper money is part and parcel of our economic life. (Compare the Legal Tender cases, supra, and the recent Gold Clause cases.) There may also be taken into consideration the strong presumption which exists in favor of the constitutionality of an act of the Congress, in the light of which and of the foregoing discussion it is reasonably safe to assume that the social-security bill, if enacted into law, will probably be upheld as constitutional. It is suggested, therefore, that if the Congress deems the bill to be meritorious, it ought not to fail of passage on any prejudgment that it is unconstitutional.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I think practically the entire membership of the Congress realizes the necessity for the enactment of legislation dealing with social security. The conditions that make the enactment of such legislation imperative have been developing during the last two decades, but during the last 5 years these conditions have become so acute as to place the question foremost in the minds, not only of the Congress but of the entire citizenship of our Nation. Naturally, the subject, social security, in all of its phases, is one that cannot be adequately treated in the enactment of any single piece of legislation.

The bill as reported, however, does attempt to deal in a more or less comprehensive manner with the various phases of the subject. Everyone is anxious to treat, as soon as possible, the subject in all of its phases, but it occurs to me that at this particular time it might be unwise for the Congress to attempt the enactment of such a comprehensive measure as the one now under consideration, which may further hamper the recovery of labor and industry by the levying of taxes of questionable constitutionality.

We have heard much about reform and recovery. All of us admit that certain reforms are desirable, but, on the other hand, all must admit that recovery is imperative if the general welfare of our Nation is to be provided for and not disregarded.

Title I of the proposed legislation attempts to deal with the vital question of old-age pensions. I have given much consideration to this particular phase of the proposed legislation, and, in my opinion, title I is entirely inadequate and must be amended if a great portion of the deserving aged citizens of our Nation are to receive any benefit therefrom. The Congress has, during the last 2 years, enacted much legislation designed to create employment, but the employment that has been created by the legislation has not inured to the benefit of several million of our citizens who have reached the age which precludes them from receiving consideration and employment under the legislation heretofore enacted. Therefore, this class of citizens who have heretofore discharged their every duty as citizens are entitled to fair and equitable treatment regardless of the State or Territory in which they may have their abode. This title as now existing, if enacted in its present form, will result in a serious discrimination against many American citizens, and I cannot support any measure which will result in the discrimination that will necessarily follow from the enactment of title I as now written.

This title provides that the States must match the funds advanced by the Federal Government and that the Federal Government will advance to the States a maximum of $15 per month for each eligible person, but that no sum will be advanced unless it is matched by funds provided by the States. Conceding only for the purpose of this discussion that there is an equal obligation resting on the several States to provide money to discharge this burden, and conceding further that the contribution by the Federal Government of one-half is a fair division, still this does not justify the Congress in the enactment of the provisions of this title when we know that there are many States in this Union that are financially unable at this time to provide any funds whatsoever with which to match the funds provided by this bill.

It is immaterial whether we treat the old-age pensions as a gratuity and justified solely upon the ground of relief or whether we treat it as compensation merited by loyal citizenship, the principle involved is the same and the Federal Government, through this Congress, should not knowingly enact legislation that will discriminate against the citizens of any particular State. State boundary lines should and must be disregarded in dealing with this question. The Congress should only undertake to provide the limitations or qualifications of those eligible to receive a pension and when those requirements are prescribed, the amount provided should be paid regardless of the ability of the State to match the funds. If the various State governments which obtain their money by direct taxation had not suffered financially in proportion to the losses of their citizens, they would probably be in a position to match the funds provided by the Federal Government.

But I call your attention to the fact that the Federal Government has during the last few years existed solely because of its credit and its ability to borrow money. No one knows how long this condition may obtain, but many of the States must have a reasonable time in which to provide funds to meet the contributions by the Federal Government, and I suggest that a reasonable time would be 5 years. This title must be amended so as to provide that whatever amount the Federal Government may pay, it shall be paid to all eligible citizens regardless of their place of abode during the next 5 years, and regardless of whether the funds are matched. At the expiration of this period the States should be in a position to match Federal funds and to fully discharge their obligations to their deserving citizens. In no other way can the Congress be just and fair. By so doing we will not be relieving the States of their duty to the aged and deserving citizens, but we will be giving them a sufficient length of time to enable them to meet this obligation and at the same time we will be rendering justice to all citizens alike.

The General Assembly of the State of Arkansas in a resolution approved March 21, 1935, has called the attention of the Congress to the conditions prevailing in that State. I know that it is the desire of every citizen of Arkansas that the State government should discharge its full duty to its needy and destitute citizens. The general assembly that adopted the concurrent resolution enacted legislation in an effort to meet this obligation but the financial conditions are such that the State will be unable to raise any appreciable funds for this purpose and unless title I is amended as suggested by me, the citizenship of Arkansas will be discriminated against. I cannot, in justice to that great class of our citizenship, support legislation here which will result in the discrimination against the citizenship of my State. The people of Arkansas are anxious to discharge their full duty at all times as citizens. The general assembly is anxious to provide funds for the needy citizens of Arkansas, but these funds cannot be immediately provided, and why should the citizens of Arkansas and other States be deprived of the amount which the Congress may fix as a contribution to those meeting the prescribed requirements to be eligible to receive an old-age pension?

It is true that Arkansas does not contribute as much in money to the support of the Federal Government as do some other States in the Union, but the prosperity of other States is not solely because of their own resources. Arkansas is as rich in natural resources as any State in the Union and her citizenship is on a par with that of any other State and the time will come when the contribution from Arkansas to the support of the Federal Government will equal that of any other State. Her citizens are likewise citizens of the United States, and, as such, are entitled to receive this benefit for the time being at least.

The suggested amendments to this title are reasonable and will not do violence to the plan for Federal participations in the payment of old-age pensions. We cannot deal with this question solely along theoretical lines. At present we must face the conditions and deal with the conditions as practical men instead of treating this question as a theory and dealing with it as such.

As a governmental theory it may be correct to require a contribution by the States, but when theory is opposed by justice and by actual conditions, then we must yield to the dictates of justice and to conditions, and I appeal to the sense of fairness of this House to join with me in an effort to bring these benefits to our destitute citizens regardless of where they may live and regardless of the amount of the contribution that may be made by the States, or regardless of whether the State is able to pay any amount for at least such a period of time as will enable the individual States to prepare to meet their proportionate share of this obligation. Gentlemen cannot, with much grace, argue that the Federal Government is unable to do this, because we have appropriated, during this Congress, billions of dollars for other purposes; and surely the needs of all worthy, aged, and deserving citizens should receive the consideration that a lifetime of loyal support of the ideals of America entitles them to receive insofar as our action is concerned.

If more taxes are required to meet this expenditure, then we should unhesitatingly levy them upon those who have in years gone by accumulated vast sums and fortunes, in many instances at the expense and through the toil of our old citizens. The resources of our country should, if necessary, be commandeered by us to meet this obligation, and by so doing we can rightfully and fairly give to every loyal citizen some of the benefits of a just government and thus restore, in a measure, to all some of the fruits of their toil and labor.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH].

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, life is a journey upon the road to death. Some of us quickly end our pilgrimage at the station marked "infancy." Shortly thereafter others complete their mission upon the course named "childhood." Many fall by the wayside on the grave marked "adolescence." Countless numbers falter on the highway called "young age." Innumerable throngs collapse upon the main road marked "middle age." Eventually all the rest who have escaped the perils along this mysterious road conclude their journey to eternity when they pass from the station "old age", through the gates of death, to that bourne from which no traveler ever returns.

The present bill before the House of Representatives is one that provides for and attempts to take care of every victim of social and economic insecurity from the time of birth until death. This humane legislation begins with the queen and the angel of the home, the mother. Since God could not be everywhere, he created mothers to take His place. This bill makes it possible to look after the welfare of every expectant mother in the villages and rural sections of our country during the critical periods of her life's existence, which are childbirth and the preceding prenatal care. In the past millions of mothers have made the supreme sacrifice and died on the altar of childbirth, caused by the disease known as "puerperal sepsis", or blood poisoning.

It was in the year 1843 when the distinguished New England doctor, surgeon, and literary genius, Oliver Wendell Holmes, then a practicing physician, announced to the people of our country that puerperal sepsis, commonly known as "blood poisoning", from which thousands of mothers in his time had died after childbirth, was due to nothing else but dirt. This disease was caused by the introduction of dirt into the generative tract by unclean hands and unsanitary material used during the period of obstetric delivery. Oliver Wendell Holmes was laughed at, jeered at, humiliated, and humbled, as are all men and women who are pioneers and crusaders in a new line of thought or endeavor.

Several years later Professor Semmelweiss, an obstetric professor in the University of Budapest, Hungary, from 1850 to 1865, unfamiliar with Dr. Holmes news, announced to the physicians of Austria and Hungary his belief that puerperal sepsis was caused by unclean methods of delivery that spread infection through dirt. His fellow physicians and the midwives of his time excoriated and pilloried him. They denounced his views. They laughed at him. They literally spat at him. His delicate mind and his sensitive soul could not resist nor withstand the ravages of this ridicule. He lost his reason and in 1866 died in an insane institution in Budapest.

Two years ago when I was in Budapest I stood in reverence in front of a beautiful monument that Hungary had belatedly erected to commemorate the memory, the name, and the fame of its illustrious pioneer and crusader, Professor Semmelweiss. Here was a scholar and a scientist who was driven to his death because he had given the world the principles that other physicians and surgeons today believe in, that puerperal sepsis or blood poisoning, caused in childbirth, is due to a dirt infection at the time of delivery.

Mr. Chairman, a few millions spent each year to nurses, midwives, and doctors to help them bring children into the world cleanly and healthily would not only save the lives of thousands of mothers but would also usher the young into the world in healthier, more sanitary, and more decent conditions.

In the rural sections of the United States and in the smaller villages we have very few nurses, midwives, or doctors. A kindly friend, male or female, may be the only one to help to bring the child into the world. This humane and constructive legislation, embodied in this bill, would save the lives of millions of our mothers in the future, and help to perpetuate the home and the angel of the home—the mother.

Mr. Chairman, previously this maternal legislation was known as the "Shepherd-Towner Act" or the "Shepherd-Bankhead Act." This legislation was only put into operation for a few years and died because no appropriations were made to perpetuate its work. In the past its work was only of a temporary nature. The present legislation will be permanent and a living monument to Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

This bill makes its tenure permanent in character and lasting in its results. It will be an ideal, worthy to be emulated by every civilized government of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, another section of this humane and constructive bill provides for child welfare. This section would take care of infancy and childhood until the age of puberty. The weakest links in the chain of home life everywhere are the two extremes of life, young age and old age. A generation ago 1 out of every 4 young that were brought into the world die during the stage of infancy. They had no opportunity to develop into childhood or adolescence. Today, through the medium of science and medicine, through serum and antitoxin, and the countless contributions of prophylactic treatments, coupled with hygienic regulations and legal restrictions placed upon the exploitation of childhood, we are enabled to raise children, with the result that the mortality tables today show only 1 out of 8 dying before they have had a chance to develop into young adult life.

The laws of our country and society have aided the young children of the present generation by prolonging legal childhood to the age of 16, which ends the compulsory educational period required by law.

A soldier fighting in the trenches of France, with bullets passing and bombs exploding over him, with poison gas about him, has a better chance to escape with his life, than has a child coming into the world to live and to reach young adult life.

Mr. Chairman, the mother may be the queen of the home, but the father is the breadwinner, the provider, who keeps the home intact. The home is the foundation of all society. Upon it the superstructure of all government must rise. Destroy the home and you destroy the most sacred human institution devised by mankind.

Death, through the loss of the breadwinner, has broken many a home. For centuries the widows, orphans, and dependent children have cried aloud for help and assistance in their tragic periods of economic insecurity. In the past the only recourse for orphaned children was the poorhouse, almshouse, and the orphan asylum.

The twentieth century of civilization has awakened our citizens to the duty and obligations they owe to these unfortunate orphans. Forty States in our Union have thus far enacted widows' pensions or child-welfare laws, to protect these innocent orphaned victims of previous inhuman capitalistic and legislative indifference. [Applause.]

Widows' pensions and child-welfare laws have had the spirit of humanity breathed into them by permitting the mother to have the custody of her own brood in her own home, by having the State give to the mother the money it formerly gave to an institution to take care of these orphans. In this way the State has preserved the integrity of the home. In its own home the child becomes the beneficiary of the tender love, the gentle solicitude, and the gracious care of its own mother. In an institution a child becomes a mechanical automaton. In its own home it is treated as a human being. Children reared in an orphan asylum lose their affection for those they should love. In the home the ties that bind the child to its mother are firm, unyielding, and enduring.

This bill, so carefully conceived, further protects the home because millions of dollars are granted by the Federal Government to the States, that will eliminate the orphan asylums and restore the orphaned child to the custody of its own mother, who is the proper and noblest guardian of childhood.

Mr. Chairman, if people who are physically and mentally perfect in every way cannot find work to guarantee their economic security, what is to be the fate of those children who have been handicapped by nature by being crippled, maimed, deformed, disfigured, blind, and deaf through congenital causes or diseases of childhood.

"A sound mind in a healthy body" was the slogan, or dictum, enunciated by the famous seventeenth-century English philosopher, psychologist, and educational thinker, John Locke, in his famous work, Some Thoughts Concerning Education. The fact that he was himself a physician of great repute, coupled with the thought that nature had endowed him with a delicate physical constitution, made him realize the vital importance and value of having a healthy body.

Our great humane President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, a father, a victim of infantile paralysis himself, knows what a long, hard fight has to be made to recover from the ravaging infirmities of infantile paralysis and other diseases that have pitifully crippled and maimed some of the youth of our country.

This constructive legislation and appropriation amounting to $2,850,000 in this bill offers to every crippled, deformed, and paralyzed child, whose parents cannot afford to pay for treatment, every scientific, medical, mechanical, and physiological relief to restore them to health. It assuages the grief, the anguish, and the suffering that accompanies the complications of childhood diseases which afflict its unfortunate victims with chronic infirmities.

This result is accomplished in this legislative bill through rehabilitation and vocational guidance and constructive and corrective devices that are designed to restore a sound mind in an otherwise afflicted and paralyzed body, so that these children may ultimately become useful citizens of our Republic, capable of being self-supporting and self-respecting.

Mr. Chairman, the period of adolescence is the critical and trying time in young adult life. The physiological changes that take place in puberty are responsible for the mental aberrations so common and prevalent in youth. Scientific medicine contends that juvenile delinquency, incorrigibility, changes of disposition, temperament, and character are attributable to the endocrinological disturbance caused by puberty.

This humane bill appropriates millions of dollars to aid these unfortunate victims of adolescence, through scientific medical supervision controlled in the Bureau of Child Hygiene, thus contributing to the normal restoration of these young people as useful citizens of our Republic, instead of filling our penal institutions with juvenile delinquents. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, between the ages of 20 to 60 is the great productive period of human existence. Through labor, commerce, industry, agriculture, science, art and literature, and all collateral forms of human endeavor, the progress of mankind throughout the civilized world has been accomplished.

The one sublime and great ideal for which all those people who work through brain and brawn would eternally be grateful for is economic and job security. Mankind the world over is profoundly interested in one fundamental concept; that is the privilege to work and to support loved ones who are dependent on that work for the amenities and decencies of life. The chronic deterrent that has prevented mankind throughout the world, between the ages of 20 to 60, from being blessed with happiness, contentment, and social and economic security is the tragic economic disease called unemployment.

The problem of unemployment is today not a problem of any locality nor any country, nor of any political party, but is world-wide and universal in its proportions. Nothing affects the average individual so closely as the question of the preservation of life with economic security. It is only after these necessities are satisfied that an individual can turn his thoughts to problems of politics, society, education, science, art, philosophy, or even religion. Society as it is constituted today, and has been constituted throughout all the ages, has taught humanity the fact that the necessities of life can be obtained only by the "sweat of one's brow." It has ever been the rule that those unwilling to work do not deserve to share the material goods of the world. The tragedy of unemployment today, however, is that men are willing to work, but can find no work for their hands or brains.

In order that the remedies for the relief of unemployment, particularly unemployment in the United States, may be properly understood, it is necessary that we have some conception of the historical aspects of this difficulty. Unemployment has plagued mankind from time immemorial. It has been with us from the time that society became organized and humanity gave up its nomadic existence and the freedom which such a life implies for the greater protection which an individual receives in group organization.

The annals of ancient history give many examples of the problems of unemployment and how it was successfully temporarily solved. In the Bible there is the story of Joseph who was called in as an expert by the Egyptian Pharoah of his day to solve a problem which was then appearing on the horizon, namely, unemployment for an appreciable number of years. Joseph suggested that a sufficient store of materials be set up during the years of plenty to supply the needs of the 7 lean years that were in the offing. The Phoenicians were the commercial group of the Semitic nation. They settled in Africa and founded the ancient civilization known as Carthage. They explored the mining districts of the British Isles, and brought back iron, tin, and copper to Phoenicia, there to be converted into bronze. For the Phoenicians, therefore, the solution of their problem of unemployment lay in expansion or colonization in other parts of the world.

The Greeks had a similar cure for this problem, for when in the small country of Greece the press of increased population made employment difficult, settlers were sent to what is now Sicily, and there established a center of commerce at Syracuse. They also sent their legions to Asia Minor and established settlers' colonies there. In Sparta the problem was met in another manner. This communistic country, which rigorously supervised the life of all the members of its community, decreed the extreme penalty of killing the weak so that only the strong might survive. This, of course, tended to keep down any rapid increase in population, and eventually Sparta perished as a result of the very remedy she thought would help her in her survival.

Rome, the first great Empire of history, was confronted with the problem of unemployment early in its career. Following the conflict between Rome and Carthage the problem was relieved by the subjugation of the latter country. The natural growth of population of Rome, nevertheless, soon presented again the problem of unemployment. To solve it Rome resorted to the methods of Phoenicia, namely, colonization. Consequently, Roman soldiers planted their flag in Spain, in Britain, in the Balkan States—which are now known as Rumania, Bulgaria, and Yugoslavia—in Hungary, in Asia Minor, and on the northern coast of Africa. Always following the flag went the civil population, anxious to leave overcrowded Rome and Italy. They would rather be, first, in any place where they could find employment, economic security, and profitable labor than, second, where they would constantly be on the brink of starvation. The influx of barbarians and slaves deprived the native Romans of labor and employment. This was one of the conditions that finally caused the great Empire to collapse in the year 476 A. D.

Following the collapse of the Roman Empire the organization of society entered into the feudal system, which was the political, social, and economic set-up of the Middle Ages. The feudal system, while it destroyed or curbed the individual liberty and freedom of men and women, narrowing them to a confining locality, nevertheless gave a fair guaranty of employment to the workers, thus assuring economic security. The feudal lord unquestionably was master of the soul and body of the toiler. The laborer was bound to the soil by a process akin to involuntary slavery. While he served his master he had bread to eat, a roof to shelter him, and clothing to wear. Did the peasant prefer to surrender his liberty and freedom in return for a guaranty of economic security? The doglike fidelity of the medieval serf to his lord, the loyalty of generations of apparently willing peasants to generations of overlords of the same family, showed that the feudal serf of medieval times did prefer the benefits of economic security to liberty itself.

Not all people were happy, however, with this compulsory service to their overlords, and among those were many who were obsessed by a desire for liberty and individual freedom. These people, together with others who were unemployed, or rather who refused employment under feudal conditions, left their native lands in search of adventure and constituted a part of the personnel of the great religious armies known as the "Crusaders", who also were merchants and traders.

Self-sufficient as the economic society of the Middle Ages was its people were nevertheless dependent upon the outer world for some essentials of good living. The serf could grow his own food supply, spin his own wool, make his own agricultural implements, design all of his own clothes; but for the spices of life he had to look to the Orient, to the far romantic East. The medieval person knew of no ice as a means of preservation of food. He was far from the day of electrical or gas refrigeration. The spices of the East were absolutely essential for him in preserving his food over a length of time and to keep it from decaying in the heat of the Tropics.

The spread of Mohammedanism and the victorious armies of the Turks barred western Europe from direct communication with the Far East, particularly after the capture of Constantinople by Saracens in 1453. To prevent their overland caravans and maritime cargo ships loaded with rich merchandise from falling into the hands of the Mohammedans the people who inhabited the continent of Europe were of necessity compelled to look for other routes to India and the Far East, such as the expeditions of Vasco de Gama and Columbus. While the Americas were being colonized they remained for many centuries too remote for the bulk of European population to migrate. In the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries we find wide-spread unemployment worse than that of today. So prevalent, indeed, was unemployment, that the man power of the world was only too happy to be employed as professional soldiers in the frequent wars that characterized this period. Slowly, but surely, the colonies of the New World began to absorb the unemployed of the old. Since the inception of the industrial revolution and the war for American independence, colonization in other continents has progressed so rapidly as to relieve temporarily the economic pressure in European countries.

For the Modern Age, the latter part of the eighteenth century witnessed the development of the industrial revolution in England. The invention of machinery transferred many farmers to the factory and thousands of farms were deserted. Commercial cities sprung up, new captains of wealth were created, and capitalists accumulated tremendous fortunes.

The workers shared very slightly in this era of industrial prosperity. Instead they suffered from the evils of this new system which brought about low wages, child labor, long hours, industrial accidents, and industrial diseases. Summarizing the results of this industrial revolution in England, we find 12 percent of its population rich and comfortable, while 88 percent of its inhabitants were in abject poverty and destitute circumstances. However, the great redeeming feature of the industrial revolution was, that it brought about the destruction of the feudal system of agriculture by the vast movements of men and women from small isolated farms to the factories of urban communities.

From the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 to the inception of the World War in 1914 an economic era was ushered in which reached the highest peak of prosperity the world has ever known. The full fruits of the factory system were being gathered by all civilized nations of the world. European powers extended themselves into the distant continents of Africa, Asia, and Australia. There they founded colonies, not only for political purposes to satisfy national pride but primarily to furnish raw material for the use of the factories in England and other European nations, which materials were there converted into finished products, to be shipped back to the colonies for their consumption.

That is why England did not permit America to manufacture in the early history of our career, but compelled the colonies to send the raw material to England, where they converted it into manufactured goods, and sent the goods back to be sold to the colonies.

That is the reason America, at the inception of our Government, was 98 percent agricultural and 2 percent industrial.

During the World War the problem of unemployment disappeared. The armies absorbed the unemployed, and the tremendous increase in consumption of war materials stimulated the demand for supplies which taxed the resources of both machine and man powers throughout the world. Following the termination of the war, however, the reaction set in, and a condition exactly opposite to that which prevailed during the war period was ushered in, resulting in wide-spread unemployment.

What is the reason for unemployment in modern days? The primary cause is overproduction of material goods, bringing about a decline in price, with a lessened production and consequent unemployment. What are the factors which contribute to overproduction? These are: First, lack of economic markets, because practically every habitable portion of the globe has already been populated and has been, or is, on the verge of being industrialized. Second, the invention and use of labor-saving machinery has displaced thousands of men and women. Third, the instance of seasonal trades, characteristic of highly civilized communities, in which styles change frequently and producers are afraid to anticipate future requirements. Another great factor in the production of unemployment is the unfortunate bankrupt financial condition of most of our country's 40,000,000 farmers who are potential buyers. However, because of their lowered income, this great buying power is lost, with the resulting unemployment of the thousands who would otherwise be required to supply the farmer's needs.

Mergers and combinations of big business also create wide-spread unemployment. They throw the middle classes out of business and force them down to the level of employees; thus they create a large class of individuals seeking employment without increasing the opportunities for finding work. Other significant causes of unemployment, particularly in our country, were the great tidal waves of immigration, which began in the end of the eighteenth century and until 20 years ago brought into our country millions of people seeking employment.

Serious as the condition of unemployment in our country is today, it is not hopeless if we have the courage to face the facts and apply the proper remedies. What are these remedies? They are, first, political; second, economic; and third, social.

Politically we can aid in alleviating the conditions of unemployment by promoting international peace, so as to render wars improbable if not impossible. Post-bellum reconstruction always brings unemployment in its wake through the return of the soldier to industry. Let us, therefore, war on war. Peace should be our ideal, our hope, our aspiration. [Applause.]

Economically the solution may be of two characters. First, by lessening the overproduction, by agreement in various industries; and, second, by increasing consumption of commodities by encouragement of liberal terms, such as credit to debtors, particularly in periods of economic stress.

Socially the solution of unemployment concerns itself to the attitude of the Federal Government toward the individual. How can the Nation aid? The Government can assist business, industry, and labor in the following manner:

First. The national abolition of child labor, now accomplished through the National Recovery Act.

Second. The limitation of the labor of women in hazardous industries.

Third. The establishment of a national system of old-age pensions as provided in this bill.

Fourth. The perfection of unemployment insurance in times of prosperity to provide for the unemployed in time of distress.

Fifth. The institution of a vigorous, scientific, and practical program of farm relief to rehabilitate agriculture, the basis of all industry. [Applause.]

Sixth. Governmental supervision of any trust or mergers that are in their nature monopolies and which threaten the well-being of the Nation.

Seventh. The liberal extension of credits by banks in cooperation with the Federal Reserve System to every deserving business organization engaged in commerce, industry, and agriculture.

Eighth. The rapid construction of public works to aid in absorbing the number of unemployed.

Ninth. By solving the problem of the distribution by the middleman, who adds to the cost of distribution a tremendous overhead, which is responsible for many evils now inherent in our method of distribution.

Tenth. By stabilizing our currency and arranging for the disposition of exportable surplus and by an adjustment of the gold to silver ratio, which may stimulate trade with silver-standard countries.

Eleventh. By increasing consumption. It is easily conceivable that if the 15,000,000 unemployed were given the means, through employment, of purchasing consumable goods, that factories would soon get busy again. Therefore the purchasing power of the unemployed must be increased.

This is the social program our Government must adopt to combat the ravages and tragedies of unemployment. Unemployment is the cancer of our body politic, eating at the vitals of our Nation and crumbling the economic structure upon which our entire western civilization rests.

The ability of our Government to check unemployment in our country will be the barometer of the civilization of our time. Our Government must ultimately stand or fall by its ability to solve this problem. [Applause.]

It is upon the economic security of its man power that society must rest. To combine individual liberty with economic security of labor is the paramount and great problem of our age.

The extraordinary fact about this splendid bill is that in the future it will provide unemployment insurance to those who are the unwilling derelicts and driftwood of our social, commercial, and capitalistic system.

Mr. Chairman, so long as the profit motive is the animating and fundamental concept of capitalistic rugged individualism, so long will the few, at the expense of the many, control the wealth of our Nation, and unemployment must always prevail. [Applause.] This bill seeks to minimize unemployment by cushioning with unemployment insurance any critical period of unemployment that might afflict us in the future.

Mr. Chairman, despite the sunshine which floods the road upon the highway of life, the path of human progress toward peace on earth and good will to mankind has been lined with rocks, thorns, and thistles.

Among the great assets of human progress may be listed the tremendous achievement of the arts and the sciences, particularly the strides made in medicine toward the conquest of nature. The annihilation of distance both in transportation and communication, the victory over man's visible foes in animal and vegetable life, and the compelling of nature to yield of its stores in greater profusion than ever before, are some of the assets to be credited to modern civilization.

On the other hand we must not blind ourselves to the liabilities which are present in our midst. These seem to spring from the very progress which ought to annihilate them. The destructiveness of modern warfare, the unfair and unjust distribution of wealth to labor, the viciousness of modern propaganda, and the evils attendant upon our highly agricultural and industrialized age, are some of the outstanding dangers which mankind still has to conquer. Of all these complex problems none perhaps is greater or affects more people than does the hazard of old age.

I do not speak of the dangerous disease of old age, but of the economic insecurity which today affects those of our population who have reached the age of 60 or 65. This is a problem which is terrifying to those whom it affects and which strikes at the very soul of their existence. In this so-called "twentieth century of civilization", in this, the richest country in the world, we find men and women past the age of 65 compelled to surrender their self-respect and become dependent as charitable wards, either on the community or on relatives or friends who in many instances are as badly off as those who depend upon them.

Old-age dependency is definitely and positively one of the great tragedies of modern economic progress. Scientific medicine has made it possible for mankind to live longer than formerly. Two generations ago the average age of man would be about 40; today the average man lives until he is 58, and the same scientific applicances that have been utilized for children to grow and develop have been placed around the old father and the mother, so that old age and longevity have been increased. Formerly, out of a total of 100,000 people, 41,000 would reach the age of 65. Today 52,000 of such an original number will live to be 65. Because of the increased expectancy of life, the number of persons 65 years of age and over in the United States has been steadily increasing, and the consequences are that, while those fathers and mothers are living longer than before, the economic and industrial conditions that confront them in our Nation has made it impossible for them to find work, and the only way they can subsist and save themselves from penury, hunger, and want, is for them to join the great caravan that finally wends its way over the hill to the poorhouse.

Only 6 percent of all the old people employed in private industries can expect pensions in their old age, while the balance, or 94 percent of them, can expect nothing, depending only upon their savings. If, unfortunately, their income did not permit them to save for old age, or they lose their money through unfortunate investments, then modern industry throws them back upon the community as human driftwood and wreckage that is useless because of life's wear and tear. Thus we behold our wage earners transformed from a group of hopeful, independent citizens into a class of helpless poor. In some States of the Union it is a crime to turn out old horses to starve; still society lets its old men and women starve in their old, unemployed age unless they take the last pilgrimage upon the road that leads them pathetically to the almshouse and poorhouse. [Applause.]

How many old men and women have we? There are today over seven and a half million people past 65 years of age in the United States. Four and one-half millions are between the ages of 65 and 70, a million and a half between the ages of 70 and 75, and a million between 75 and 80, and there are three-quarters of a million people 80 and over, until life finally terminates. The number of old people in our country is now twice greater than the original population of the entire Thirteen Colonies.

Statistics of all the money spent in the almshouses and the old-age homes of our country show that 32 percent went as administrative expense, 38 percent for operation of the plant, while 30 percent went for inmates' maintenance. In other words, out of every dollar contributed to the almshouse, 70 cents went for administrative and operative expense, the so-called "overhead", while 30 cents went directly for the old fathers and mothers.

Every State of the Union, with the exception of New Mexico, has almshouses for the poor. In 40 of our States the almshouses are county institutions. Here in these almshouses are huddled together the feeble-minded and the epileptic, the crippled and the maimed, the idiot and the imbecile, the abandoned child of the prostitute, the broken-down criminal, the chronic drunkard, the victim of loathsome and contagious diseases, and venereal infections, and last but not least, the superannuated toilers of labor and industry, our fathers and mothers. Veterans of dissipation and veterans of peace and industry living together under one roof. Is it fair? Is it just? Is it humane?

To me it is a pitiful and tragic indictment of the civilization of our times. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 more minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 15 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 15 additional minutes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, what are the causes of old-age dependency? First and foremost is the impairment of health. Sickness and disease exact a terrible toll. In old age the resistance of a person is diminished and he becomes susceptible very easily to the ravages that come in the wake of vocational and industrial pursuits. Tuberculosis among the miners; pneumonia amongst the steel and mill and factory workers; rheumatism and heart lesions from working in damp and wet occupations; asthma, bronchitis, and skin lesions amongst fur workers; lead poisoning amongst painters, and countless other maladies too numerous to mention. Unfortunate business investments, alluring advertisements, high-pressure salesmen have ruined many an old father and mother. Bank failures have sent many an elderly couple to the almshouse when the savings of a lifetime were lost. When the waning earning power of old age in competition with young age and machinery manifests itself, ambition collapses, hope is transformed into despair, and, with relatives and friends gone, death or the almshouse is welcomed as the final relief. The greatest curse of old age, however, is unemployment, which has lately increased through the productivity of machinery. Everywhere discrimination is practiced against the older employee in favor of youth. In modern industry today we see the exemplification of the vicious principle "Equal opportunity for all, except those past the age of 45."

Another factor driving older men and women toward pauperism is the lack of family connections. One-third of the almshouse paupers throughout the United States have never been married, another third are widowed, and one-third are still married. The great majority of aged dependents in almhouses and infirmaries are childless.

Other causes for dependency are the victims of the ingratitude of children who have forgotten the divine injunction given to Moses upon Mount Sinai, when God gave him the great commandment which says: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Loss of wife, husband, or children very quickly brings about the transition from independence to dependence.

Scientific medicine has increased the span of life in less than a century from 39 years in 1840 to 58 years, which it is today. So that today we have 7,500,000 people over 65 in a population of 125,000,000.

Last but not least, the greatest cause of dependency in old age is the terrible toll that industrial accidents take in human and economic values.

During the period from 1910 to 1920, a period of 10 years, there were more men and women maimed and crippled in the industries of the United States than were lost in all the wars of our Nation from the time of the American Revolution down to the World War. In the years 1917 and 1918, when our expeditionary forces went across the ocean to fight to make the world safe for democracy, there were more men and women killed in the industries of our country than there were American soldiers and sailors killed and wounded by the hostile forces fighting in Europe. In the year 1919, according to the report of the Federation of American Engineers, in this country 23,000 people were killed in our industries and 3,570,000 workers were crippled and injured in the performance of their duties so that they had to stay off for 4 weeks or more from their employment. If the prevailing rate of wages, according to the National Employers' Association, amounted to $27.25 per week for the year 1927, it would mean $4 a day for 300,000,000 days, or a loss to labor and industry of $1,200,000,000 a year.

It was these frightful conditions, ladies and gentlemen, that prompted the people of the country of ours to interest themselves in the subject of old-age pensions. In 10 years the principle of old-age pensions has been approved in 29 States and 2 Territories of the Union.

Social-service workers and authorities on old age have agreed that any individual who has reached the age of 65 or over and possesses no property or whose income is less than $300 a year must become a dependent upon his family or his community. In 1930, 3,000,000 people were supported wholly or in part by others. Think of it, one person out of every two past 65 years old is supported by your community! What are the factors which are responsible for this very serious situation?

1. First is the increased span of life. Accompanying this increase in the individual's life is the elimination of opportunity in industrial occupations. All of us are familiar with advertisements for help wanted. Applicants must be under 40 and sometimes even under 30 years. Some restaurants will not accept waiters over 25 years. Thus the aged worker is progressively eliminated from industry. The chance to obtain a job seems to vary in inverse proportion to the age of the men after 30 or 40. In this great machine age where mass production reigns supreme, we behold the tragic formula of equal opportunity for all with the exception of those past the age of 45. [Applause.]

2. The second factor in old-age dependency is that of family relations and the mode of living. Before the intense centralization of industry arrived in large cities, homesteads were kept and there was always room for grandpa or grandma at the fireside. Today, with apartment-house living, no room for the aged exists, and they of course become dependent upon the charity of the community, or inmates of almshouses.

3. The number of old-age dependents are four times as great among men as they are in women. For sentimental reasons mothers more often will find a home with their children than will the father of the family. At the same time it is interesting to note that there are four times as many single men dependent upon charitable assistance as married men.

4. The collapse of over 4,000 banks, carrying the life savings of hundreds of thousands of old people, has destroyed their hope of providing for the future. High-pressure salesmanship, selling worthless securities to these old people, has robbed them of millions that would have provided for them in their old age. Ill health, of course, is a factor in old-age dependency.

5. Perhaps the most important factor of all that constitutes old-age dependency, is the low wages paid to unskilled labor during the productive years of life. By low wages, I mean a salary which allows only body and soul to be kept together, but which makes no provision for old-age saving or insurance. That this is definitely true is shown by an authentic report by the State of Pennsylvania in 1925, to the effect that the male almshouse population is recruited largely from the ranks of unskilled labor. Another study, made in 1910, showed that out of 58,000 males admitted to various almshouses in the United States, 37½ percent were common laborers. In New York State, a study of 1,700 men receiving old-age pensions, showed that 50 percent were unskilled and semiskilled laborers.

To summarize, therefore, it must be evident to us that the factors which make for old-age dependency are not within the control of the individual himself. It seems definitely certain that social and economic forces which no single person can guide or control are in the main responsible for the appalling condition of old-age dependency in the United States.

To my mind, old-age security must be solved and the terror of old age removed if the United States of America is to fulfill its destiny. [Applause.]

We physicians constantly urge care of the body in infancy, youth, and maturity in order that physical perfection may be at its highest throughout life. Of what use is such urging by doctors—and care of the body by the average person if, at 40 or even 50 years of age, that body is to be scrapped as old metal and thrown away as human junk?

In some States of the Union, as I stated before, it is a crime to turn out old horses to starve. They must be fed or destroyed. Shall we feed, clothe, and house our aged, or shall we destroy them as old horses are destroyed? The very thought of it is a tragic indictment of the civilization of our days. [Applause.]

We have been dodging the problems of old-age pensions by expedients of various kinds. But no expedient ever solved a problem. The only solution of this condition is by thorough consideration of all the facts that will honestly solve this matter.

For many years on the floor of Congress and elsewhere I have advocated pension for the aged—old-age pensions—and have made studies of the conditions covering the subject that have run over a long time. I have fought steadily and consistently for this ideal of humanity for years and shall continue to battle until it is won for every old man and woman. Economic security must be assured to all citizens in their old, declining age.

Let me repeat, gentlemen of the House, no society can survive that allows its men and women to starve in their old and unemployed age, and forces them, to avoid hunger and want, to take the last pilgrimage of their lives on the road that pathetically and tragically leads over the hill to the poorhouse.

Old-age dependency is but one of the terrible social risks to which man is subject today. What are some of the other risks? They are industrial accidents and occupational diseases; temporary or prolonged sickness; permanent invalidity; old age; maternity; unemployment; death of the breadwinner, involving dependency of widow, orphans, or other dependents; sickness of members of family; burial.

What is the remedy? Let us look at what foreign countries are doing. Of all the civilized nations of the world, 42 have adopted the principles of old-age pensions. There are three forms of old-age pensions operating throughout Europe, south Africa, South America, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand. The first is called the compulsory, contributory form of old-age pensions. This system consists of compelling each workingman from 16 to 65 to contribute a part of his income to a general national fund, the amount to be contributed being anywhere from 2 to 5 percent. The employers contribute a like amount, and the government contributes a third portion. This amount stays in the coffers of the nation until the man becomes old and enfeebled and arrives at the age of 65, when he becomes the beneficiary of his labor and efforts. Twenty-eight nations of Europe have adopted the principle of the compulsory, contributory form of insurance, and amongst them are the three great nations—England, France, and Germany.

Germany was the first to start this movement, under the influence of the Iron Chancelor, Bismarck, in 1881. Today there are 20,000,000 workers enrolled who, when their time comes, will be the recipients of an old-age pension which will make them love and respect their fatherland and make them realize that they are receiving the kind of protection and security which it is the duty of every civilized government to provide for its citizens.

Germany also provides its citizens with invalidity insurance, widows' and orphans' pensions, as well as sickness and unemployment insurance.

In 1908 that conservative and great nation, England, under the leadership of Lord Asquith and Lloyd George, introduced the noncontributory form of insurance. In 1925 greater modifications were made in the bill to conform with Germany's system, so that England today stands upon the same pedestal in old-age-security legislation as Germany. It adopted in toto the entire theory of compulsory, contributory insurance. Out of 17,000,000 workers in England, 16,000,000 have subscribed to the principle of old-age pensions.

France has 7,500,000 of its working people enrolled under the roster of the compulsory, contributory form of old-age pensions.

The second system, under which 10 nations operate, is called the "noncontributory form" of old-age pensions and is colloquially known as the "straight pension system." This system provides for no contribution by any toiler, but when a workingman arrives at the age of 65 he receives his pension as an evidence of the interest which his government maintains in him. Industry cannot throw him away as a wreck upon the ocean of life.

The nations which have adopted this noncontributory form of old-age pensions, or straight pensions, are such countries as Denmark, Canada, New Zealand, Australia, Iceland, and Russia.

The third form of old-age pensions is the kind known as the "voluntary savings" type, under which an individual puts away every week in one of the postal savings of the government a certain amount of money from his allowance and the government contributes a subsidy to equal it. The individual, however, cannot use it until he arrives at the age of 65. The nation which started this principle was Spain, and today Japan is operating under that system.

There are 1,900,000,000 men and women in this world and 600,000,000 of them have subscribed to the different forms of old-age pensions. They will be the beneficiaries of an old-age pension system in the declining years of their life. So we have the wholesome spectacle of 42 nations of the world interested in the preservation of human life. The only three nations of the whole world that have not adopted the principle of old-age pensions are China, India, and the United States. I am making the plea to have our country withdraw from the company it is keeping with China and India and march onward with the civilized nations of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the true patriots of our country are not only the men who bared their breasts to shot and shell and were ready to give their lives upon the battlefields of our country so that our Nation should be preserved, but there are also the veterans of peace, men who have worked in the quarries of life, in season and out of season, and have contributed everything that they hold near and dear in life to the peace and prosperity of our country in times of peace.

Just as we pension the veteran for his patriotism in time of war we should pension through the principle of old-age security the old father and mother who have battled for our happiness and our success in time of peace.

I want to see America marching with England, with France, and Germany, not only on the basis of an agreement for naval and military disarmament but on the basis of humanitarian disarmament, that would make the world safe for humanity to live in peace, tranquillity, and happiness until Divine Providence calls them to rest in eternal sleep. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, often have I sat in the House and listened to resolutions put through by some of the distinguished men of this historic forum. A few years ago a bill was passed appropriating $50,000 to determine why fishes do not enter the harbors of certain sections of our country. Recently another appropriation passed the House spending thousands of dollars to determine the cause of death of old trees in the forests of our Nation. At the last session of Congress thousands of dollars were appropriated to determine the cause of disease among cattle. I have seen thousands of dollars spent to conserve our oil resources. Millions have been spent to eradicate the corn borer, the bollweevil, the Spanish fly, and the Japanese beetle.

Mr. Chairman, the present bill under debate and discussion is an American bill. It is a humanitarian bill. It is in consonance and in conformity with the teachings and the preachment of the great Savior. It is in harmony with the greatest commandment of all commandments. Mr. Chairman, the time has come, the hour has struck, and the moment has arrived when the United States has to declare whether it shall fall behind the cultured and civilized nations of the world or is willing to march side by side with those nations that have put human rights on the same parity as property rights. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we have had 74 Congresses of the United States since the inception of our Government. What man in Congress here can state to me which Congress stands out preeminent? What Member can tell me the Congress that has done the greatest good?

All I know is that the Twelfth Congress was the Congress that declared war against England. The Twenty-ninth Congress was the Congress that declared war against Mexico because of Texas. The Thirty-seventh Congress was the Congress that brought about the Civil War and gave freedom to the Negro. The Fifty-fifth Congress was the Congress that brought about the freedom of Cuba, which involved us in the Spanish-American War. The Sixty-fifth Congress was the Congress that declared war against the Central Powers of Europe, and the Sixty-third Congress was the Congress that brought about the Federal Reserve System that protected the rights of money in banks against financial collapse so that our material wealth would be protected as the years go by.

I would like to see the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States, ere we make our exodus from this historic forum, declare war against the inhuman treatment of our elders, so that they may continue to live in their own homes that have been hallowed with sweet memories, tender with pleasant reminiscences. Home, where the prattle of children has been music to the ears of the parents. Home, that has always been dedicated to God and consecrated to the love of family life.

In the name of humanity I appeal to the membership of this House for the preservation of the home and all that it means, so that the gracious prayers of our older generation will pray for the life and happiness of the membership of the Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States for having given of their today that others might have their tomorrow. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, every manufacturer is permitted to deduct from his income tax certain sums for obsolescent machinery—for property that is wearing out. How about providing sums for the obsolescent men and women, and the obsolete men and women who have been worn out in their labor in the quarries of life? Are they not entitled to security in their human obsolescence? Are human beings less than machines? Is a human soul of less value than a contraption of iron, steel, and brass? Is property more sacred in this great Republic than human beings and human rights? Did the fighting founders of the Republic free the American Colonies from Great Britain, in order that later generations might immure them in economic slavery, and let their old carcasses waste away in hunger and poverty, or be put away in poorhouses with criminals, insane, and diseased others? God forbid!

Why should not employers of the labor on human minds and hands, be compelled to provide obsolescent security in the form of old-age pensions for those who have worn away the best years of their lives in service to the machine age. The cost is only 3 percent of the weekly pay roll, for the benefits that will come. For unemployment insurance the employee bears an equal tax of 3 percent with the employer who pays 3 percent.

In my career as physician, surgeon, and social worker, I have done everything in my power to further the ends of social justice. As one of the original members of the Widows' Pension Board in the State of New York 23 years ago, I have helped in the passage of many welfare bills, particularly those relating to the widows and orphans as exemplified in the widows' pensions and child-welfare laws, which have served as a model in 41 States of the Union and communities throughout the world. In my broader field of National legislation, I have centralized my efforts for the relief of old age through economic-security insurance and old-age pensions. These efforts have resulted in the repeated introduction of the Sirovich bill for old-age pensions during the past 10 years. In the Doughton bill, the solution of these social problems is the securing of old-age pensions through the compulsory contributory form of social insurance for every working person in the United States, the cost of which shall be distributed between workers and the employers.

Mr. Chairman, this is not socialism. This is not radicalism. This is not communism. This is humanitarianism! It proclaims to the people of our Republic, that since it is patriotic to pension our soldiers who bare their breast to shot and shell in order that our Republic may live, it is just as humane and patriotic to pension our old fathers and mothers who have toiled in the quarries of labor to make our country prosperous and glorious in time of peace. This is simple justice and the honorable discharge of a debt which society and our Republic owes those who labor in their behalf to make our Nation the richest in all the world. Every civilized nation on the face of the world has some form of old-age pensions with the exception of China, India, and the United States. Shall the United States, the richest, the greatest, and the most prosperous Nation in the world march arm in arm with medieval China or India, or shall it take its rightful place in the forefront of the great nations of the world battling for social justice to our forgotten old fathers and mothers. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, sooner or later the curtain of life will fall upon our earthly career. A little shaft will commemorate our humble memories. Let me sincerely hope and trust that in the far distant future when that time comes, that somewhere in Alleghany County, N. C., on such a modest shaft will be inscribed the sentiment:

"Here lies ROBERT DOUGHTON. Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the Seventy-fourth Congress. Father and sponsor of Federal old-age pensions, unemployment security, child welfare and health and maternity protection for the people of the United States." [Applause.]

BOB DOUGHTON—may the prayers of a grateful American public bring to you and your loved ones happiness in your heart, contentment in your mind, for having fathered and sponsored such inspiring and humane legislation, that will be an inspiration to others while you live, and a monument to your memory as well as our great humane President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, long after the rest of your colleagues shall be forgotten in the ashes of time. [Applause.]

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIROVICH. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. First I wish to express my very deep appreciation for this marvelous contribution to the discussion of this subject. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when this discussion opened on last Friday the first gentleman who took the floor was our colleague [Mr. TREADWAY], of Massachusetts. He chastised severely this measure and the method of its introduction and its consideration. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he can give us any enlightenment as to the conduct of the Republican Party.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY]. [Applause.]

Mr. MCGROARTY. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee for this courtesy. I want to tell my colleagues that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] actually had to go out of his way to get me this time. I slept on my rights. I did not appear when I should have appeared to ask for time. When I came to get this time, it had already been allotted and assigned; but notwithstanding that, Mr. DOUGHTON has rendered me the unusual courtesy of giving me this brief 20 minutes, and for that I thank him most sincerely. It is things like that which are leading me to like Washington a little. [Laughter.] When I came here first I was very much discouraged and depressed, and I did not know why; but I found out later it was because I did not know anybody, that I was a stranger, and that I was lonesome and homesick among strangers. Now that I am beginning to know you gentlemen of this House, and particularly the ladies of the House, I am beginning to like Congress a little.

What I say, my colleagues, will not be for home consumption. It has been charged against some of the speakers here that what they said was for home consumption. I am here as a Democratic Member of this Congress from what I believe is the most rock-ribbed Republican congressional district in the United States. The great Roosevelt avalanche of 1932 slid right by it and never touched it; even our best earthquakes out there have been unable to shake it. [Laughter.] It went for Hoover like a thousand of bricks. They gave the Republican ticket last year a majority of something like 70,000. The Republicans of my district are a little ashamed if ever their normal majority drops under 50,000. Still I am here, elected on the Democratic ticket. I did not want to come; I have no very great desire to stay. So what I tell you is not for home consumption; it comes from my heart and from my own conviction.

I am thinking of what the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] said, and what the last very eloquent speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] said. Both of them referred to the time when the curtain of life shall fall, on the last great day. I missed gestures they should have made that I have seen made by a dear old minister I used to know. He had but two gestures; one was to point his extended arm and finger upward and the other was to point an extended arm and finger downward. He wound up a sermon by saying: "When the roll is called up yonder I'll be there", his finger pointing downward. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I have given a good deal of attention, such as my poor little brain will permit, to the bill now before the House. I am wondering if what I heard so much out in California and even since I came to Washington was true, that legislation here in this Congress is being framed by college professors and that college professors are running the country. I have tried to find out about these college professors, if they existed, to get a look at them. Sometimes I felt they were purely mythical, but I had the good luck not long ago to meet one. I sat in the Agricultural Building in a big room with the Land Commission, and sitting beside me was Professor Tugwell. I engaged him in conversation and became very friendly with him. I told him that I was due in a few days among the old blue hills of Pennsylvania where I was born, to attend a birthday party and I wanted to take a contribution to the party and asked Professor Tugwell for a suggestion which he gave and upon which I acted. I am willing to say right now that if Professor Tugwell's ability in the science of government is as sound as the suggestion for me to take to the birthday party, I am willing to follow him blindfolded to the ends of the world.

Now, about these college professors; if it be true, as most everybody believes, that they are framing legislation, let us look back through the pages of history and find out what background college professors have. I have made some researches and I find that college professors did not write the Ten Commandments, nor the Book of Job, nor the Four Gospels. Nobody has ever told me that Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John were college professors.

College professors did not write Magna Carta, the Declaration of Independence, or the Constitution of the United States, or the Marquis of Queensbury rules; they did not even write that famous ditty, which was popular a few years ago, entitled "Yes, We Have No Bananas Today." [Laughter.] So why should we take without question what college professors tell us today? The bill before us has some funny little noises in it that sound a lot like college professors. Take, for instance, the old-age-pension title, title II of the bill, I believe. Now, I am the last man in this world who will ever believe that our great President suggested that title of this bill; I do not think he has that kind of mind. Do you think for a moment that our great President would say to the old people of this country: "I want you to have $15 a month, and you can have it from the Federal Government provided the States match it with an equal amount." I want to ask you which States can match it? I do not know any State in this Union which can match it; they are all on the rocks. I do not know one of them that could match it with 15 cents, let alone $15; and so the result is likely to be that there will be no old-age pension under this bill. But suppose there should be, then what is it? You can say if you want to that the great President of the United States will go to the door of a house where there are an old man and an old woman and say to them: "Here, grandpa; here, grandma, is $15 for you, and it is to do you for a month; it is 50 cents a day for each of you. Now, take it, and do not spend it in riotous living." [Laughter.]

I think college professors proposed that.

Mr. Chairman, we are proposing an honest-to-God old-age pension, the vision of a man who has been much sneered at and much jeered at in the city of Washington and in this Congress and by people in high official positions. A high official of this Government has said that the Townsend plan is "cockeyed"—a very dignified, statesmanlike expression from a high Government official. Another high Government official said it is ridiculous and grotesque. Now, we do not think so. We know it is not, and we know that anybody who sneers and jeers at Dr. Townsend knows not what he does.

Mr. Chairman, I have known this man for many, many years. He is my near neighbor in California, and I want to ask you and other people, where were you and where was I when Dr. Townsend, through the long hard years, rode the swollen rivers of the Dakotas, rode through the bitter blizzards when he was frozen to the marrow in his bones, risking his own life to save the lives of others? He never spared himself where the cry of human pain reached his ears. Who are we to sneer at a man like that? The last great day has been spoken of on this floor this afternoon. I hope to God when I stand with all the sons of man, three deep, before the gates of Jehoshaphat on the last day I can render to the Lord God of the ages even the shadow of the account that Dr. Townsend can render for himself. He is too good a man to be jeered at. He is as honest as the rain. He has a scientific, educated mind, and he has a soul and a heart that beats for his fellow creatures, and his life proves that. Shame on anybody that jeers at a man of that kind. He is jeering at his better. Dr. Townsend has been jeered at by people who are not fit to wipe the dust from his shoes, and I tell you that because I know him. I live where he lives. I see him every day in his daily life. I would trust him with my very soul in anything.

Mr. Chairman, I was seated here in the House a short time ago and an old friend of mine remarked about this crazy utopian, bedbug scheme, the Townsend old-age-pension plan. I asked him if he knew anything about it, if he had looked into the matter. He stated he had not, but said it was crazy as hell. Now, he does not know the first thing about it, and that is the way with a lot of other people. Do you want to say that I am as crazy as a bedbug? I can read and write. I have been to school. I even taught school. I believe in it. Do you mean to say that all these 30,000,000 people in the United States are crazy as bedbugs? Who are you talking about? You are talking about the descendants of the men whose bloody footprints were in the snows of Valley Forge. That is who you are talking about. You are talking about the descendants of the men who took the flag from the Atlantic seaboard and flung it to the golden shores of the sunset seas. You are talking about God's beloved old people who have read newspapers, who have studied the Bible, who have read books, who are intelligent, but who are pitifully helpless in their old age. Now these college professors come and offer them this pauper's dole.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say these old people will resent it, and they will resent it bitterly. I told you before that I had no desire to return to the next Congress. I have not, but maybe I shall come here as an ex-Member with the right to the floor and take a look at it. I want to tell you gentlemen that if you do not pass the Townsend old-age pension plan and enact it into law—I am not making a threat, I am making a prophecy—you will be sorry. You know, poets are prophets, and although I am least of the poets, I still have a right to claim the gift of prophecy. I am a newspaperman, trained to keep my finger on the pulse of the Nation. I know what is going on. I know that in my own State of California there are 1,500,000 voters signed up on the Townsend old-age-pension plan. May I also tell you that the other day a member of the State legislature in Oregon voted against the adoption of the Townsend old-age plan in that legislature and his folks at home snagged him out of that legislature so quick it made his head swim. That is the way they feel.

My dear colleagues, I hope to return and visit you and sit with our beloved Speaker in his room, and chat with Mr. SNELL, Mr. HAMILTON FISH, and others.

You know, before I started this speech, I went to my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and said, "Congressman BLANTON, do not interrupt me. Do not ask me to yield. This is really my first speech and you will throw me off balance." I said, "Right in the beginning of Congress you took me for a ride. You took the hide off me and nailed it to the barn door, and it was good for me, because I learned something. Now, I have never interrupted you once and you have talked at least two or three times in this House to my knowledge." [Laughter.] I said, "Congressman BLANTON, you will let me go on, will you not?" And he put his hand in mine and said, "God bless you, I will do everything I can to help you, and if DOUGHTON does not give you enough time, I will ask our friends over there on the other side to give you some." So it is just something like that that is beginning to make me like Congress. But we are here to see the Townsend plan enacted into law.

Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a revised bill. It is the most scientific bill, the most statesmanlike bill ever introduced in any Congress of the United States. [Applause.] And one reason why that is so is because I did not write a line of it.

Now, my dear colleagues, I pray that God will enlighten you. Out yonder they are waiting, God's beloved old people, "Los Ancianos", as we call them in Spanish in California. They are hanging on every word that is spoken here. They are waiting, the dear old people who must be so near the heart of God. We cannot give them a pauper's dole. We cannot give them a crumb when we can give them a loaf. This country of ours is the richest and most powerful nation in the world, this Nation of ours in which the Lord God put everything that man needs, yet where there is stalking hunger and despair because somebody has blundered. We can solve all that now. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman referred to the generosity of this side. May I ask him if he would like 5 minutes of my time?

Mr. McGROARTY. Thank you, sir. I will take it and use it mostly in thanking you.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes.

Mr. McGROARTY. I have told you I represent the strongest, most rock-ribbed Republican district in the United States, Mr. Chairman, and I often sit on that side of the House—you may have noticed me [laughter and applause]—because I think I belong there or half belong there, anyway. I was elected by people who had prayed on their bended knees to God to die and be able to say to God that they had never voted for a Democrat. [Laughter.] An old lady in Pasadena in my district said to me one day, "JOHN McGROARTY, you have done a hard thing to me. I have prayed all my life that when I talked to God on the last great day I could tell Him two things I had never done. I wanted to tell Him, and I prayed to Him, that I had never voted for a Democrat and I had never voted for a Catholic. You are both, and, damn you, I voted for you." [Laughter and applause.]

Now, the point of all this is, Mr. Chairman, that these rock-ribbed Republicans, these people who have been intolerant of another man's religious belief all their lives, quit it, dropped it all, because I told them that if they wanted to elect me and if I were elected, I would support the Townsend plan, and my opponent would not promise that. So all these Republicans deserted him in a body, overcame the 50,000 normal Republican majority, and piled 12,000 majority on top of that for me.

Now, this is what they will do in every district in the United States, and you remember what I am telling you now. It is not a threat, it is a prophecy. My colleagues, get in line. Let the grace of God get into your hearts. Pray, as the Chaplain did this morning, for enlightenment so that you all shall come back here, and when I visit you in the Seventy-fifth Congress and stroll around shaking hands, I want to see you all here. You are all such nice fellows, you are all such good men that I would hate to see any ill befall you.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I submit the following statistical statement:

Inasmuch as my bill calls for a 2-percent tax levied on every transaction and a 2-percent tax on all gifts and inheritances and an increase of one-tenth in present income-tax rates, all to be collected and prorated to those citizens of 60 years of age or over, who can and will qualify for this pension, I wish to call attention to the probable amount each pensioner will receive each month.

Statistics are not complete as to the total amount of business done in these United States annually, but there is none who will deny that our present business total is upwards of $600,000,000,000. This being the case, 2 percent of this amount would yield $12,000,000,000 per annum. The most careful estimates of the number of citizens who can and will qualify under the provisions of the McGroarty bill is less than 6,000,000, but let us assume, for a margin of safety, that 8,000,000 citizens qualify; by simple calculation we arrive at the monthly pension or annuity of $125 per month for each of the 8,000,000 citizens retired.

No consideration in this calculation is given to the great amount of revenue gotten by the levying of the inheritance, gift tax, and the increase in the income-tax rates. Neither has there been any allowance made for the great increase in business which will be occasioned by the introduction of this new purchasing power and the consequent employment of the millions now unemployed.

Certainly no thinking person can believe that 8,000,000 or even 4,000,000 or for that matter, 2,000,000 citizens can be put on an annuity or pension roll by a waive of the hand or a stroke of the pen. While the pensioners are being qualified the tax is being collected and accumulated; therefore, the amount of returns from the various taxes will at all times produce more than enough to pay the pensioners $200 each month. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we are discussing and have been discussing for several days a social-security bill. Some features of this bill I am very much interested in, and in favor of. The fact of the matter is we are all interested in most of the features of the social-security bill, but we must give consideration to the necessity of inculcating features that are embodied in this bill into law, and we should give consideration as to how a bill of this kind is to be carried out and put into effect. It should be a reality and not a political jest.

We should consider the various titles of the bill.

With respect to title 1, old-age assistance, it seems to me from the experience I have had in the business world, if we would take up that one particular subject and give it the consideration that has been given it by those who have written this bill, we would be doing something for old-age assistance and doing it in the right direction. The monthly amount may not be as high as some of the Members of the House would like to see it, but if we start out with the idea we are going to try to establish a fund of $30 a month for those who have attained the age of 65 years and we put that into effect, we will determine many things about the working of the bill that may be different from the ideas we now possess and in a year or two, may decide that this amount may be raised 10 or 15 or 20 dollars a month, if possible, then we can do it in an orderly fashion.

However, instead of taking up title I, we add to that title II, Federal old-age benefits, title III, unemployment compensation, and title IV, aid to dependent children, title V, aid to maternal and child welfare, and title VI, public health service.

I want to be conscientious in trying to give you my views on this particular piece of legislation and I do predict that if you try to put this bill through as it is written, you will find it will become very difficult to solve all the problems, and it will be one that will be very difficult to handle, expensive, cumbersome, and unworkable.

Today, while we are talking about social security and trying to take care of the people of this country, it seems to me there is only one way you are going to be able to do it, and that is to let the business people of the United States try to employ other people in the United States so that we can be our brother's keeper, and in this way we will furnish employment, so that men may earn bread and butter for their children and for themselves in order that they may sustain life. If we expect to continue to set up the Federal Government as a charitable institution by which we are going to always take care of every individual that comes to us for aid, and do it in the way we are doing it now, having the Government keep the people, instead of the people supporting the Government, we are going to wreck business and we are going to put all the people of the United States on the Federal pay roll, and whenever we do this you can very well figure that we are going to have a wrecked Government, and, following the course we are pursuing, and have been pursuing in the last 2 or 3 years, we are simply going to wreck this Nation as sure as the sun rises tomorrow morning.

Now, in this bill we are placing upon the business of this country that employs more than 10 people 9 percent of their pay roll. If we are to place a 9-percent burden on the pay rolls of the country, the way business has been conducted the last 2 or 3 years, and the confidence of the people will be shaken in what we are doing, do you think this House is going to increase their confidence in American government? If so, you are mistaken. It cannot be.

I do not believe that we should establish all of these major projects all at one time. If a business concern today was going to manufacture a certain commodity that would put its plant in operation for several months or a year, it would develop that particular thing to the point where it was perfected. It would establish itself in an orderly procedure so that it could manufacture that one item at a profit. It would not think of manufacturing six different major commodities and put them in operation all at one time, but would perfect one item before taking up the second; after perfecting the second it would begin on the third, and so on.

That is what we should do in this social security bill. Take old-age pensions, perfect that in one bill; next year take up section 2, unemployment relief, and so on, in orderly manner.

Now I want to call the attention of the Membership of the House to some of the things that have been mentioned regarding the bill. When a Member remarks to another that he is for a certain bill, he should not be criticized. My colleague, who spoke preceding me, said that anything as low as $30 a month was a ridiculous thing to do. If I could see a way in which people could get $200 a month without wrecking everybody, I would want to see them get it. I would not demand they spend it however. That would be a pleasure to me to see that everybody had all the pleasures of life. But I tell you that if anything would wreck this Government it would be the crazy Townsend bill, spending $200 every month for old-age pensions. It is ridiculous and absurd. Giving $200 a month for old-age pensions would cost this country $24,000,000,000. That is an absurdity.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Not until I have finished my statement, and then only if I can get an extension of time. I am sorry.

I want to call the attention of the Membership of the House to the Treasury statement dated April 9. They are sent every Member of Congress each day. I question whether the Membership of the House study them. I think the Membership of the House ought to give recognition to these statements that come into their office.

Our national debt at that date was $28,874,313,564.98.

You all remember that last year when we devalued the gold dollar they charged off $2,000,000,000, so that you really find that we are $31,000,000,000 in the red.

We are $31,000,000,000 in the red now, and we are going in the red every day to the tune of $12,000,000 a day. Where are you going to get this money? I shall ask you Members of Congress that question every day. Where will you get the money? It is your responsibility. You are responsible for getting the money, and if you do not, you will wreck your country. You cannot go on in this way. It is an impossible thing to do. It is just as impossible for this country to go on going into the red to the tune of $12,000,000 a day as it is for any one of you to go into the red $100 a day more than the salary and income that you have. Eventually you will be called upon for an accounting, and when that time comes you will see the sheriff coming after you. What we will do, if we continue this course, will be to put a millstone around the necks of the children that will be coming on in this country, or entirely wreck the country. You ought to recognize that fact. All we do today, in committee and in the House of Representatives, is to talk about how much we can spend and what we can get from the Government to satisfy people back home whom we have told that the country is made of money, it should support their every desire, that it is an endless barrel, and that all we need do is to reach down in the Federal Treasury and hand it out at the rate of $200 a month—a most ridiculous statement and a most silly thing for us to fool the people of the country. The Federal Government has no more money than the States. It is a serious state of mind into which we have gotten the people of the country, and we ought to sit down as conscientious men and not try to do that which would make the people back home believe that we are going to give them the whole world, and a wonderful time, and all the money they want to spend. You know it cannot be done, and so do I, and I am not going to be demagogue enough to stand up here and tell the people in my district that it can be done. We propose a lot of things that we know cannot be carried out, and we vote for a lot of things because we are voting for votes. The people in my district are as honest and conscientious people as in America anywhere. You can fool them a little of the time with such talk, but you cannot fool them all of the time, and you cannot fool the people back in your districts, and you do not need to think for a minute that you are going to fool all the people of this country very long, because if you wreck it, it is your responsibility and it is mine, and I do not want to be in the Membership of this House when I know that we are going to carry our country to ruination. I will support the Constitution, as my oath calls for.

I shall call attention now of the majority party to some of the things contained in their platform, and I shall pick out three planks that are becoming soggy and putrid and rotten, planks which you ought to renew. I read from the Democratic platform of 1932, which the President said, "I am for 100 percent":

> We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party intrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words and terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe. We hereby declare this to be the platform of the Democratic Party.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. RICH. I continue to read from the Democratic Party platform:

> The Democratic Party solemnly promises by appropriate action to put into effect the principles, policies, and reforms herein advocated; and to eradicate the policies, methods, and practices herein condemned. We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.

I now call attention to the second rotten plank in the platform, and they are rotten because you have not fulfilled your promise, and you are not doing what your party called upon you to do, and you ought to substitute a new one in its place embodying the same statements as are in this rotten plank:

We favor maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced on the basis of accurate executive estimates within revenues, raised by a system of taxation levied on the principle of ability to pay.

When the President of the United States appointed Mr. Douglas, a man in whom we had the greatest confidence, as a man to perform that job, we knew that he made a good appointment. Mr. Douglas tried zealously and honestly and fearlessly, but he had to resign because the Democratic Party was not carrying out that platform. I tell you that is a serious situation. That plank is one of the rottenest ones, and you ought to substitute a new one and inscribe those same words on it. I read further:

We advocate a competitive tariff for revenue, with a fact-finding tariff commission free from Executive interference, reciprocal trade agreements with other nations, and an international economic conference designed to restore international trade and facilitate exchange.

That plank says, "without Executive interference." It also says that we want a competitive tariff, a tariff that is going to protect the American people and keep the men in industry in this country employed; and when you get a report, as you will get pretty soon, of the things that are being imported into this country, it will make you shudder. You Democrats are not doing your duty in protecting American industry so that they can give employment to the people of this country. That is another plank that I want you to renew. Another one I call your attention to is this:

The removal of Government from all fields of private enterprise except where necessary to develop public works and natural resources in the common interest.

There is another plank that I want to condemn in the most emphatic words possible, because never in the history of this country have we been setting up the Government in business as we are today and as we have done for the past 2 years. If you do not renew that plank and try to get the Government out of business, again I say you will wreck this country. Either that or you will make this a Soviet Union of States. You will set up the greatest dictator the world has ever known.

I beseech of you, let the American people have the opportunity, let the American people employ labor in this country so that we will have a happy, contented family, and we can continue to do those things in a systematic way and let the people of this country assist in maintaining this Government by the taxes they pay, instead of trying to get the Government into all lines of endeavor and putting people out of business. When this Democratic administration has incorporated in the name of Uncle Sam several corporations that will ruin many people in industry, watch them grow. It is a serious situation.

There are other planks in this platform that can be condemned because they are becoming very, very soggy and because they have not been given attention by the Democrats who are representing the majority party. I want to call attention to them at some future date, because I want to make you conscious that this radical, exorbitant, uncalled-for expenditure of Government funds, which is running this country into the slough of despond, will wreck it, and it will be your responsibility, and the Democratic Party must account for it at some future date. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, since that historic day last year during the Seventy-third Congress, when our great Democratic Chieftain—the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt—sent a message to the Congress advising the Congress that it was his purpose to recommend to the Seventy-fourth Congress a social-security program, which, of course, included old-age pensions. unemployment insurance, services for crippled children, child-welfare service, public-health work, and other provisions for aid to dependent children, I have looked forward with eagerness to the day when this proposed legislation would become law. It offered promise for a most comprehensive and humane program. I am sure that the sentiment and compassion that dwells within my heart for the crippled and underprivileged children and for the unfortunate and needy aged is not peculiar to me but rather is a common virtue shared by the average man who has a sense of his obligation as his brother's keeper. What is there in our human associations that appeals to the compassions and finer instincts of mankind more than the sympathetic understanding of the plight of a crippled or underprivileged child? What can more deeply stir the finer thoughts and sympathies of him who enjoys a fair share of prosperity and the material things of this life than the picture presented by an aged person who has worn himself out in wholesome service to his family, his country, and his God? Penniless because in many instances he has lacked the selfishness, seemingly so requisite to accumulation, in his younger and more productive days, to acquire the material wealth of the world against old age; aged and feeble because in the natural course of life one becomes such—he is dependent either upon the generosity of his more fortunate kinsmen or is the recipient of alms at the hands of the public. This is the condition that largely exists in this country after 2,000 years of civilization. Mr. Chairman, if our civilization means anything, certainly it means that this condition should not continue. It is a reproach to our boasted civilization and Christianity. We must do one of two things: We must either cease to longer boast of this Christianity and civilization or we must recognize under it our obligation and discharge that obligation to these, our less fortunate brothers.

So, Mr. Chairman, I have looked forward with keen desire and increasing fervor to the enactment of a social security law that would in reality alleviate this suffering and discharge this obligation of Christianity and civilization. But when I studied the bill under consideration, which was introduced by our able and distinguished chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], and so laboriously and carefully considered by the powerful Ways and Means Committee, I was alarmed and amazed to discover that there was a possibility—nay, more than that, a strong likelihood—that another imaginary line would be drawn like a veritable Mason and Dixon's line that would divide this great country of ours into two sections. One section into which these unfortunate dependent persons in need of the provisions of this bill would be benefited, while in the other section these benefits would be lacking. I am sure that such was not the intention of that great humanitarian leader, President Roosevelt, or of this able committee which has presented us this legislation for consideration. Yet, my colleagues, I call your attention to the fact that there is a grave likelihood that just such a thing would happen. Under the provisions of this bill it is made mandatory that before the aged and others who are beneficiaries of this legislation may come under its provisions the several States of the Union must have legislation which must be approved by the Federal authorities, and that this State legislation must make provisions for matching the moneys appropriated by the Federal Government. In other words, under the bill under consideration it is essential that before a dependent and penniless Mississippi person can be the recipient of a dollar of this Federal appropriation the State of Mississippi must enact its own social-security legislation and match dollar for dollar every dollar that is granted by the Federal Government to such person. In theory and at first blush this might appear fair and equitable enough. But in practice I fear that it will not work. May I call the attention of my colleagues from other States like situated with Mississippi that there is a grave danger that their aged and needy citizens will likewise not profit by the enactment of this legislation. This is an unfortunate situation, yet it is true. It must be apparent to him who thinks, to him who has knowledge of the financial and economic status of our country, that all States of the Union are not equally prosperous and therefore not equally able to contribute to those who are so badly in need of the provisions of this legislation.

In some States the soil is more productive than in others. In some States the natural resources, minerals, oils, timber, and fertility of the soil—and consequently the ability to produce wealth—is more abundant than in others. And I am sure that it is not necessary for me, proud as I am of the accomplishments and heritage of my Southland, to call your attention to the fact that your New England States were settled long before an ax had blazed a tree or a plow had turned the soil in the South. Moreover, it is not necessary for me to call your attention to the fact that this particular section had just begun to come into its own when it was swept by the devastations of the Civil War, when that section, outnumbered in men and in wealth, enriched the history of this country by a demonstration of fortitude and display of courage and arms the like of which has never before nor since been witnessed in the world. And yet, Mr. Chairman, because this particular section, as well as other sections of our country, have not been able to overcome all of these adversities and inequalities, the dependent and aged people whom this legislation should help, and who under the nature of things reside in these less wealthy sections, are told that unless their States, in many instances already overburdened with taxation, will make provision for matching each dollar that the Federal Government puts up, they cannot enjoy the fruits of this legislation. This legislation is humanitarian in its aspects and in the goal sought to be reached. This inequality and this discrimination should not exist. For frankly I seriously doubt that the State of Mississippi can appropriate sufficient funds to come under the provisions of this legislation if enacted as now written.

Foreseeing this, some weeks ago I called this matter to the attention of the Ways and Means Committee, and my statement to that effect now appears of record at pages 1084–1085 of the printed hearings before the Ways and Means Committee on this bill. Mr. Chairman, at this point I ask unanimous consent to incorporate that statement in my address. The statement follows:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am intensely interested in the Economic Security Act now under consideration by your committee. I am naturally interested in anything that tends to the betterment and the economic stability and comfort of the aged. President Roosevelt assured the Seventy-third Congress that he would recommend social legislation of this type. The people of the country as a whole, both young and old, are intensely interested in the problem. I have read with meticulous care and increasing interest the bill of the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. DOUGHTON, the chairman of this committee, which proposes to put into actual operation legislation seeking economic security and comfort for the aged, the unemployed, and the unfortunate cripple. The theory of this piece of legislation is beautiful, but I am very much concerned about its practical operation. We are all agreed that some legislation looking to this end is desirable. This committee has had many plans submitted to it, some most fantastic and impractical, some more practical and logical. But I desire to discuss briefly one feature of the legislation introduced by your distinguished chairman, as I feel that that particular bill in some form will be the one most likely reported by your committee.

The point that I want particularly to call to your attention is the provision which requires that the States must contribute an equal amount to that provided by the Federal Government up to $15 per month. As I understand the bill, the Federal Government will contribute to the aged people over 65, who can qualify thereunder, an amount up to $15 per month, provided the State or other subdivision of the Government of which that particular aged person happens to be a resident will contribute an equal amount.

This means that before the unfortunate aged person who is in need of this pension can receive the benefits thereof, or even the amount contributed by the Federal Government, the State or other subdivision of the Government must contribute a like amount.

I want to say in all frankness and candor to this committee, who I believe are really desirous of reporting out and enacting into legislation a bill that will be practical and workable, that this will not work. It may work in some States, but there are many others in which it will not work. This for the reason that the States are unable financially to meet the requirements. I can best illustrate this by taking my own State of Mississippi for example.

According to the census of 1930, Mississippi had 77,443 persons who are over 65 years of age. By the time this law is enacted there will be a very little variation in the figures. If anything there will be an increase. It is estimated that, of this number, approximately 13,000 are on relief. I have no definite way of arriving at what percentage of the 77,443 would apply for a pension, but it is reasonable to assume that a considerably larger portion would apply for the pension than applied for relief. I think it would be fair to assume that somewhere in the neighborhood of 75 percent would apply for that pension. If the State matched the $15 provided for in this legislation, which is the maximum the Federal Government would provide under the bill, for 75 percent of the aged over 65, Mississippi's contribution would amount, in round figures, to $10,500,000 per annum.

Mississippi is not a comparatively wealthy State. Its total revenue receipts for the general fund in 1934 were only $14,000,000. The people in our State are already taxed by the State to the point where taxation has become onerous and burdensome in its efforts to carry on its school systems, road building, and other necessary expenses. It is quite obvious, therefore, that the State of Mississippi could not function under the set-up of this legislation and its dependent aged would be cut off from any benefits whatever. I am satisfied that the picture presented above, so far as Mississippi is concerned, is true in many other States of small, comparative wealth.

Now, what I desire is some practical form of legislation. Thirty dollars a month is small enough, but if the people of many of our States are to be denied the privilege of sharing in the contribution of the Federal Government because of the financial inability of the subdivisions of the Government to contribute as substantially as the Federal Government, we are faced with a serious dilemma.

It might also be pointed out that although the old people of a State that cannot match the Federal funds will not share in the benefits of the bill, the people of that State will be forced to contribute, in the form of taxes, to the payments to the aged of the other and more fortunate States. This will be taxation without benefit.

I think that old-age pensions and the care of crippled children should be recognized as a national problem. Therefore, if this committee concludes that it is impractical to make as much as a $30-a-month contribution to the needy aged by the Federal Government, the provision requiring the equal contribution by the State or other subdivision of the Government should be eliminated from the bill. And these needy persons in this aged class, who have contributed so substantially to the upbuilding of this Government, should at least be permitted to enjoy whatever amount in the form of a pension is granted by the Federal Government.

Frankly, if this legislation is not amended so as to cure this evil of which I complain and which must be apparent to all, it is my purpose as a citizen of the State of Mississippi to exert my efforts toward having the State legislature pass such legislation that will conform with this legislation, so that these unfortunate and needy persons in my State may share, to some degree at least, in this most humane undertaking. But, as stated before, I fear that because of the fact that my State is not a comparatively wealthy State it will be unable to do so. And, as stated above, I think that because of its humanitarian aspects this problem should be recognized as a national problem, and the States should not be required to match it. It is a fine thing for the several States of the Union, some of which already have old-age-pension laws, to make this additional provision for their needy citizens. But I am pleading with my colleagues, both from the more wealthy States and with those from the less fortunate States, that you do not discriminate against the needy and the dependent and the crippled citizens of a less wealthy State simply because that person happens to reside in that State.

Mr. Chairman, at the proper time it is my purpose to offer an amendment to this bill, which in substance will provide that State contribution is not necessary for the aged and others sought to be benefited under this legislation to enjoy its provisions. In other words, under this proposed amendment to this legislation the Congress of the United States would say to the several States of the Union:

"We welcome and encourage State laws to supplement the appropriation for the beneficiaries of this legislation, but we guarantee to every aged person who otherwise qualifies under the provisions of this legislation a pension of at least $15 a month, and to other beneficiaries under the provisions of the bill, Federal care."

Even though successful in securing this amendment to this legislation, I would not feel that the legislation met with all of the hopes and ambitions of those of us who are so intensely interested in this problem. Personally, like many of you, I should like to see the age limit lowered to 60 years, and with a Federal pension of at least $30 per month. But I realize the critical and serious question of taxation involved. I realize that this is the beginning, and with such an amendment I could rejoice in the thought that the Seventy-fourth Congress would go down in the records as the most humane Congress that ever assembled in the National Capitol.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include certain excerpts from the hearings and also a letter addressed to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, it is my intention this afternoon to speak particularly in regard to the subject matter of titles I and II, old-age pensions, old-age annuities, and proposed substitutes thereto.

I do not think it necessary for me to dwell upon the fact that there is almost unanimous agreement in this House as to the necessity of passing some measure of care for the aged who are needy and infirm. We have long passed beyond the stage of the savage tribes of Africa who, it is said, cast their aged over the cliffs in order to relieve themselves of the necessity of caring for them thereafter. We have passed beyond the stage of the Middle Ages, where the aged and the poor were beggars upon the streets or inmates of the poorhouses that were established in the time of Queen Elizabeth. We have come through the period of private care for the aged, and have come to the time when there has been awakened within us a sense of civic responsibility. The States to a limited degree have already assumed that responsibility. We are about to embark on a policy of Nation-wide aid for the aged. In pursuance of that sense of civic responsibility your Ways and Means Committee has presented to you this bill which is under consideration today. The committee does not claim that the bill is perfect, but it does claim that it is the greatest and most practical stride forward among humanitarian lines that this Congress and the Nation have ever been called upon to consider. The detailed proposals in this bill have been so clearly and forcibly presented to you by the chairman of our committee that I do not feel there is any necessity of my reviewing them in detail.

Asking the most open and liberal rule that any House has ever had presented to it, we brought the bill here for extensive debate and an unlimited vote on amendments, only to be assailed on the floor of the House with presenting a gag rule. Not only that, our constituents at home were told that such was the case. Permit me, therefore, to state first of all what the parliamentary situation is. It was necessary to bring this bill in under a special rule, because it was not of a privileged character, not to "gag" or stifle anyone, but to liberalize its consideration. Otherwise this bill could only be called up on some Calendar Wednesday when the Ways and Means Committee was reached in the call and there would have then been but 1 hour of general debate; or it might have been called up with the consent of the Speaker under suspension of the rules on some Monday, and then there would have been allowed only 40 minutes' debate and no amendments would have been possible.

If, under the rule which we adopted, the amendments to be offered are held not germane on any point of order, they would not have been germane under the regular rules of the House under any circumstances; and it certainly is not the fault of the Ways and Means Committee if those who desire to amend this bill or substitute another have not drawn their amendments or their substitute in language which will make them germane.

But I will say as a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and I think representing the thought of the majority members that we will not interpose such points of order.

The proponents of some unusual piece of legislation can put up a man of straw—the gag rule—to persuade their followers that they are being deprived of some right; but the fact remains that we are being more than liberal in the treatment of this bill and of any substitutes or amendments thereto.

This is simply a continuation of the liberality which the Ways and Means Committee showed during its hearings, when we even permitted the Communists to present their case and their viewpoint to us. In the case of one gentleman whose name has been mentioned quite frequently in the course of this debate—Dr. Townsend—we even reopened the hearings 4 days after they had closed so that he and his economic witness, Dr. Doane, might be heard before the committee, and on that reopened date we accumulated 29 pages of printed testimony on his behalf before the committee.

In the course of the debate this morning, the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART], in answer to a question I asked him, intimated that I was one of those who was endeavoring to give the "raspberry" to the Townsend plan, or, as it is known, the "McGroarty bill." Such is far from the case. I have been engaged in a conscientious endeavor to bring some order out of the chaos and confusion that seems to exist in the minds of those who have been claiming to support the Townsend plan in order that the membership of this Committee may know just what they are to vote on.

Mr. Chairman, I have been the recipient of a great many letters from my constituents; not as many as the proponents of the Townsend plan would lead you to believe, but a good many. I want to say that, so far as the writers from the Third California District are concerned, their letters have, for the most part, been courteous. There have been a few which stepped beyond the bounds of propriety, but only a few. The letters, however, all show that the writers have been misled, not merely as to the aims and proposals of the Townsend plan but as to the number of its supporters. They speak of 25,000,000, 30,000,000, and even 40,000,000 signers of petitions for the plan when they should realize, upon thinking at all, that such a figure is impossible. Certainly the number of letters and petitions that I have received from my district does not indicate any such figure is at all believable.

The writers of these letters have advised me to do three things: First, to study the bill—and I want to report to you and to them that I have conscientiously studied, not only the original plan but all other modifications of it that have been suggested, I think, perhaps more fully than those who have spoken in favor of it here. This afternoon I shall endeavor to discuss some of its latest provisions. Secondly, I was requested to see that a free and full debate and a vote was permitted on the McGroarty bill, and that we are going to have. Thirdly, I was requested at one time to accept the original bill without any change, "just as it is", and later to accept and vote for the second McGroarty bill. That, after conscientious investigation, I cannot do, and I do not believe any of the honest citizens of my district who will conscientiously investigate this plan would vote for it if they were in my place. I have been threatened with political reprisals if I do not vote for it; but, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] stated yesterday, I am perfectly willing to accept that challenge, for I know that I can rely upon the good judgment of the citizens at home when the details of the Townsend plan, its implications and consequences, are explained to them.

During the course of the debate I have interrogated gentleman after gentleman who were proponents of the McGroarty bill, asked them to explain its contents, to describe how it would work, and I must confess I obtained not one answer that was half illuminating other than that of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], who stated what, in his opinion at least, the bill was not, and I want to at this time thank him for his statement.

I have listened this afternoon to the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY], who was the sponsor of the revised Townsend bill. I heard him state that it was the most scientific and statesmanlike bill that ever was presented to Congress.

Mr. McGROARTY. That is right.

Mr. BUCK. I thank the gentleman. He stated also that that was because it was written for him, and he had nothing to do with it. With all due respect to the beloved gentleman from California—I listened to him for half an hour—he did not explain the bill and had not one word to say in defense of it the whole time. I have, therefore, been forced into making an analysis of this bill myself so that those of you who are going to be called to vote upon it may know something about it. I understand it is to be offered as an amendment perhaps to title I of the pending bill, and then if it is adopted it will be moved to strike out titles II and VIII as a result. This committee is entitled to know what this bill contains and what effect it will have upon the country as a whole. Mr. Chairman, I shall yield at any time during the next few minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY] if he feels that I have made any erroneous statements as to the facts or principles involved in his bill, but until I have completed this analysis I shall decline to yield generally. Before I conclude, however, I shall endeavor to answer whatever questions may be asked.

The bill H. R. 7154, the revised McGroarty bill, was introduced April 1. It was introduced after the Ways and Means Committee had completed not only its hearings, but had finished its executive sessions and had completed the final draft of H. R. 7260, which you are now considering. The committee was only waiting for the final print to be received in order to formally report the bill. No hearings have been asked on H. R. 7154 before the Ways and Means Committee, and if there continue to be as many changes suggested in it, as many amendments suggested in its language, as there have been during the course of the debate, I predict that no hearings ever will be asked on this bill. They may be asked on the third or fourth McGroarty bill but not on this.

The defects of the first bill appear in the hearings, but nothing about this bill (H. R. 7154) appears there. It has been necessary, therefore, for some one of us to come before you and tell you what this bill presents. It is the third proposal of the plan of the gentleman from California, Dr. Townsend. His first proposal, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG] told you a few days ago, was for a 10-percent retail tax on all retail sales, to pay a pension of $200 per month, to be spent within that month, to practically everyone over 60 years of age. It became obvious, taking the largest sales year the United States ever had, that under this plan there could be raised only about $5,000,000,000. As there are over 10,000,000 aged who would be eligible under the first plan, it would be impossible to finance the project with that set-up. It was revised, therefore, and a second proposal substituted for a 2-percent transaction tax.

At this point in my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I insert the two tables which I have obtained permission to insert, tables IV and V, appearing at page 1103 of the hearings, Dr. Doane's figures.

TABLE IV.—Estimated accumulative effect of turn-over tax at 2-percent rate on physical-goods transactions (monthly basis)

[Millions of current dollars]

Classes	Value	Tax	Estimated increase in costs due to 2 percent tax
1. Raw materials:
Farm products	484.0
Forest products	20.0
Fisheries	11.0
Mines, quarries	235.0
Total	750.0	15.0
2. Manufacturing:
Cost of materials	1,820.0
Plus added tax	15.0
Total cost	1,835.0
First turn-over (tax)	36.7
Second turn-over (tax)	37.4
Third turn-over (tax)	38.1
Total tax	112.2	112.2
Original cost	1,835.0
Total cost	1,947.2		6.9
Value added	1,680.0
Selling value	3,627.2
Plus 2 percent tax	72.5	72.5

4. Retail:
Sales (present value)	2,173.7
Plus 2-percent tax	43.5	43.5
Value goods sold	2,217.2		10.6
Original aggregate	8,750.0
Total expected taxes		296.5
Consumer collections in addition		40.3
Grand total collections		336.8
At annual rate of		4,041.8

TABLE IV.—Estimated accumulative effect of turn-over tax at 2-percent rate on physical-goods transactions (monthly basis)—Con.

Computed on 1931 basis. All figures from official census and Government bureau reports.

TABLE V.—Maximum theoretical possibilities under 2-percent turnover tax

	Selected items as given in table I	All producer and consumer expenditures	All expenditures including Government and institutions	All gross transactions and transfers
Estimated annual 1935 collections	$4,000,000,000	$6,000,000,000	$6,300,000,000	$9,600,000,000
Estimated annual collections on a 1929 basis	$7,500,000,000	$12,000,000,000	$12,600,000,000	$18,700,000,000
Estimated expected increase in prices, percent	12	18	20	24
Annual volume of transactions:
1935		$224,000,000,000	$242,000,000,000	$481,000,000,000
1929		$358,000,000,000	$376,000,000,000	$935,000,000,000

The first of these tables, table IV, shows that under a 2-percent transaction tax on a selected list of transactions and estimated at six turn-overs from the time the raw material is produced until the finished product is sold to the consumer, $4,041,080,000 per year might be obtained. The qualified individuals who were to receive these pensions remain practically the same number under this plan. This amount, on the basis of 10,000,000 aged, would have produced, allowing nothing for administrative expenses, approximately $33.75 per month, or only about $3.75 per month more than that the pensioner would receive under title I of our bill, assuming each State matches the Government contribution of $15 per month in full. For that small amount we would upset the business of the country by imposing a multiple sales tax.

Thus it was seen that the second plan could not begin to raise money enough for $200 per month, and it had to be revised.

The third plan, H. R. 7154, was introduced, the scientific and statesmanlike bill referred to by the gentleman from California. The transaction tax in this bill was based on the figure which estimated that if a 2-percent tax were applied to all gross transactions, including governmental operations, the sum of $9,600,000,000 per year could be obtained.

A little extra money was thrown in by some minor taxes, which I shall speak about later. Among the transactions which it is now proposed to be taxed are some I shall also show you cannot legally or constitutionally be taxed, so that by no means can even the estimated amount be reached.

H. R. 7154 covers up the fact that there is not yet enough money to pay $200 a month pension to the individuals concerned by promising to pay what may be collected after all administration expenses are deducted, but not to exceed $200 a month. What this will amount to, assuming the tax is constitutional, cannot be shown by any table or any figures that have been submitted to the Ways and Means Committee or to your committee. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] stated it would bring in about $50 a month. I do not believe his calculation can be correct or that he has deducted anything for administrative expenses.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. BUCK. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I did not have time to go into detail there. It was my idea that, according to the best figures we could get from an examination of the committee hearings, the 2-percent transaction tax would bring in $4,000,000,000 a year, and if there were 8,000,000 eligibles it would pay them $50 a month.

Mr. BUCK. If the gentleman will pardon me, on that basis it would bring in $500 a year to each pensioner, or $41.66 per month.

Mr. MOTT. It is my idea and the idea of others that the revenue provided by the smaller taxes would be sufficient for purposes of administration. Of course, if it were not, they would have to go into the transaction tax.

Mr. BUCK. The best estimate of administrative costs that can be obtained—and this was obtained, Mr. Chairman, in connection with our own studies of our own bill—is that it would cost for administrative collection of taxes under title VIII and payment of pensions under title II, 8½ percent on a 2-percent rate; on a 3-percent rate it would cost 6⅔ percent; on a 4 percent, or higher rate, it would cost 5 percent; but those figures do not include any of the cost of policing the recipients to see that they spend the money or checking on the manufacturers to see that they have paid their taxes on anything of that kind. It includes the administrative cost of collection only.

Mr. MOTT. If, as the gentleman says, it is not possible under the proposed bill to pay a pension of more than $50 a month, I venture to say he does not believe there would be a great deal of policing necessary to see that the pensioners spend the $50 a month?

Mr. BUCK. I think we would still have to try to make some of this money revolve, although I do not believe it would revolve.

Whatever amount it may be, and I know the gentleman from Oregon agrees with me in this, the rank and file of supporters of the Townsend plan are still under the impression they are going to get $200 a month. Merely printing the bill in the Townsend Weekly, which the gentlewoman from Arizona assured us has been done, and I have no doubt it has been done, does not educate the reader, and I am frank to say it does not educate a Congressman unless he studies all the implications and provisions of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the remarks I am making will not be taken as other than constructive. Dr. Townsend said that the first McGroarty bill was revised as a result of suggestions received from an enemy, but I am not an enemy of any particular plan, merely trying to get the best possible practicable, workable relief plan for the aged. I shall be glad to counsel with the proponents of the Townsend plan as I would be with those of the Pope plan or any other plan, and if there is a better plan proposed to be adopted in later years than the one we have considered, let us have it by all means. The gentlemen who drew this bill, and I do not know who they are except by rumor and the statement of the gentleman from California that he is not the author, should realize that the suggestions I am making this afternoon may be very helpful to them by the time they get down to the fifth or sixth Townsend plan.

Mr. McGROARTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McGROARTY. Is the gentleman trying to be facetious?

Mr. BUCK. Certainly not.

Mr. McGROARTY. Is the gentleman trying to be funny when he uses the expression "fifth or sixth Townsend bill"? Does he consider that argument?

Mr. BUCK. If the gentleman will pardon me, I said "Townsend plan." Of these we have had three proposals so far, including the gentleman's two bills and an incipient one, or at least a modification of H. R. 7154 from the gentleman from Oregon. Well, I will call the next bill the fourth proposal and let it go at that.

Mr. Chairman, I now propose to enter into a detailed analysis of H. R. 7154. The first section attempts to define the term "transaction", and I say "attempts to define" deliberately, because it says "transactions shall be defined", but it never defines them in the whole bill. That, of course, is a small matter and a question of legal verbiage that no doubt the learned gentleman who wrote the bill can change.

It further says the term "gross dollar value" shall be defined to include the sum representing the total "fair" value of the entire property or service transferred or proposed to be transferred without deducting any amount of encumbrance or offset of any kind. It also attempts to define certain other terms used in the bill. The only actual definition put in is the following, and I must confess it is so scientific that I am unable to understand it:

> Barter and/or exchange is defined as a plurality of transactions to the extent of the fair value of the property and/or service transferred or rendered other than money.

I shall return to the definition of "transaction" somewhat later.

Section 2, the heart of the bill, proposes a tax upon the fair gross dollar value of each transaction done within the United States, and provides in addition thereto a 2-percent tax on the fair dollar value of all transfers of property by devise, bequest, or other testamentary disposition now or hereafter taxable under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1934; and, in addition thereto, a 2-percent tax on the fair gross dollar value of every gift in excess of the fair value of $500. The continued use of the word "fair" certainly is going to make for litigation should this bill ever be enacted. I am wondering why the distinction between the testamentary transfers and the gifts by the omission of the word "gross" in connection with the former.

Section 3 creates an annuity fund.

Section 4 attempts to describe the qualifications and limitations of possible annuitants, and

Section 10 attempts an additional qualification, that the annuitants must be domiciled within the United States.

Section 5 authorizes the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to create boards of review. It is interesting to note that section 5 (b) provides that the decisions by such board shall be reviewed by "the State court having general jurisdiction over the area in which that board is situated"—certainly a very unusual procedure giving State courts jurisdiction over Federal business.

Section 6 provides for the apportionment of the taxes collected after administrative expenses are deducted.

Section 8 appropriates money to pay them.

Certainly this makes the bill clearly subject to a point of order if anyone wants to urge it, and I shall not, for our committee has no right to report an appropriation bill, and the House has no right to write an appropriation into this bill. These are the important sections of the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to return for a moment to the definition of "transactions." I think this is the most remarkably broad definition that has ever been presented to Congress, and I have no doubt it was the intention of the sponsors of the bill to so present it. Let us see what "transactions" include. It broadens the original bill's base and includes as taxable every personal service that may be rendered. It makes wage earners subject to a 2-percent tax on everything that they may earn from now until they die.

The bill puts an additional 2-percent tax on transportation down as far as your street-car fare, and on telegraph and telephone. The bill puts a 2-percent tax on amusements and on radio. We are putting a 2-percent tax on advertising and even on education, so far as it concerns private schools and academies.

Let us consider the matter of amusement—take the radio. The tax must be paid by the person who furnished the service or by the legal entity by which the service is furnished on the gross "fair" value of each transaction done. Suppose the radio puts on Amos and Andy—and you or I do not like Amos and Andy—what is the fair gross value to be taxed? Is it what the broadcaster pays the entertainers? Or is it to be based on the fair gross value of the "transaction done", as the bill says? And if the latter, what is that?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. No; not for the moment. The gentleman may like Amos and Andy.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman might add to the broadcasting company's tax. Further, this bill puts a tax upon executory contracts. If, Mr. Chairman, I contract to sell you 1,000 bales of cotton today or 1,000 bushels of grain or a ton of dried fruit or anything else, even if I receive no deposit, I must pay the United States Government under this bill, at the time of signing the contract, 2 percent of whatever the total proposed purchase price may be. Yet you may die before you carry out the contract, or may default. I am taxed on a hope only. If, Mr. Chairman, I contract to sell you a farm for $10,000 and receive $1,000 down as a payment, I still must pay $200 on the full value of $10,000 of that farm or real estate, or 20 percent of what I receive—and yet the next year you may default. Should I be lucky enough to secure another buyer on the same terms, I will have to pay another 20 percent.

If there were a mortgage of $5,000 on that $10,000 farm, under the specific language of the bill I cannot deduct that $5,000 mortgage in calculating any tax, but must pay 2 percent on the total value of $10,000. If, at a sheriff's sale on foreclosure, the property mortgaged for $5,000 brings $6,000, the poor foreclosed farmer must pay the Government not 2 percent on his equity but 2 percent on the entire $6,000.

Mr. Chairman, in the condition of farm-mortgage property in the United States today, this bill ought to have as a subtitle an act to discourage and prohibit the sale of farms. It is the most outrageous taxation curtailment of farm transfers I have yet heard proposed.

We have seen what a 2-percent transaction tax will raise. The gentleman from Oregon said he thought the inheritance tax and the gift tax, if effective, would raise enough to pay the administrative expenses.

On the basis of the returns for the year 1933, the inheritance and gift tax would raise $16,000,000. The additional one-tenth of 1 percent on the income tax, if effective, would bring in $100,000,000. I do not think that this comes anywhere near paying the administrative expenses, but let us look at some of the other items.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. BUCK. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. Would the gentleman mind telling us what, in his opinion, the expense of administration would be under such a proposal?

Mr. BUCK. As I said a moment ago, according to the best estimate I have been able to obtain from the Treasury, 8½ percent would be the cost of collection without any check-up or any investigation as to whether the manufacturers had paid the tax or not or the recipient of the pension had spent it.

Mr. MOTT. We would appreciate it if the gentleman would elaborate a bit on that matter so we would know why he thinks that is so. Why, in other words, would the cost of administration be greater, in proportion, than the cost of the administration of the income-tax law or other revenue-raising measures?

Mr. BUCK. The answer is quite obvious. We are dealing with the population of the country as a whole in this case, whereas with the income-tax law we are dealing with only a certain selected group who pay the income tax, and according to the figures submitted to our committee in connection with our own bill, there are over 2,740,000 individuals and partnerships and corporations employing workers at the present time that would have to be checked. This does not include the employers of personal service. The McGroarty tax does not depend upon income or anything of that kind. It depends upon sales. It is the most gigantic multiple sales-tax proposition ever submitted for the consideration of the Congress. The administration costs would, no doubt, be vastly in excess of 8½ percent.

Mr. MOTT. I wish the gentleman would elaborate on that as much as he has the time to do so, because I would like to reply to the gentleman on that point if I have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. BUCK. I am going along as well as I can.

There are other objections to the tax features. I know the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] is a good constitutional lawyer, and I am going to try to give him some food for thought.

In the first place, this bill taxes the States or the political subdivisions thereof, which is prohibited by the Constitution. In the Indian Motor Cycle case (283 U. S. 570), cited for the benefit of anyone who wants to look it up, the Supreme Court held that the Federal Government was without power to tax the sale of a motorcycle by a manufacturer to a city for its police service. This prohibition applies to all sales to a city or political subdivision for use in essential government functions.

So that much of your sales tax is going out as unconstitutional.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. BUCK. If the gentleman will first let me finish my statement, I shall then yield.

Mr. MOTT. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, because I know his time is limited.

Mr. BUCK. Secondly, it interferes with the borrowing power of a State or a political subdivision by proposing to tax bonds and other obligations of such State or political subdivision. In specific words, it taxes loans and interest, and the Supreme Court, in the case of the National Life Insurance Co. v. the United States (277 U. S. 508), has held that bonds of States and political subdivisions are exempt from Federal taxation on the theory that such a tax would burden the exercise of State authority in connection with its power to borrow money.

So that much of your prospective proceeds goes out.

Now, thirdly, it proposes to tax the salaries of employees of State or political subdivisions engaged in governmental functions, which is prohibited by the Constitution. (Collector v. Day, 11 Wall, 113; Metcalf & Eddy v. Mitchell, 269 U. S. 514.)

(The time of Mr. BUCK having expired, he was yielded 10 minutes more.)

Mr. BUCK. Apparently the bill taxes every gift, even those to charitable or eleemosynary institutions. These are exempt from the present gift tax. It sets up no provision as to how a transfer in trust should be taxed.

For instance, suppose A sets up a trust to B for life with the remainder to C. Does A pay a tax on the whole amount of the trust, or does he pay a tax on B's life interest immediately, and then on C's remainder interest at the time C comes into the possession and enjoyment of the property?

In my brief time I can only begin to cover the defects of this bill.

Oh, gentlemen, I regret extremely that the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] said that this was a scientific and statesmanlike bill, and that no more carefully drawn bill had ever been presented to the House. Why, it is so full of loopholes that you could drive an automobile truck through any part of it. Moreover, it is dangerous.

The bill gives the Secretary of the Treasury broad authority to collect these taxes in any manner he sees fit. No appeal is provided to the Board of Tax Appeals, although such an appeal is granted in the case of the present income, estate, and gift taxes. The general statutes relating to internal revenue do not appear to be applicable, since they refer to a system of assessing, collecting, and refunding taxes by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and not by the Secretary of the Treasury. Claims for refunds, refunds and assessments are now made by the Commissioner. There is nothing in the McGroarty bill that gives the Commissioner of Internal Revenue authority to do anything in connection with these internal-revenue taxes. There are no periods of limitations prescribed for the assessment, collection, and refund of the taxes.

It looks like an entirely new scheme of collecting taxes and might even be considered an unconstitutional delegation of authority. Let me suggest one more thought to you writers and authors of this bill when you revise it the next time. You propose to put a 2-percent tax on the fair dollar value of transfers of property by devise, bequest, and other testamentary disposition, taxable under the Revenue Law of 1934. Nothing of that kind is taxable under that law. All we have is a Federal estate tax, which is imposed on a statutory basis called net estate, and certain deductions are taken from that. All these items are valued as of the date of death. There is nothing in this bill to show when they shall be valued or to what the tax is to apply, and, moreover, the Federal estate tax is not imposed by the Revenue Act of 1934 but by those of 1926 and 1932. So much for the tax provisions of this bill.

Let us be fair in this matter. The new bill is an improvement over the first by forbidding the payment of pensions to anyone in receipt of an income of $2,400 or more per year. On the other hand, the original bill prohibited the receipt of a pension by anyone convicted of a felony or the inmate of an asylum or eleemosynary institution. These provisions have disappeared, so perhaps the decrease in the number of pensioners on the one side will be offset by the increase on the other. The bill has also been improved by removing the danger of wholesale inflation that existed in the original bill. It now authorizes the appropriation of no money that is not collected in taxes. While the old people are still being led to believe they will get $200 per month, it certainly is not provided in the bill.

At least the revision of the bill has had the advantage of bringing out the real import of the Townsend plan. One of its organizers, Mr. A. C. Pearson, of Sacramento, Calif., at a mass meeting in my home town this month said: "If the Townsend plan were a pension plan, it would be ridiculous. It is a recovery plan." Its claim has always been that it is a plan to bring prosperity through imposed heavy taxes and this is honestly set forth in the revised bill. Under it, the taxes are to be collected for 3 months before any one gets a cent in pensions. While there is a doubt as to how much the pension will be and when it will be paid, there is no doubt about what the tax is intended to be.

There are fundamental objections, in my opinion, to the bill that go beyond the question of its tax provisions. It provides for a direct Government grant without State participation, and I consider State participation of vital importance, for without State participation there can be no certainty that the fund will be properly administered on an equitable basis. Moreover, it provides for a flat rate, not taking into consideration the difference in the necessities of the population in various sections of our country and even the difference between urban and rural communities in any one State.

Then there is the thought that has been expressed that this bill would create prosperity by putting into effect a revolving fund. It is beyond me to see how any money is going to revolve further than out of the hands of the original recipients. It will be piled up in the banks or in the hands of those who already control the greater part of the wealth of the United States, and in this connection I read a statement recently made in the State Senate of California by Senator Culbert Olson. I particularly urge my fellow Democrats of California to listen to their floor leader:

> But assuming that the plan could get started without such disastrous results, and the $2,000,000,000 for the pensions for the first month is provided, the revolving idea of returning that money to the pensioner by a sales tax upon themselves and other consumers cannot be realized. That money cannot remain in circulation, because it will be constantly drained into unspent profits and surpluses and added to the accumulations of that small fraction of the population—said to be about 4 percent—that already owns nearly 90 percent of the Nation's wealth. There is no reason why this privileged portion of our population should oppose this bill. When the first $2,000,000,000 is thus absorbed, no part of it can longer "revolve", and like absorption of the next $2,000,000,000 must begin.

The fact of the matter is that the McGroarty bill or bills or whatever may finally come out of them, so far as they may be considered an aid to the aged or a new instrument of economic revolution, places a greater burden on the working man than does the administration bill.

In the tables which I referred to earlier, Dr. Doane, the economic adviser to Dr. Townsend, estimated that the cost of living with the 2-percent tax on selected-item basis would increase from 10.60 percent to 12 percent. On the basis of the same tax on all transactions (table V), it would increase 24 percent. None of us on the committee have ever been able to check the accuracy of Dr. Doane's figures, but for the purpose of this statement I am going to assume they are accurate. That is going to place a tremendous burden on the worker who has already had his pay check docked 2 percent.

To start with, the working man is to be taxed 2 percent forever and not merely up to the age of 60 or 65, and the employer who, under title I of our bill, contributes nothing, but under title II contributes eventually a 3-percent tax toward old-age pensions, contributes nothing under the McGroarty bill. If it were not for the other features it contains, this portion of the bill would absolutely meet every objection that has been raised by the gentlemen on the Republican side who have been so solicitous about the taxation of the employers and their pay rolls.

It might be well to point out here that there is a difference between these transactions or sales taxes and excise taxes measured by pay rolls as proposed in our bill. The latter affects only one production cost, labor. The average labor cost in manufactures is 21 percent (1930 census). The excise tax that we propose, which will eventually be 3 percent on pay rolls from the employer, does not therefore increase costs by 1 percent, but only by twenty-one one hundredths of 1 percent for each 1 percent of the contribution, or a total increase in cost to the employer of sixty-three one-hundredths of 1 percent. A direct sales tax on the price of all transactions costs the employer 2 percent on each item going into the finished product and costs the consumer the cumulative amount of all these taxes.

So the McGroarty bill subsidizes the manufacturers and the chain-store operators, as was so clearly pointed out by my Progressive friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU]. They will pay only one turn-over tax, and in spite of the fact that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] read into the RECORD a proposed amendment to overcome this, I point out to him that that proposed amendment is unworkable. It would force the manufacturers of the completed article to find out in every case whether the transaction tax on each raw material going into the finished product has been paid. If the seller had failed or refused to pay the tax on such raw material, the manufacturer would have to bear the total burden through no fault of his, and the original seller would escape scotfree.

The amendment is unworkable in every way, and even his amendment does not cover the chain store or the other aggregations of wealth which can operate with just one turnover.

Mr. Chairman, the little man, the man who has to buy through the wholesaler and the jobber and the manufacturer, who does not control his own raw materials, is beginning to see the light, and at this point I put into the RECORD, with the permission of one of the gentlemen to whom a copy was sent, a letter sent to Dr. Townsend on April 4, 1935, which reads as follows:

APRIL 4, 1935.

Dr. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. TOWNSEND: We are small business men and we have signed the Townsend plan petitions and would like to see this plan adopted on a workable basis nationally, but we, as small business men, want to be assured that big business is not going to capitalize on the transaction tax.

For instance, as we see it, the small merchant is put at a complete disadvantage, because big business, with their chain holdings, have complete control of many products; in fact, industries from production of raw material throughout the complete course of transaction to the consumer, thereby making it possible for them to carry these products from the raw material through the factories, jobbers, transportation, distributing warehouses to their retail units, and on to the consumer with only one cash transaction, whereas, we smaller merchants must deal through independent institutions. The manufacturer has a cash transaction with the producer; there is a cash transaction between the manufacturer and the broker; the broker and the jobber; the jobber and the distributing agencies. There is also another cash transaction between the distributing agency and the retailer and between the retailer and the consumer.

How in the name of God and little green apples can we, as small merchants, survive and pay 5-to-1 tax; this would break every independent institution before legislation could be brought about constitutionally to remedy such a mistake?

We stand for correction, and any information which you have to offer will be greatly appreciated and carried on.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) WILLIAM SORENSEN,
(Signed) LE ROY ATKIN,
614 Lighthouse Avenue, New Monterey, Calif.

Copies sent to President Roosevelt, Senator William G. McAdoo, Senator Hiram Johnson, Congressman John J. McGrath.

If we do not know what will happen to the small manufacturer or the retailer in competition with the chain operator; we can at least see some of the other disadvantages that will occur. Foreign trade is carried on upon a very small margin. Imagine increasing the costs of the finished products, not necessarily by 24 percent, but even by the 12 percent. Passage of this bill would destroy the foreign trade of our country in almost every instance, and certainly in every instance in which we compete with any foreign nation.

The workers between the ages of 21 and 60, whose food and whose clothing and whose very wages will be taxed under this new bill without receiving one penny of the benefit will, if it goes into effect, indeed accomplish a revolution, but it will not be the economic revolution that Dr. Townsend plans, but a revolution against this bill itself. Can you imagine the delight with which the workman who has just had 2 percent of his weekly wages deducted on Saturday night will proceed up town to find that there is a 24-percent increase in the cost of his bread, of his meat, of his tobacco, for remember he is the ultimate consumer who pays at both ends to the fullest.

And so, Mr. Chairman, outside of the tax difficulties, outside of the administrative difficulties, outside of the fact that the payment of these annuities would be made without regard to the economic differences between one State and another or even within one State there remain the two fundamental objections that in the guise of helping the aged you are penalizing the workers, the wage earner, by taxing him unconscionably and you are subsidizing the employer and the manufacturer, and particularly the chain operator, by relieving him from any direct contribution to the aged.

I have been pledged for many years to the enactment of the best and most liberal old-age-pension plan that can be secured. If a better one than our committee has presented can be worked out on some sane and logical lines, I will be for it. If any plan has a fundamental basis of value, rest assured it will be developed, and when it is presented to the Ways and Means Committee and to the House with those sane and logical arguments and proofs, it will be considered there in fairness, as every bill has been considered. If a later plan has more merit, I will be for it, but I will not violate my oath of office to support any plan which is fundamentally unsound and certainly not one which in spite of the declaration of the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] to the contrary I consider to have been presented in possibly the most unscientific and most unstatesmanlike manner that any bill has been presented. I was glad to note that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], in response to my inquiry, took the lead in saying that the old people must not be deceived longer, and I trust that the official organ of Dr. Townsend will now admit that there is no chance of securing $200 a month pension without wrecking the industry of the Nation.

If not, I shall endeavor to explain even more fully the true state of affairs to my constituents when I return home. The terrific propaganda that has been spread by the proponents of this plan must be faced and must be met courageously by bringing home to the Nation the fact that this House is doing the very best it can for them. We must creep before we walk, and when we take our first step forward it is only a prelude toward our further progress. There may be ways in which longer and larger strides can be taken when the opportunity occurs, but here and at this time the strides forward that we are able to take in titles I and II of this bill are greater and of more benefit to the aged than any which have been proposed by any other plan.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] as he may desire.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, for almost a week we have listened to the debate on this important social-security bill. This afternoon we listened to the matchless address delivered by my personal friend Dr. SIROVICH, of New York. In my opinion, it is one of the greatest speeches delivered on the floor of this House in many a day.

The gentleman who just preceded me, Mr. BUCK, of California, has also made a very valuable contribution to this discussion. And, at the beginning of this debate, we heard the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, as well as other able members of his committee, explain the provisions of this bill, which is in fact three or four bills in one, as it proposes to legislate on several different yet somewhat related subjects.

I find this bill a sort of meager dole to the aged, wrongly called "old-age assistance" or "old-age security."

Let me say at the outset that a bill that provides maximum Federal participation of only $15 a month and requires the State to match in whole or in part, as this bill does, in order for the citizen to receive a mere pittance should not be classed as old-age security. [Applause.]

Other provisions of the pending bill relate to unemployment insurance, Federal assistance to the States for crippled children, vocational rehabilitation, child and maternal welfare, and public-health services. Still another provision provides for old-age benefits, or old-age insurance. This is separate and apart from the old-age-security provision and would not be placed in operation until 1942. Funds would be provided by contributions of those who participate. All of these are gestures in the right direction; but if I know anything about the sentiment of this House, few Members are really satisfied with many of the provisions of the pending bill.

It will not be my purpose to discuss this bill section by section, nor to go into the many provisions of the bill, but to confine my remarks largely to title I, which has to do with old-age security.

Just a year ago this week, in discussing the Dill-Connery old-age-pension bill that had then been reported to this House for consideration, but which never came to a vote, I expressed my views briefly on the subject of old-age security. As pointed out then, I have been deeply interested in this subject for many years. I also mentioned the fact then that the first speech I ever made on the floor of this House was on the subject of pensions. In discussing the Dill-Connery bill, I said in part:

> I submit that we are facing a problem that society alone, through the government set up to protect the weak from the strong, and to enable us to enjoy the fruits of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness", can adequately meet.
> I am no new convert to this theory. I have been advocating protection for our aged for many years, even during the era of "rugged individualism", when this problem had not attracted the attention of the public and when it was opposed by many well-meaning persons.

I also pointed out in that speech that an increase of 11 percent in the income-tax rates would alone provide the necessary funds for the modest pensions proposed in that bill. I suggested at that time that this House should materially increase the estate tax, gift tax, corporation tax, and surtax or excess-profits tax. It is absurd to say that this great, rich Government cannot adequately take care of its aged men and women, who, through no fault of their own, find themselves without means of support.

As stated a moment ago, the pending bill is a gesture in the right direction, but it is at best only a gesture. If given an opportunity, I propose to offer several amendments to this bill. Frankly, I am getting tired of having our committees hand us these bills with a solemn warning that the measures must be passed without the changing of the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t."

You may recall that when the committee recently brought in the McSwain bill, proposing to curb war profiteering, which in its original form overlooked conscripting the financial resources of the country or conscripting anything except the young manhood of America in time of war, we were solemnly told that we should accept that bill exactly as written, and woe be unto the Member who had the audacity to try to amend it. But I took the same position on that bill as I do on this. It will be recalled that this House took charge of that measure and put teeth in it. This body made a real, constructive, drastic, and far-reaching measure out of that bill before it was sent to the Senate. In my judgment, we ought to operate on the pending measure in a more drastic manner than this body did on the McSwain bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a bill (H. R. 2802) that was prepared in collaboration with the Old Age Security Association of Grady County, Okla. I have no pride of authorship, but it is much more fair and more equitable than title I of the pending bill.

At least two of my colleagues from Oklahoma, Representatives ROGERS and GASSAWAY, have bills pending before the committee, both of which are more liberal, more progressive, and much fairer to our aged citizens than is this bill. But neither of these bills has had favorable action by the committee.

The Lundeen and the McGroarty bills have been discussed at some length on the floor of this House. Both have splendid provisions, and both have their weaknesses. But let me call your attention to the fact that if the Lundeen bill were passed, it would be financed by that class able to pay and would not heap additional burdens on the backs of the working class. Section 4 of the Lundeen bill reads, in part, as follows:

> Further taxation necessary to provide funds for the purpose of this act shall be levied on inheritances, gifts, and individuals and corporation incomes of $5,000 a year and over.

This provision should be broadened to include the taxing of stock exchanges, as provided in my bill, and substituted for or added as an amendment to the appropriate section of the pending bill. This Congress cannot afford to pass this bill without providing some means of financing it. I think it is generally conceded that the $49,750,000 provided in the pending bill to finance old-age-security provisions for the first year is entirely inadequate.

The weakness of the Townsend plan, that has been changed and modified several times, and which is now estimated will pay $50 a month instead of $200, is undoubtedly its sales-tax provision for financing it. The proposal of a tax of 2 percent on every transaction is not only impractical but would play into the hands of the special interests and add additional burdens on the poor. I have consistently fought a Federal sales tax for years; but even worse than a general Federal sales tax is a turnover sales tax as proposed in that bill. Canada tried that to its sorrow and soon abolished it. As I pointed out on this floor in speaking in opposition to the sales tax as advocated by Herbert Hoover in 1932, there is no question but that such a tax is ultimately passed on to the consumer. A general sales tax is robbing Peter to pay Paul, and when Peter and Paul are both poor men, both ground down by heavy personal and real estate taxes, as well as by tribute paid the tariff-protected corporations, low wages, and starvation prices for farm products, I hope that some other way can be found to raise the revenue needed to take care of our obligations to our needy and deserving old people.

On the other hand, the McGroarty plan, as modified, has some splendid provisions and represents the progressive ideas of millions of people who are determined to do something worth while for our aged citizens.

The bill I have submitted to this Congress for consideration would lower the age limit to 60 years, with a further provision that dependent citizens over 50 years of age, who are disabled and unable physically to provide a living for themselves and families, should receive Federal assistance. Neither provision can be found in this bill.

My bill provides for a minimum pension of $30 a month, but there is no minimum provided in this bill. This measure, if passed, will not pay a dollar to our old people unless the States wherein they reside match the Federal Government on a 50-50 basis. I submit that if the Federal Government owes a duty to care for our needy and dependent old people it should not be contingent on where those citizens happen to reside. In other words, if a State is bankrupt or for any other reason failed or refuses to do its duty by our aged citizens, why should the Federal Government hide behind the cloak of the State's failure to participate in this program?

Mr. MCFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield with pleasure to my distinguished friend from Texas.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Is the gentleman satisfied with the piece of legislation now pending before us?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; not in its present form. I will say for the gentleman's information that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] has given notice he will offer an amendment to pay pensions to residents of the nonparticipating States for 2 years, pending the States' decision to participate, and I believe the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] stated today on the floor that he proposed to introduce a similar amendment. I, for one, propose to support such an amendment.

I realize full well that the word has gone out that this bill must not be amended and that it must be passed in its present form, but I give notice now that I propose to offer and support a number of amendments in an effort to make it a fair and just measure. The bill in its present form is a misnomer. It is not all it proclaims to be in its title. It will not accomplish all the things we had hoped for during the present session, yet it must be said it is a progressive and forward step for the cause of over 6,000,000 citizens who are 65 years of age or older and who thus far have been forgotten by this Government.

The pending security bill, in its present form, although very much inadequate to meet the present deplorable situation, is, of course, better than nothing. It is at least an opening wedge to real security legislation in the future. It marks the dawn of a new day for the millions of aged, dependent, and helpless citizens who have played an important part in making this great country what it is today. I predict now that some time in the not far distant future the Congress of the United States will awaken to its full duty and discharge its full obligation to our old and honored citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN].

THE RIGHTS OF AGE

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, no question under consideration before Congress has a wider appeal than old-age pensions. The depression has brought the tragedy of age to public attention as never before. The aged of this decade have not only been deprived of a just share of the fruits of their labor but of employment. They have been stripped of their savings of years by unsound economic conditions, by the dust storms of speculation that swept our country and the consequent failure of banks, building and loan associations, and kindred institutions. The substitution of mechanics for the manual efforts of a very large portion of our population, and the machine age demanding the alertness, speed, and the energy of youth, has lessened the demands on age and experience.

Our aged people, once young, filled with hope, spurred by ambition, played their part in the achievements of a great Nation. It was their ranks that conquered the wilds of our country, that felled its forests, that delved in its mines, that plowed its fields, that reaped its harvest, and planted its fruits and consummated the economic development of our Nation, the richest on earth. Robert R. Doane, the economist, is the authority for the statement that in 1929 the United States possessed about 45 percent of the entire wealth of the world.

These millions who are suffering today not only produced the wealth of this country but they also carried the burdens of war. These aged served the flag, many offered their lives, their strength, their bodies to the ravages of disease and to the shot and shell of the battlefields. And these who have contributed so much to our country, to its prosperity, its wealth, its safety, its welfare in peace and in war, their voices must be heard, their needs must be noticed, their welfare must be regarded.

In considering the aged and the forgotten, let us remember the wife and mother, who have performed an essential and primary part in the upbuilding of this great Nation. Think of the hardships and the privations that wifehood and motherhood entail, a life of drudgery in millions of instances, with but few opportunities to share the comforts, the dreams, and the luxuries of life; those who have borne the soldiers and the workers of the Nation, who nursed them in their infancy, who guided them in their youth, and who served and blessed them throughout all their years. Have we so far forgotten the principles of Christianity, the brotherhood of man, the obligation of one human being to another, not to respond to the necessities of wifehood and motherhood? If we can pay pensions to policemen, firemen, and other employees, why not the mothers and fathers?

One of the first questions that arises is: How much can we pay? The amount of $200 per month has been called "cockeyed", and others declare that $15 is an insult and a pauper's dole. I have always advocated as generous a pension as we can afford to pay.

In the study of this urgent problem one cannot avoid the relationship of a fair old-age pension to the income that is annually received per person in our country. To pay a pension far in excess of the individual's capacity to earn is unfair to those who must pay it. Many pensions are granted on a percentage basis of the earnings of the beneficiary, such as policemen and firemen and retired officers of the Army and Navy. Others, like veterans' pensions, are based upon the degree of disability. In order to arrive at a fair conclusion let us consider not only the wealth of this country but also its annual income.

OUR INCOME FOR 20 YEARS

For a period of 20 years, beginning in 1910 and ending in 1929, the average income per person per year in current dollars was estimated at $511.25 per year, or about $42.60 per month per person. Based on the purchasing power of the dollar for 1913, considered by economists as a normal year, the average income per person for the United States was $347.80 per year, or about $29 per month. A thoughtful consideration of old-age pensions must lead to the inevitable conclusion that the income of all over a period of years must govern to a large extent the amount that can be paid for any purpose, however beneficent it may be. Since the average income of all the people of the United States for a period of 20 years has been but $29 per month, can we justify an old-age pension of $200 per month?

THE FARMERS' INCOME

One of the groups in our country intensely interested in all public expenditures is our farmers. About 30,000,000 people, or nearly 25 percent of our population, lived on the farms in 1929. According to the estimates made, the average income per person on the farms throughout the United States was $273, or $22.75 per month. California is quite fortunate in this respect, for the income of the farmers of our State was estimated in current dollars at $1,246 per person for the year, and stood at the top of the list, with an income of a little more than $103.83 per month. South Carolina stood at the bottom of the list, with approximately one-tenth of the income of the farmers of California, namely, $129 for 1929, or $10.75 per month per person, and these farmers, with this meager income, must contribute to any sort of pension plan, whether it be $15 or $200 per month.

In 12 Southern States farmers averaged but $162 per person, or $13.50 per month, for 1929. In only 11 States did the income of the farmers exceed $500 per year, or $41.67 per month. New York farmers had an income of a little less than $500, and the farmers of Iowa and Missouri did not reach $250 per person per annum, or $20.83 per month. These incomes include rental value of houses and food raised and consumed by the farmer, and 1929 was a prosperous year compared with the 3 years that followed. On the other hand, the residents of the city enjoyed a larger income of approximately $900 per capita per year, or about $75 per month. Of course, the city residents pay more for rentals and more for certain foodstuffs than the farmer.

DISTRIBUTION OF INCOMES

The same source of authority for the statistics just quoted, namely, Our Capacity to Consume, published by the Brookings Institution, states that the family—a fraction over four persons—income averaged $1,700 for the year 1929. It also gives information that 6,000,000 families, or 21 percent of our population, had an income of less than $1,000 per year; that 12,000,000 families, or over 42 percent of the population, had incomes of less than $1,500; that 20,000,000 families, or 71 percent, had an income of less than $2,500 per year; that 2,000,000 families, or 8 percent of the population, had more than $5,000 per family per year; and that 600,000 families, or 2.3 percent of the population, had an income of more than $10,000 per year for a family of 4; also that 1 percent of the families with the highest incomes had as much of the entire income of the country as 42 percent of the families with the lower income. All of these figures disclose the fact of a most serious maladjustment of the incomes of those who produce the wealth of our country. And these figures were based on incomes in 1929 which were about twice the national income per year during the depression. Where in justice should we place the burden of taxes for the aged? Would you place it on the back of the millions with inadequate incomes or upon those with extravagant incomes who revel in the riches produced by the workers?

MANY UNABLE TO SAVE

One of the serious phases of the distribution of wealth of the United States is that millions of our people are able to save but a very small amount because their income is consumed by living expenses. Those with the higher incomes, therefore, are able to accumulate most of the savings of the national wealth, and thereby increase their wealth from year to year entirely out of proportion to the average population. The figures show that in 1929 the savings of the 10 percent having the highest income were 86 percent of the total savings of that year, while the 80 percent of the population with the lower incomes were able to save but 2 percent of the entire savings of the country. One and six-tenths of the depositors in the banks of the United States own 65 percent of all the deposits in the 15,119 banks operating under the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, was the testimony of Leo T. Crowley, Chairman of the Board of the F. D. I. C. on February 21, 1935, before the House Committee on Banking and Currency.

THE PRIVILEGED FEW

The American Monetary Reform Association furnishes the figures that for 1929, 1.82 percent of the income-tax payers received 85.7 percent of the entire taxed income, based upon the returns made to the Income Tax Department of the Government; also that 513 persons in 1929 had a net income of over $1,212,000,000. These 513 persons had an income equal to the entire harvest of wheat and oats from an acreage of over 101,000,000 acres. This acreage is almost the same as the entire acreage of California, including the mountains, the deserts, and the rivers. The privileged few who gained their great fortunes by the exploitation of the many, including those reduced to penury, are the ones to bear a major part of the burden that society owes to the aged. The rugged individualism that has grasped the wealth and income of our rich resources should restore to the ragged individualism it has produced at least sufficient compensation to relieve its unfortunate victims from the destitution of age.

GROWTH OF CORPORATIONS

The Modern Corporation and Private Property, an illuminating volume by Berle and Means, in discussing the concentration of wealth in America, discloses that the American Telephone & Telegraph Corporation had assets of $5,000,000,000, and 454,000 employees, in 1929; that the assets of this company are more than those of 21 States of the Union. This same interesting study also states that in 1800 there were but 335 profit corporations in this country, 219 of which were turnpike, bridge, and canal companies, and only 6 manufacturing companies; also that in 1930, 14 railway systems operated nearly 87 percent of first-class railway mileage, and nearly 82 percent of the entire mileage; that in 1919, 99 percent of the workers in copper were employed by corporations, 98 percent of the workers in iron ore, 97 percent of the workers in lead and zinc, 89 percent of the workers in oil and gas, and 92 percent of the workers in factories were employed by corporations. In 1930, 200 corporations had over $100,000,000 each, and that 15 corporations had a capitalization exceeding $1,000,000,000 each. Berle and Means also state that in 1930, 200 corporations, 42 of which were railways, 52 public utilities, 106 industrials, had assets of more than $81,000,000,000, or practically 22 percent of the entire wealth of the country at that time. The same authority also states that these 200 corporations, less than seven one-hundredths of 1 percent, control nearly one-half of the corporate wealth of the United States, and that 2,000 persons control one-half of the industry of the country. Not only should these powerful corporations be curbed in their ruthless disregard of the rights of the individual, but heavy income and inheritance taxes should more uniformly distribute this wealth and power.

THE PRIVILEGED TWO HUNDRED

Berle and Means further state that these 200 corporations in 1919 had assets of nearly $44,000,000,000. or an increase of 68 percent in the preceding 10 years; that in 1929 their capitalization was over eighty-one billions, or an increase of 85 percent in the preceding 10 years. In the preceding 10 years, including 1928, 44 railways increased their assets from eighteen billions to twenty-three billions, or 24 percent; that 71 industrial corporations increased their assets from fourteen billions to twenty-three billions, or 58 percent; and that 35 utility companies increased their assets from six billions to eighteen billions, or 300 percent. These 150 corporations increased their assets from thirty-nine billions to sixty-four billions, or 63 percent, in 10 years previous to 1929.

Some of these masters of industry continue to draw immense salaries, while the investors, including the widows and the orphans, are deprived of dividends. Investors are swindled by one hand and the consumers are exploited by the other. At every attempt to control securities, to regulate exchanges, to fix fair returns, to eliminate useless and parasitical holding companies, to throttle the monopolistic and greedy corporation, the country is flooded with propaganda designed to paralyze the public with fear and to destroy confidence in Congress.

THE NATIONAL WEALTH

In 1912 our total national wealth is estimated to have been slightly in excess of $186,000,000,000 and amounted to about $1,950 per capita. In 1922, the total national wealth was $321,000,000,000, or $2,918 per capita. 1923 was the peak of our wealth with $400,000,000,000 in national wealth, and $3,048 per capita. In 1929, the year of the stock exchange debacle, the national wealth was about $362,000,000,000, and estimated at $2,977 per capita. In 1932, the national wealth had dropped to nearly $247,000,000,000, and amounted to $1,981 per capita. The 200 giant corporations with assets of eighty-one billion in 1930 was equal to over one-half of the national wealth in 1932. Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana, recently made the statement that 96 percent of American citizens own but 15 percent of the wealth, and that one out of every six persons in this country is dependent. The unfortunate part in this picture is the unhappy distribution of this wealth by which a few are overrich, and, as rugged individualists, clamor for more and more, and the increasing millions of wrecked and ragged individuals without wealth, without employment, without income, whose opportunties to pursue life, liberty, and happiness are growing less and less. But with an average of about $2,000 in wealth and an average income of $29 per month, what is a reasonable pension for the aged?

THE BIG PROBLEM

Fundamentally, the big problem in this country is to curb the greedy concentration of wealth and to enable the average citizen and the forgotten man to obtain and enjoy a proper share of the wealth he is producing. To correct these abuses of the concentration of wealth involves all our citizenship and undoubtedly will require long and arduous labors on the part of those who assume the task.

In view of this menacing picture, what can be done to restore the economic rights of the people of this country? Fortunately the demand for old-age pensions and the other requirements of the social-security plan—old-age benefits, unemployment insurance, and the care of dependent children and the physically incapacitated, offers a program of relief and a method of curbing greed and the prevention of the overaccumulation of wealth in the hands of a few.

The income tax, the inheritance tax, gift tax, and a sales tax on luxuries, supplemented by elimination of special privilege in banking, control of the currency, participation by workers in the dividends of corporations, and similar policies, afford a plan to equalize wealth throughout this country and to provide funds for a generous social-security program, including the old-age pension, and stands in striking contrast to the transaction tax which would perpetuate and augment our present vicious system of the overaccumulation of wealth and afford no means of reform.

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

The transaction or turn-over tax as proposed by the Townsend old-age-pension plan has a fatal defect in that its burdens falls on the consumer. It was brought out in the hearings that the transaction tax is merely a multiplied sales tax. One of the examples of the working of the transaction tax was developed by wheat and bread. An example was taken of a farmer producing 1,000 bushels of wheat at an assumed market value of $1 per bushel The following table used by its proponents shows the pyramiding of the Townsend tax plan:

	Tax
Farmer sells $1,000 worth of wheat and pays	$20
Buyer sells wheat for $1,100, pays	22
Miller sells wheat for $1,200 to jobber, pays	24
Jobber sells wheat for $1,300 to retailer, pays	26
Retailer sells flour for $1,500 to baker, pays	30
Baker sells to consumer at 10 cents a loaf and at 72 loaves from each bushel, pays	144
Total tax	266

Consequently, in a turn-over of six sales from the farmer to the consumer the 1,000 bushels of wheat has paid a transaction tax of $266. Breaking down this tax, it amounts to nearly 27 cents, or, to be exact, $0.266 on each dollar of the original price of the wheat. But this does not tell all the story. The farmer is a consumer as well as a producer. He buys fertilizer, which adds a tax. He hires help to plow and harvest and must add 2 percent to the wages or take it from the worker. He pays for cutting and threshing, and more tax is added. It must be hauled to town by truck and shipped to the city market by rail, which adds more tax. It is estimated that it costs 15 cents per bushel to ship wheat to market from the railway stations of the Dakotas, Kansas, and adjoining States. That amounts to an item of $150 and $3 more tax which the Townsend table does not include. The burden continues on storage, drayage, and delivery all the way from the seed bin to the housewife who buys bread and who must take it from the wages of the head of the family. Since the worker and the farmer must consume practically all of their wages and earnings, the transaction tax on necessities would be a tremendous burden to both.

THE INDEPENDENT DEALER

In the Townsend computation on the 1,000 bushels of wheat the grocer on the corner is overlooked. The independent grocer buys from the baker. Let us assume he pays the baker 7½ cents per loaf. In this case the baker receives $5,400 and pays $108 tax, which added to above tabulation makes a grand total of $374, or over 37 percent of the selling price of the wheat:

	Tax
Farmer pays on wheat	$20
Buyer pays on wheat	22
Miller pays on flour	24
Jobber pays on flour	26
Retailer pays on flour	30
Baker at 7½ cents a loaf	108
Grocer at 10 cents a loaf	144
Total	374

But the chain store can own its own mill and its own bakery because of its large volume of business. The chain-store buyer bargains for the wheat and the mill consigns the flour to the chain store.

Chain store or mail-order house:

	Tax
Farmer pays	$20
Chain store or mail-order house	144
Total	164

CHAIN-STORE ADVANTAGE $210

In this instance the farmer pays $20, the chain store pays $144, making a total of $164 as against the $374 costs to the independent grocer. Thus the transaction tax would tax the independent grocer $210 more than the chain-store organization. What would result to the small merchant under such a system? The example of wheat and bread can be applied to canned vegetables and fruits, boots and shoes, clothing, and other articles too numerous to mention. The transaction tax would be an unfair discrimination in favor of both the chain store and the mail-order house.

But someone may say that the success of the chain store would lessen costs to the consumer. Such is not the history of big business and monopolies. As soon as competition is crushed, as soon as the small operator closes his doors, the great captains of industry and commerce control the field and fix prices at a point to yield the greatest profits, and the interests of the consumer are disregarded. Monopolies in nearly every instance have wrung huge profits from the public, as the growth of corporations already cited clearly discloses. The only apparent remedy from trust and corporation control is in the cooperatives, public ownership, and operation for use and not for profit. Until that era arrives, the small merchant and dealer affords the backbone of competition to keep prices at a reasonable base.

Any casual analysis of the sales tax unfolds that it is a method of taxation that bears heavily upon the poor man. Undoubtedly much of the propaganda in favor of the sales tax is prompted by those who have wealth and large incomes and have the greedy desire to shift their taxes to someone else.

LESSON FROM THE CALIFORNIA SALES TAX

Again, as to the sales tax, let us examine the question as applied to the State of California. A 2½-percent retail sales tax in California takes $2.50 out of every $100 earned by the worker and the farmer. All of those who are obliged to use their income for living expenses are taxed $2.50 per $100. Now, let us consider the revenue side of this retail sales tax. It has produced a little less than $50,000,000 per annum in California. California has about one-twentieth of the population and more than that ratio of buying power as to the entire United States. Therefore, if the 2½-percent retail sales tax were applied over the entire United States, it would produce about 20 times as much as now paid in to the State of California, or approximately $1,000,000,000.

The original Townsend old-age-pension plan of $200 per month would require somewhere from eighteen to twenty-four billion dollars per year, according to the various estimates, without including the cost of administration, which would also be a tremendous cost.

Let us take $20,000,000,000 per year as a fair cost of the Townsend plan. In order to secure $20,000,000,000 you would be obliged to multiply the retail sales tax of 2½ percent by 20, or levy a 50-percent retail sales tax throughout the United States, in order to produce $20,000,000,000. So, it is quite evident that breaking down a 50-percent retail sales tax to its numerous turn-overs, the 2-percent transaction tax proposed by Dr. Townsend would fall far less than the amount required for his plan of $200 per month pension.

The much-advertised Robert R. Doane, the economist, testified before the Senate hearing on the Townsend plan that his estimate was that a 2-percent transaction tax would produce about $4,000,000,000 per annum. The Senate hearings developed the information that a similar and modified tax of 2 percent imposed in France, with a population of 36,000,000, produced but $301,000,000 per year. That Germany, with a similar 2-percent turn-over tax on 64,000,000 people, produced $249,000,000 per annum. No facts were developed that anything like the twenty billion amount required by the Townsend plan would be produced by a 2-percent transaction or turn-over tax.

THE REVISED TOWNSEND PLAN

Undoubtedly, the failure to produce any substantial evidence that the plan would produce the required revenue prompted the second Townsend bill, introduced April 1, after House hearings had concluded. But the revised bill also included the vicious and destructive multiplied sales tax that must fall on the consumer. The second Townsend bill threw the $200 per month provision out of the window, but sought to deceive the Townsend followers back home by inserting "not exceeding $200 per month." A belated attempt was made to revise the bill the third time, but the transaction tax and other objectionable features remained.

A TAX OF $650 PER FAMILY

Dr. Townsend filed a statement in the hearings before the House Ways and Means Committee on his first bill in which he estimated the entire national income for 1932 and 1933 approximated $40,000,000,000 for each year. Thereby Dr. Townsend admitted that his plan of $200 per month pension would absorb about one-half of all the income of all the people of the United States for those 2 years. Taking the peak year of 1929 it would absorb one-fourth of the entire national income. Dividing the $20,000,000,000 proposal by an estimated population of 125,000,000, you would have an average tax of $160 per person or a burden of about $650 per family per year. Such a system of taxation, added to our present groaning burdens of taxes by the city, county, State, and Nation, would not produce recovery, but prostration, stagnation, and ruination as we have never experienced.

If the Townsend plan had based its revenue requirements upon a graduated income, inheritance, and gift tax, and a sales tax on luxuries, it would, in my estimation, be a much more practical program. Not only would it provide a considerable revenue, but it would have a tendency to curtail and to control the menace of great wealth in this country. but in no event could it produce anywhere near $200 per pensioner per month.

I was reared on the theory that thrift is one of the virtues of our economic and social life. I have always had an abhorrence of debt and have always had a feeling of disgust for those who live beyond their incomes and fail to pay their bills and debts. If we were able to pay a pension of $200 per month to the aged, it would remove the incentive for millions to save. They would be compelled to spend their earnings as soon as received. It would be unlawful to conserve income for sickness, burial, or other emergencies. Many would live for today and would lose sight of tomorrow. What effect this would have on our economic and social order affords food for speculation.

DO TAXES ENRICH?

Can any people become enriched by taxation? The answer is evident. Nations and individuals are enriched by toil and the production of wealth. Any system of taxation is a drain upon the wealth of the country. The transaction tax falls particularly heavy on the workingman with the small income. The taxes are a loss to his family budget and we must not overlook the fact that the 1930 census records there were more than 10,000,000 persons over 60 years of age and there were also over 36,000,000 children under 15 years of age, who have undeniable claims upon the wage earners and the farmers of this country.

THE CHILDREN AND GRANDCHILDREN

I share in the sympathetic and emotional appeals for the aged by my colleagues, but I venture the prediction that when my big-hearted and philanthropic colleagues realize that the payment of a $200 pension to the aged by a transaction tax means the reduction of the meager fare, the scant clothes, the insufficient housing of a great part of our 36,000,000 children under 15 years of age, that they will pause and reconsider. I refer again to the rather tedious statistics in the beginning of my remarks that furnish the startling information that the average income of all the citizens of our country for our most prosperous 20 years was but a paltry $29 per month. Out of this pitiful income has been wrung the huge fortunes of the favored few. Out of the remnants of this income of $29 monthly we are to squeeze out of the milk of babes, out of the necessities of children, out of the toil and sweat of underpaid millions, billions of dollars by the vicious transaction tax. Where is the grandfather and the grandmother who would take a crust or a penny from the grandchild? When the aged of this country realize the iniquity of the transaction tax they will arise against it and demand that their pensions be not paid by the poor but by the riches of the privileged few by whom they have been exploited.

OTHER SERIOUS OBJECTIONS

Dr. Townsend argues that his system of revolving pensions would bring recovery and prosperity, but this would be counteracted by the fact that he also sets up a revolving tax. Every producer that sells his product, every merchant that sells his goods, every owner that rents his house, every doctor, dentist, pastor, lawyer, every newspaper on each advertisement and each subscription, barber, baker, and candlestick maker, must set aside 2 percent of every transaction, including every fee and collection, to be paid to the Government at the end of the month. According to the Townsend program it would require 4 months' time from the date of collection to the date of the disbursement, or the immense sum of nearly $7,000,000,000 always held out of the channels of trade and commerce. This process of retaining and holding taxes, freezing billions of our money which would only be released when the Government paid it out to the pensioner, would disastrously reduce our circulating mediums and produce ruin and not recovery.

Another fallacy of the Townsend plan is based upon the velocity of money. It was urged in the hearings that under this plan the dollar would be quickened into rapid action and that there would be a turn-over of 528 times instead of 34 times per year, as at present. Thus it was assumed that each dollar would earn $10.56 per year in taxes at the 2-percent rate. It is conceded that velocity of money is an important factor, but only a flight of fancy would imagine its turn-over to be 528 times in a year, 44 times a month, 11 times a week, and nearly twice a day. It must be noted that wages and salaries are paid weekly or monthly, rents, water, gas, telephones, and ordinary bills monthly and dividends quarterly, or perhaps yearly. The farmer's income from sales occurs less frequently. All of these factors enter into the velocity of money, and apparently have not been considered by the proponents of the Townsend plan.

THE "BRAIN TRUST" AND THE BONEHEADS

I have little patience with those impetuous citizens who demand that I vote against the social-security bill submitted by the administration. This bill was prepared after consultation with 9 outstanding groups and 116 individuals who have been students and experts of the problems involved. It has had the aid of some of the best minds of the country. When it came to Congress, hearings were had in the Ways and Means Committee of the House, 1,141 pages, and in the Finance Committee of the Senate, 1,354 pages, a total of 2,495 pages. Over 170 pages were devoted to hearings on the Townsend plan. Few bills presented to Congress have had such careful consideration. The above committees are made up of the most outstanding, ablest, and experienced Members of Congress.

I have even less patience with those who endeavor to malign the social-security measure by charging it was written by "brain trusters" and college professors. After centuries of effort to build a system of education, I am one who believes our American school system from the little white temple at the crossroads to the great universities, inclusive, is the crowning glory of our country. The teacher, the college professor hold an independent position in that he does not draw his daily bread from the great banks or from the pay roll of great industries that use propaganda to warp and distort the minds of men. The school, the college, the university is the training ground for independent thought and action, and is one of the great factors that carries us forward on solid ground. The teachers and the professors hold the destiny of America in their hands.

Among the proudest moments of my American citizenship were those when I witnessed oriental children in Hawaii and the Philippines eagerly sharing the blessings of American education. The Army and the Navy planted the flag, but our teachers planted the seed of modern civilization in their lives. Others have pioneered in the pursuit of commerce, industry, and wealth, but the underpaid teacher has marched onward and forward, carrying the banner of education and culture and America's best traditions and inspired our youth with patriotism, industry, and Christian concepts. Shame on those who detract, impugn, and slander the teachers and professors of this land to which they have contributed the essence of its civilization and its noblest ideals. Paraphrasing a retort of the esteemed ROBERT DOUGHTON, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in the Seventy-third Congress, I believe the approval of the "brain trust" is much to be preferred to the carpings of the "bone trust" which makes so much noise and does so little.

CHISELERS AND PEANUT PROFITEERS

I have listened to statements and read others made by proponents of the Townsend plan that are so far removed from veracity and have such a small grain of truth that one must come to the conclusion that some of the promoters have abandoned all landmarks of fact and are dreaming of phantoms and fancies and fiction, or are irresponsible chiselers plying a shell game and preying upon the dimes and quarters they can wring from the pockets of the poor, the aged, and the credulous. Some of the most vicious and loudest of these offenders are evidently peanut profiteers and are criminally exploiting and victimizing their followers and supporters. They are not only exploiting the innocent at home but inspire flagrant threats and attacks against Members of Congress who are trying to be fair to all. The best that can be said for the Townsend organization is that it has focused attention on a great public need, and it has made a creditable contribution in this way. It is to be regretted that the Townsend plan is so fantastic and based upon the transaction tax, one of the most vicious methods of taxation that the mind of man could devise.

THE SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

The social-security bill before us goes much further than pensions for the aged, to be paid by the Federal Government and the States. It sets up a Federal system by which the employed of the great corporations of this country may establish benefits for themselves without direct contribution of the State or of the Nation. In this plan the Government assesses, collects, invests, and disburses the funds that are contributed by the worker and the employer. It provides for benefits of from $10 to $85 per month.

Another important provision in the social-security bill provides for the security of children who are dependents. The report on the social-security bill states that more than 40 percent of all persons on relief, approximately 9,000,000 individuals, are children under 16, children who are denied the necessities required for sound bodies and sane minds. It is proposed under the social-security bill to aid the States in making provision for these unfortunate children. The social-security bill further provides additional aid for maternity and infancy welfare, for vocational rehabilitation for crippled children, and also for the further participation of the Federal Government in public-health service.

HOW MANY DOLLARS PER MONTH?

There is no limitation in the bill being considered by Congress as to the amount that may be contributed by the State for old-age pensions. For instance, California may pay $15, $25, $50, or more per month, to which, then, the Federal Government will contribute not to exceed $15 per month for each individual pensioned. If I remember correctly, the present California old-age-pension law is based upon a contribution of the State and county and amounts to a little more than $20 per month. By revising the California law to comply with the Federal requirements the total amount would be in excess of $35 per month. But the California Legislature must revise the present law before this can be realized.

In some States the counties are enabled by law to pay pensions, and the same is true of municipalities. Many cities now pay fire and police pensions, and there is no fundamental reason why this pension system should not be extended to the aged citizens in those cities and counties which may desire to establish such a system.

CRITICISM OF PRESENT BILL

Current criticisms of the present bill are that it will be slow in getting under way and that the amount provided by the Federal Government for old-age pensions is inadequate. The proposed appropriation of $15 per month by the Federal Government alone is admittedly insufficient to provide for the necessities of the aged individual. There are many who believe—and there are good reasons advanced—that the Federal Government should make the entire appropriation for the old-age pensions, and that the amount should be much larger, and do it now.

Undoubtedly from year to year there may be opportunities to provide additional revenues and to increase the Federal appropriation, but the general policy implanted in this bill provides for State participation for the very purpose of bringing home to the people of all of this country the burden of all pensions for the aged, and benefits for the worker and the children that somewhere, somehow, the Government, both National and State, must reach into the pockets of the people for the funds that are to be appropriated and bestowed. So Congress is faced with two propositions: First, the most pleasant experience of providing for the aged, the workers, the mothers, and the children; and, second, the painful experience of saddling upon others an additional burden.

This bill, which may have imperfections and which may not meet all requirements of individuals and which may be disappointing in some provisions, will be subjected to revisions and amendments, to supplementary legislation that will improve it and adjust it to the needs of the years that follow. The important point to consider is that a system for the promotion of social security and of human welfare has begun. It is like laying the first stone of a great structure.

THE NEW DEAL AND ITS LEADER!

The first pronouncement of the new deal was laid down in the Democratic national platform of 1932. That platform contained but a suggestion of human-welfare legislation, but it planted the seed in the national mind and it directed attention to a national necessity. It remained for President Franklin D. Roosevelt, the inspirational leader of the new deal, to elaborate and to give vitality and potency to this great movement. In his message to the Seventy-third Congress the President emphasized his purpose to contribute to the necessities of age and to other social welfare measures. The social-security bill now before Congress is the fulfillment of the suggestions of the Democratic national platform of 1932 and of the humanitarian vision of our great President. It is the most important human welfare measure submitted to an American Congress in the 152 years of our history. It is the crowning effort of the new deal. It is a thrilling privilege to be a Member of Congress at this session and have the opportunity of working with the President, the Ways and Means Committee, and the Members of Congress in supporting this great measure to a fruitful conclusion. President Roosevelt has kept faith.

MY OWN BELIEF

I believe firmly in a pension for the aged and for social security in all of its phases. I believe in unemployment insurance to protect the workers of this country. It is an obligation of society to provide for the widowed mother, the dependent child, the physically handicapped, and for the public health and particularly for maternal care. Our civilization demands that these obligations be met in a generous manner. The present bill is the first step.

I believe that the outline of taxation that I have given will not only permit the increase of the amount of the pensions and benefits provided under this bill for social security, but it will also be a reasonable method to bring about the redistribution of wealth and to lessen the danger and menace of accumulated fortunes. I reemphasize and repeat my former declarations, that I favor the most generous program of old-age pensions and social security that we can secure and for which we are able to pay. I have given this subject thoughtful study, I have spent many hours in its consideration, and I refuse to yield to threats or to surrender my honest convictions or to play politics with the misfortunes and afflictions of age.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, a very wise and respected clergyman in the town where I live used to say that in order to do real charity it was necessary to combine with a soft heart a hard head. I think that, in this bill before us, it is well to remember that combination, because however good our purposes are, and I am sure everyone wants to help along old people who are in distress or anybody who is in distress, a bill which affects the whole country as this does should have longer and more careful consideration than this bill has had.

I notice a great many gentlemen whose opinions are entitled to great respect, and who have studied this bill, differ radically as to its provisions and as to its wisdom. It is a matter of such magnitude and has such national effect that it should have greater study. This question has been considered in many countries. A great many States have old-age pensions now. I think it would be much wiser to wait until they have greater experience on which to build.

It is true also that many large industrial concerns have retirement provisions which are working well. Personally I believe that all provisions of this sort should be initiated and controlled by the States themselves for the reason that in a country of as great extent as this, and with as great variety of population, it is not possible for one general law, operated by one committee in Washington, to do equal justice, and place as little burden on the community as if each State decides for itself what it should do.

The President already has in his control, under a recent act, sufficient funds for all immediate relief. That is another reason why I think this provision for old-age pension and all the pension system in this bill could well be deferred.

Now, reverting to what I said before about tempering our good intentions with reason, let us consider calmly and without any bias or any political tendency, the provisions of this bill. I certainly have no desire to criticize anybody for what has been done, but let us see if we can agree on what the general conditions are. I should say that as far as unemployment is concerned, the measures thus far begun and the millions which have thus far been expended, have not greatly improved conditions. About as many men, if not more, are out of work now as have been at any time. I suppose these enormous expenditures which the President is prepared to make under the recent legislation, may help. He may be able to put a certain number of men at work, but I think you will agree that no real break in our troubles can be made except by the extension of business which will reemploy men, and make real production for exchange. That is the only way to produce real money, by making exchanges which are advantageous to both sides.

As we all know, the banks are full of money, both paper money, if you want to call it such, and credit money. People sometimes criticize the banks because they say they are not liberal enough; they will not lend. I know, as every business man knows, that they are only too anxious to lend. I know that the managers of all banks are lying awake nights trying to find ways in which to use their money and their credit. Why is it they are not lending? Simply because responsible men do not come forward to borrow. The reason for that is that responsible business men do not have confidence, either in present conditions or in what is going to follow.

The banks would be delighted to lend to responsible men if they wanted to borrow.

What is the reason for this lack of confidence? I suppose primarily it is that business men have seen the public debt increased by leaps and bounds until now it is greater than at any time in the country's history. Every year great deficits are piling up. They have seen this enormous appropriation which has just been made for the President. But we do not find that the administration makes any reference now to balancing the Budget. That was a part of the story in the beginning, but it seems to be lost sight of now with no fear at all of the consequences. I am sure you will all agree that a government, no more than a private individual, can continue spending more than its income without losing its credit. If and when the credit of the United States becomes at all questionable, the only way out of paying these enormous expenditures is by paying its debts in paper money. Then you have paper inflation, and when that once gets started history teaches us that it is not possible to stop it. What causes me anxiety and I think what causes a great many other men anxiety is the fear that these enormous expenditures will not stop, for once people become accustomed to them and build their lives on them you cannot stop them.

It would please me very much if the Members would take the time to read an address which was made by the distinguished Chairman of our Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], in New York recently where he referred to the growing dependence of States, municipalities, and individuals on the Federal Government, and voiced the fear that it would result in a destruction of the independence and initiative which has been the great cornerstone of progress in this country. This, I think, is the most fundamental difficulty with bills of this nature.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON], in making his speech the other day, said we were reversing the old saying of the great President Cleveland, that the people must support the Government and not the Government support the people. More and more now in any kind of trouble, whether it be State or individual, we turn to the Government at Washington, to lead us out and help us out. I think this is a great danger inherent in this bill. I shall not pretend to discuss the details of the bill because so many men have discussed and will discuss it who are better informed on it than I, but I notice in the bill itself and in the report accompanying it, that it becomes an increasing load on industry starting with some $200,000,000 and rising in about 7 years' time to a load of $1,000,000,000, and in 8 years more to a load of nearly $2,000,000,000.

Then I see in the report also, but under another clause, an additional burden of $800,000,000 or $900,000,000. Many of us have come to regard the Government of the United States as an independent entity which somehow or other by law can create value and scatter it around, but all of us in our hearts and minds know really that the only way we can create value is by work, by producing more than is consumed. Then we get real exchanges and real value.

To saddle this bill on industry, by whatever name the method is called, State taxation, Federal taxation, Federal contribution, or by some other name, is to unload on industry in the course of 10 or 12 years an overhead burden of between $3,000,000,000 or $4,000,000,000. This can be raised in only two ways, it must come from reduced wages or increased prices. We have all seen the effect of increased prices in the operation of the increased price of cotton which has caused enormous imports to come into this country and has made our exports fall off tremendously.

It seems to me, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the fundamental and very important objection to this bill as a whole is that in times such as now exist where the debt is excessive—we have not begun to feel the effects of it yet for we have been paying the interest on the debt by new borrowings. But we cannot keep this up indefinitely; we shall be forced to increase the taxes which already are heavy—we cannot load up business with a further overhead of $3,000,000,000. The load will not be for this year or for next year, but will continue indefinitely. The business men see it in advance, and you can well appreciate that confidence is not going to be inspired by legislation which imposes additional burdens; it will be further destroyed, and I say it is a heavy responsibility for this House to pass a bill that is going to press particularly heavily on industry. In the case of small manufacturers who are in the red—and I know a lot of them—a great many will be put out of business.

So I say we ought to stop, look, and listen before we enact any such bill. For the reasons which I have enumerated. I for one, am not able to support it. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the other night it was my good fortune and good privilege to attend a dinner where the President of the United States observed very pointedly that sometimes we cannot see the forest for the trees; and I suppose we experience a sense of bewilderment when we seek to deal with legislation that is involved, controversial, and complicated. It is always refreshing to be able to dip back in the history of our own country, particularly the legislative history, in the hope of getting a sense of direction and a balanced viewpoint. As we scan the debates of other generations and review the dire prophecies of ruin and destruction that were made, when controversial matters were pending, and then note how blithely the Nation went on its way to greater heights of prosperity, there springs from the past much comfort and consolation.

This is not the only Congress that has dealt with controversial legislation. In fact, all legislation of any consequence has been controversial. There was a time, for instance, when the Congress was considering the child-labor bill, introduced by Senator Beveridge, back in 1906, of which Woodrow Wilson, then Governor of New Jersey, remarked that it was obviously absurd. Ten years later that same Woodrow Wilson, then President of the United States, put the lash on Congress to pass the Keating-Owen Child Labor Act which was infinitely more drastic than the Beveridge bill. It indicates too plainly how times change and what changes of sentiment and reaction arise in our national life. What a debate raged around that measure. How they painted it as an agency of national destruction, and how it was fought by debate and editorial, but, somehow, the Nation carries on.

The same thing is true of the direct election of Senators. When it was considered more than a generation ago, stalwart and dignified Senators contemplated such a measure with horror and denounced it as an attempt to destroy the very foundations of government, but somehow, we lived through it and here we are, for better or for worse.

When the Boy Orator of the Platte came thundering out of the West to take up the cudgels in behalf of the income tax, it was regarded with a species of horror. It almost crept into the Constitution, and then crept out again. A generation later it had so permeated the consciousness of the people that Taft and Roosevelt placed their sanction on it, and in 1913, or thereabouts, it became a part of our organic law. Despite the doleful pictures of destruction that were painted, here we are, accepting the income tax as a matter of course and, on the whole, doing a forthright job of paying that tax before the statutory due date.

The same thing prevailed with respect to civil service. Back in 1888 one of the so-called "civil-service reformers" came to the Coliseum in Chicago to talk on civil-service reform and was greeted by an audience of only three people. He and his kind were dubbed "man milliners" and "carpet knights." They made little headway. Patronage mongers and those who subscribed to President Jackson's—or was it William Marcy Tweed's—gospel of "To the victor belong the spoils" felt that these reformers were trying to destroy the Nation. Then a bullet fired by a disappointed office seeker found the heart of a President, and almost overnight we had civil-service reform. And while we may cherish some doubts about abuses therein, the fact is that we have a civil-service system, and we accept it as a matter of course.

Everybody remembers the days when enactment of workingmen's compensation legislation by the States was regarded as the handiest way to destroy industry, but somehow industry was not destroyed and the States did carry on despite opposition.

There must be a strange, invincible kind of force that brings such salutary measures into being and inscribes them on the statute books, despite all opposition and despite any gloomy prophecies as to whether they will or will not destroy the Nation.

Whatever that force is, it has, indeed, triumphed over all obstacles down through the centuries to raise the estate and condition of mankind. It is a far cry from the day when Peter the Great, the Emperor of Russia, could, without regard for human rights, feed his people to wild dogs or break them on the torture wheel to today, when life and liberty are carefully safeguarded in the law. It is a far cry from the day when farmers who lived in France under Louis the Fourteenth could not so much as frighten away the deer and other animals that came to eat the bit of wheat or barley that stood between them and starvation to this day, when wide-spread attempts are made to ameliorate the condition of the farmer. And by the same token it is a far cry from the day when man lived in a state of industrial squalor to today, when an effort is being made to aid him.

As we survey these advances in the condition of humankind and these improvements in our political, economic, and social condition, discounting, of course, temporary set-backs that may have been encountered, do we not wonder what strange force has carried us along? What strange force has overcome all resistance?

I presume that everybody for himself has tried at some time to evaluate that force.

To me it appears as a kind of collective morality that carriers us along. A morality which, despite editorials and articles for and against a measure, despite what we may say and conjecture here in debate, seeks to translate into reality such ideals as sanctity of life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Our own forefathers, founders of this Nation, wrote them into the Declaration and the Constitution.

But pursuit of happiness seems to have remained just that, judging from the misery and distress that abounds in the land. It has been a pursuit in which the average citizen has not had a decent chance to catch up with happiness, and more and more it seems to dawn on us that the matter of effecting happiness for our people is one of the basic objectives of government.

A bit of intriguing information suggests itself in that connection as one dips into history. Back in the days when Watt and Stephenson were perfecting the steam engine and giving birth to the industrial revolution which has completely altered human destiny, there was in England a celebrated preacher named Reverend Townsend. He stood in the pulpits of London and freely declared that it was ordained of God Almighty that there should be menial and servile people in this world, grovelling in squalor and misery to do the servile tasks of humankind. Think of a man of the cloth, standing in the temples of the Lord and apologizing for conditions of destitution and despair. It is a far cry from that Reverend Townsend of 1781 to the gentle and gracious Dr. Townsend of today, who seeks somehow to do something in behalf of the aged, the indigent, and the unemployed, and whether we agree with his philosophy or not, it constitutes a most illuminating sidelight on the different approach which we take to social problems.

But this strange force that carries mankind upward and onward over momentary obstacles is the force that in my humble judgment seeks to carry us on to a fundamental goal of happiness, and that goal can be achieved, only as it receives proper assistance from constituted government.

With that as a background, let me address myself very briefly to title I of this measure dealing with assistance to the States in the payment of old-age pensions. Here, too, we must stand back and get a detached perspective in order to properly evaluate this measure.

I can remember out of my own experience as a boy—and I was 6 years of age when Theodore Roosevelt first succeeded to the Presidency—that somehow nobody feared the poorhouse. My father died when I was not quite 6 and left a mother with five children, if you will indulge me this personal allusion. She managed to provide us with an education. We had enough to eat, and scattered over all was a kind of quiet contentment. In fact, it was a kind of pastoral contentment. Life was more leisurely and more considered. As for fears of the poorhouse, I recall that we had an old gentleman in our neighborhood who spent his days in the poorhouse and was brought back by the family during the summer months. I remember as a child, marching up and down in front of that home when this old gentleman sat out in front, and looked at him as a kind of curiosity, as someone to be placed in a museum. But we were not afraid. There was not that quality of speed about life such as we have in this day and age. Everybody seemed to get along.

I think it is exemplified in the past generation by such men as William Dean Howells, and John Muir, and John Burroughs, and Huxley and Ruskin, whose profundity we somehow miss today. Their profound thoughts seem properly associated with a leisurely, unhastened, secure age.

Why has that contentment passed away, if we assume that it has? What has happened. What strange thing has altered our thinking and our economics and our industrial civilization to bring us so many social problems.

I believe it all started with the birth of the machine age at the turn of the century. I do not decry the machine age, because it has brought vast benefits, but it has also brought many problems. Had we properly made the necessary compensations as we went along, we might have been saved much of the travail of today. In that machine philosophy, we worshipped standardization, speed, and mass production to the point where it resulted in the problems which now engage our attention.

The very mention of speed recalls to mind the incident I used to tell of an automobile that was parked near a filling station at Waterloo, Iowa. A little boy occupied the rear seat when a kindly preacher came along and said, "Whose boy are you?" To which he responded, "My father is a judge in Waterloo and he is also president of the Rotary Club." Then the preacher asked, "Who is your mother?" The boy answered, "My mother is president of the law-enforcement league and she is also president of the ladies' aid society." Then the preacher asked, "And now young man, what are you doing in the rear seat", and the boy said, "Oh, mister, I have to stay back here and watch for speed cops." [Laughter.]

Ours is a speedy generation and youth quickly absorbs that idea of speed.

Next is the element of standardization. As good an illustration as any is a cigarette factory such as they have in Louisville where hundreds of girls, dressed precisely alike in blue smocks with their hair dressed just the same, are engaged in the production of cigarettes. All individuality is blotted out. The only thing that counts is a sense of discipline and automatic capacity for such a task. Machines are standardized, production is standardized and speeded up, and nothing is permitted to divert or distract from the processes. Only agile fingers and a responsive sense of discipline.

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Similarly, with speed and with standardization, came the development of mass production. Mass! Bigness! Those are the things which seem to count. We have even gone so far as to translate that idea into our colleges, seeking by mass philosophy to overwhelm students and faculty and everybody else. Our college catalogs have become so thick that they look like abridged editions of a Sears, Roebuck mail-order catalog. It is part and parcel of the mass idea. Even in sports, we see it exemplified. College football games are no longer a success unless there are forty or fifty thousand people as spectators. It makes little difference how many collar bones might be broken in the fray, it is the mass size of the crowd that counts.

That same philosophy is applied to our whole civilization and particularly industry. Everywhere one can see huge machines, automatically operated which now displace human hands. In the production of shoes, the bottling of milk, the production of tin cans, or cigarettes, or what not, it is everywhere the same. Machinery displaces hands and brings despair in its wake. I noted only last week that one of the great problems in Pennsylvania is the bootlegging of coal, resulting from the use of steam shovels in strip mines, thereby depriving miners of a livelihood. These huge shovels, strip away 40 feet of overburden, to expose the coal seam, then dig up the coal, load it into trucks and make unnecessary several hundred pairs of miners brawny hands and arms. To make a skimpy living, they are from necessity constrained to dig coal from company properties and sell it for a few cents, and this industry has been called "bootlegging" coal.

The point of all this is that gradually we have displaced millions and placed them on the unemployed lists. High-speed industry has become selective and from a huge reservoir of labor can now select the young rather than the old, because they are a better risk and because insurance premiums on young men with agile fingers and nimble brains are much cheaper and result in savings. We have, therefore, a large number of aged who would find it difficult even in normal times to secure a job but who in depression times find it impossible to secure employment. What shall be done with them. They must live. They must eat. They must preserve their self-respect. They must be regarded as folks who made their contribution to the advancement of society and now become society's problem. This is nothing more than a reasonable, fair, and civilized approach.

In such places as Africa age presents no problem. When the aging member of the tribe can no longer unerringly send an arrow into the heart of a water buffalo and bring in his share of food, he is unceremoniously escorted to the water's edge, where the crocodiles are thickest and pushed into the water. It is their simple, childish, uncivilized way of solving this problem but we, by virtue of our identity with a country which heralds its advancement to all the world, must solve it in a sound, fundamental way; and that way is through the agency of adequate old-age pensions.

In my judgment, we have paid far too much attention to and put too much emphasis on the method rather than the adequacy of the pensions, but if a measure is enacted which provides for inadequate and niggardly pensions, that problem cannot be considered as solved either today or tomorrow or 20 years hence. It must be adequate for the proper maintenance of life in a respectable way.

The Department of Agriculture tells us that the retail price of food has gone up about 29 percent since 1933. That is tantamount to say that the real value of the dollar has gone down. It will buy 29 percent less than it did 2 years ago. In other words, a $50 pension in 1933 would only be a $35 pension in 1935. Moreover, if we are going to be consistent in our attack on the 50-cent dollar, we must make proper allowance for that fact in computing pensions; and, as for myself, I can only say that the present provision is altogether inadequate. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORITZ].

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, I believe today is an epochal day in the history of humane legislation. No person or party could be responsible for this legislation except those who are progressive minded. Ten years ago anyone who proposed legislation for an old-age pension would have been considered a radical, but at the present time conditions have changed.

Now, I would be very sorry if what the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] said should come to pass. He maintained, and I think he is correct, that those States that cannot raise the money to pension their aged will not obtain an old-age pension from the Federal Government. I want to say that the State of Pennsylvania, one of the richest States in the Nation, is at the present time bankrupt. It can scarcely pay the salaries of their own employees. I hope we are not going through an empty gesture in this legislation, but that the old people will get their pensions which they deserve. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a resolution passed by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and also a statement by Lincoln Filene.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, we have, in my opinion, under consideration one of the most important bills ever considered by this or any other Congress. It will mark a new era in our social and economic life.

Before discussing its provisions I would like to pay a tribute to the liberality and democracy of the Democratic leadership of this House in bringing up this legislation under such a liberal and wide-open rule. Under the provisions of this rule ample time has been allotted for debate and every opportunity provided to offer amendments. Certainly there is little room for complaint from any quarter. I believe that, under its terms, the adherents of the various plans supporting legislation of this character will have their day in court.

The Ways and Means Committee, which has reported this bill, under the able leadership of the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, has considered this measure for many weeks. Its final draft represents the deliberate judgment and profound thought of a large majority of that great committee. The committee merits the thanks, not only of the Members of Congress, but also of society in general, for their painstaking efforts in their treatment and consideration of this bill.

During the closing sessions of the last Congress, on June 8, 1934, President Roosevelt, in his message to Congress, announced that—

> Next winter we may well undertake the great task of furthering the security of the citizen and his family through social insurance. * * * Hence, I am looking for a sound means which I can recommend to provide at once security against several of the great disturbing factors in life, especially those which relate to unemployment and old age.

Since this message the biennial congressional elections have intervened, and throughout the length and breadth of this Nation, social legislation was a major issue. That the electorate of this country gave overwhelming approbation to the plan as outlined in that message is conclusively evidenced by the preponderant majority of Democrats sitting in this House and the Senate. The conclusion is inescapable that the American people issued a mandate to Congress to pass legislation conforming to this plan.

Conditions in every section of our country call out for the immediate enactment of such legislation. The trends of the day indicate a marked increase in the percentage of older persons in the population of almost every community. The present organization of industry and commerce, with its scientific machinery and high-speed system of production, has shortened the period of gainful occupation. Persons over 60 years of age, and even under that age, may no longer find opportunity for occupation in industry with a resultant increase in the dependency of aged persons. The depression has swept away the life's earnings of even the most prudent persons who, through the exercise of thrift, frugality, and economy, had laid aside a competence for their old age. Through the failure of supposedly sound banks and the collapse of investments, they have been left with scant hope for the future and thrown on the bounty of the community.

To institutionalize these aged persons in poorhouses, with the consequent opprobrium associated, is repugnant to our enlightened sense of social justice. It has been demonstrated that this method is unsound, expensive, and wasteful.

Aside from the humane aspects of old-age pensions, we have discovered that a minimum buying power, especially in times of depression, is an economic necessity and particularly in view of the growing number of older persons in every community such a course will prove to be not only a wise but a sound one.

The provisions of this bill respecting old-age pensions require that the States assume their responsibility toward the aged persons within their borders. It provides that the State governments will be required to match the $15 monthly per person furnished by the Federal Government with at least an equal amount. This will not prevent the States from contributing a larger sum if they so desire. In other words, the minimum pension contemplated under this act is $30 a month—but it may be more if the States decide to contribute a larger amount than $15 toward the pension. Old-age pension laws are already in force in 29 States. My own State, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, has an old-age pension law in actual operation providing average payments of $24.50 a month. Consequently, by the enactment of this legislation, old-age pensions in Massachusetts will be increased to a minimum of $30 a month and, if the State decides to continue its present payments, they will amount to $39.50 a month.

There may be a desire on the part of many members for a more generous old-age pension, and experience may demonstrate that larger pensions will be desirable. But certainly $30 a month is better than no pension at all. The important thing is that we have, as a nation, recognized the humane principle of old-age assistance. We have the opportunity to inscribe into the laws of this Nation this great social measure and, in the light of experience, there will be ample opportunity for liberalization and amendment.

Many plans have been advanced having kindred objectives and I have given considerable sympathetic study to them. I sincerely respect the motives and purposes of their authors. However, we have before us a concrete plan which has involved a great deal of careful preparation and profound thought. It is capable of being placed into speedy operation and will extend much-needed relief throughout the Nation. I am confident that the fullness of time will develop the proper lines for expansion and amplification. This bill has been subjected to the most rigid and exhaustive study of the Committee on Ways and Means and embodies the fruits of their deliberations. It comes to us with the approval of our great liberal leader—a great progressive—who has devoted his every energy and all of his talents to the alleviation of the distress which has been visited upon our people.

I have not heard much criticism from members of the minority party concerning the old-age-pension feature of this bill. They are fully cognizant of the universal sentiment of the American people in favor of this subject. However, during the long continuance of their leadership, no such progressive measure was ever espoused by their administration. This great social reform has come about, as have so many others, through the sponsorship of the party now in control of the affairs of our Government. This measure has, however, afforded a target for the sniping and sharpshooting of some members of the minority party—and, in fact, they have gone far afield from the subject matter of this bill in leveling their attacks upon the present administration. They have chosen as their especial target the unemployment-insurance feature of this bill upon which to level their assaults. They assume to be the sole champions of industry and bewail the fact that the tax to be levied upon industry to create reserves for the payment of unemployment insurance will impede industry. They have failed, however, to calculate the terrible national economic loss caused by the unemployed millions in our country. As usual, they do not progress with the trend of the times and cleave to short-sighted policies of the old order. They refuse to envisage the power of unemployment reserves to stabilize purchasing power and act as a balance wheel in times of rising unemployment. They fail to visualize the tendency of unemployment insurance toward stabilizing and insuring steady, year-round employment.

Forward-looking and progressive industrialists have, however, realized the benefits of job insurance. They realize that a minimum purchasing power must be provided at all times in order that their own industries may not be strangulated for lack of consumers' markets. They now appreciate that in our modern complex industrial organization, a minimum purchasing power must be maintained at all times and that this can be accomplished only through the medium of unemployment insurance. Industrialists have discovered that it is a false philosophy to exploit the worker and, when he is no longer useful, to throw him on the charity of the community. They understand that it is cheaper to build up reserves to maintain the worker in a position where he will not be dependent upon others than it is to pay their proportionate tax to maintain him on public relief.

The objection has been made that we are not ready to act on unemployment insurance as yet. It is urged by some that further and more protracted study be given to the whole question of unemployment compensation before we take any action. In this connection I quote from a statement recently made by Lincoln Filene, a liberal and forward-looking merchant of Boston, Mass.:

> It is said that we should have further study of this whole question of unemployment compensation before we take any action. I am impatient with this position. It may be that some individuals require further time to study the question and to make up their minds, but this is not a subject which has been at all neglected, and the essential basic studies necessary to give us the information on which to form a considered opinion have been made. For 15 years, under the leadership of John R. Commons, of Wisconsin, there has been thorough and painstaking research into the whole question. In the East the Seven-State Commission on Unemployment Insurance, appointed in 1931 by Franklin D. Roosevelt, then Governor of New York, made studies and investigations of its own. In my own State of Massachusetts a special commission on stabilization of employment, appointed by the Governor in 1931, also studied the underlying principles which should be written into an unemployment compensation law, and the legislature now has before it the King unemployment reserve bill, based on these investigations. The State of Wisconsin is the first to have an unemployment-compensation law, and although it is still early, preliminary reports of experience under this law are available.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like at this point to incorporate as part of my remarks a resolution recently adopted on the passage of unemployment legislation by the General Court of Massachusetts.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Boston.

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of the passage of national unemployment-insurance legislation

Whereas there prevails in the United States of America a grave condition of economic insecurity, more especially among the working classes; and

Whereas it is apparent to all students of economics that this condition is likely to continue in a greater or lesser degree; and

Whereas the governmental agencies have been forced to assume the responsibility which properly belongs to industry, namely, to provide work and wages for the employable workers of the Nation; and

Whereas millions of employable workers, without fault on their part, are without employment and are thereby forced to undergo the humiliating necessity of relying upon public-welfare agencies or private charities for the necessaries of life; and

Whereas any change made by one State and not joined in by all States would inflict an unfair burden upon the industry of the State making the change: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts favors the immediate enactment by Congress of suitable legislation creating a national compulsory unemployment-insurance plan providing for a fund to be made up of contributions by both employer and employee from which, in times of unemployment, worthy unemployed workers may be adequately paid for a portion, at least, of the periods of their unemployment: And be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be forwarded forthwith by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States and to the presiding officers of both branches of the Congress of the United States and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

In house of representatives adopted March 27, 1935.

In senate, adopted in concurrence April 1, 1935.

A true copy.

Attest:

[SEAL] F. W. COOK,

Secretary of the Commonwealth.

I am sorry that time does not permit me to dwell on the other features of this bill. However, they are all integral parts of our social and economic situation and should, in my opinion, be treated in one comprehensive plan.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important steps we shall take in this Congress. It will mark a new era in our methods of dealing with social problems. It will carry out the promises and pledges of the Democratic Party and its great leader, Franklin D. Roosevelt. I am sure that it will win universal approbation and the high regard and lasting thanks of the American people for the Congress which enacted this great humane legislation.

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address by the Rev. James R. Cox, The Shepherd of the Jobless.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. TREADWAY. I reserve the right to object. Who is the Reverend James R. Cox?

Mr. MORITZ. He led the jobless army to Washington, and was once a candidate for President.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not that a request that should be made in the House rather than in Committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania did, making a request after seeking to revise and extend his remarks, and now wants to include this radio address.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think I shall object to that being done in the Committee. This is a speech by an outside person, not a Member of Congress. I feel constrained to object under the circumstances.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH].

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, someone has correctly said that a statesman is one who is thinking about the next generation, while a politician is one who is thinking about the next election. If that statement is true, I do not believe there is any scarcity of either in this country, as has been clearly demostrated in the consideration of the Economic Security Act, and more particularly that part of the proposed law which deals with old-age pensions.

I have spent a good deal of time, as I presume most Members of Congress have, studying the provision of the bill now under consideration and studying the hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means. This legislation, in my opinion, is one of the most forward-looking steps which has been taken by our Government during its entire existence. There is no doubt but that our problems are social as well as economic. There is no doubt but that our country as a whole has become decidedly old-age pension minded. This has resulted in part, I am sure, from agitation of measures, some of which are unquestionably unreasonable and unworkable. If such agitation and propaganda was necessary, however, to sell this country on the question of old-age pensions, it has, in my opinion, been fully justified.

I want to commend the able chairman of this committee, Mr. DOUGHTON, and his associates, for the very splendid and statesmanlike work on their part in giving us the bill which we are now considering. I do not think it is a perfect bill, but I do think it is a reasonably constructive one when considered in its entirety.

I hope to have the opportunity of voting for an amendment which will eliminate item no. 7, in section 2, page 3, providing that, "if the State or any of its political subdivisions collects from the estate of any recipient of old-age assistance any amount with respect to old-age assistance furnished him under the plan, one-half of the net amount so collected shall be promptly paid to the United States", since such provision will result in practically no benefit to the Government and could be the source of much annoyance and trouble on the part of those receiving such benefits. It is my belief also that this relief should be administered uniformly throughout the country without regard to what the various States may do, and without requiring any participation by such States. To attempt to administer it otherwise will mean that thousands of deserving individuals, who are just as much entitled to relief on the part of the Federal Government as are those in the States who qualify under this act, will be forced to suffer from poverty and want, just as they are doing now. I want to stress the fact right here, Mr. Chairman, that we are not granting relief to States; but that we are attempting to grant relief to individuals, and a suffering individual in Arkansas, Mississippi, or Texas is just as much entitled to this help as is an individual similarly situated in Pennsylvania, New York, or California. It is not justice to the individual to penalize him because his State is either unwilling or unable to meet the requirements imposed by this bill, and every Member of this House knows that this is what will be done unless that provision is eliminated. If $15 is the maximum amount which the Federal Government is able to pay each person, then let the Federal Government pay not to exceed $15; and if the States want to pay an equal amount, a smaller amount, or a greater amount, they will, of course, have this privilege. I believe, too, that the age limit should be 60 rather than 65. If these changes are made, the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, which is approximately $50,000,000, should be some $150,000,000, because it is admitted that less than one-half of the needy and deserving can qualify during the first year as to State requirements; and, of course, lowering the age limit will call for additional money. It is infinitely more desirable that such people actually receive $15 per month than that they be promised $30, $50, or even $200, which they can never receive. It may be correctly argued that the Federal Government will save money by imposing this provision. This cannot be disputed. It may likewise be said that the Federal Government will save still more money by not passing any social-security law at all, but we are not enacting this law for the purpose of saving money; we are enacting it for the purpose of granting relief, a thing which should have been done generations ago.

Mr. Chairman, as I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, the consideration and discussion of social legislation offers the most fertile field imaginable for playing politics. How easy and natural it is in discussing this bill on the floor of the House, or in writing interested constituents, to say that the amount stipulated herein is wholly inadequate. Yet we who have studied this proposed law know that it is about as much as our Government will be able to stand. We know too that $15 is a great deal better than nothing, and that the amount can be increased from time to time by subsequent Congresses when we are able to provide the money for paying more. A great deal has been said and written during recent months to the effect that each recipient should be paid $200 per month, and Members of Congress have been told in no uncertain terms that their political future depended upon their supporting such a so-called "plan." The so-called "Townsend plan" is not a plan at all; it is simply a utopian dream. The various sponsors of the bill are not in agreement with each other. Each sponsor's plan is different today to what it was yesterday.

Many people who signed petitions were misinformed; were told that a straight 2-percent sales tax would raise sufficient money to pay each person over 60 years of age $200.

The chairman of the Townsend Club for Runnels County, Mr. Key, a splendid and intelligent man, who presented a petition to me containing more than 9,000 names secured in his county, assured me positively that a straight 2-percent sales tax would raise enough money to pay $200 to each person over 60 years of age. But the revised McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, which is the bill the Townsend advocates are now supporting, provides, in section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby levied a tax of 2 percent upon the fair gross dollar value of each transaction done within the United States and Territories; also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax equal to one-tenth of the tax levied upon all incomes under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1934, or any amendment thereto; also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax of 2 percent upon the fair dollar value of all transfers of property by devise, bequest, or other testamentary disposition or legal descent and distribution of property, as now or hereafter taxable under the provisions of the Revenue Act of 1934, or any amendment thereto; and also, in addition to all other taxes, a tax of 2 percent upon the fair gross dollar value of every gift in excess of the fair value of $500.

It is an admitted fact that the transaction tax will, in many cases, amount to more than 10 percent. Even with all the taxes above provided for in such bill, it is admitted by most of the proponents of the measure that it will fall far short of producing sufficient money to pay $200 per month as originally proposed. Therefore it becomes quite evident that this proposal has not materialized to the point that it may correctly be called a plan.

Members of Congress have been threatened with defeat unless they support the Townsend plan. As for me, I owe no sacred and binding obligations to the people who sent me to Congress to be reelected, but I am under a solemn and sacred obligation to such people to contend for the things which I believe to be to the best interest of our country as a whole, and to oppose such measures as I believe detrimental to its welfare, and this I propose to do.

As Members of Congress we should ever be mindful of the fact that for every Member who shirks his responsibility, who plays politics, who fails to meet every issue squarely and honestly, an additional obligation is placed upon those stalwart and honorable members who are not willing to sacrifice their honor and integrity to make their political fortunes more secure.

I am going to support the Doughton bill. I hope it will be amended as I have indicated. I am for it because it is a sane and sensible plan, and one which can be attained, providing against want and poverty for millions of our splendid and deserving aged people, and I believe they are going to be deeply grateful to this Congress for its passage, with such amendments as Congress may see fit to make. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, first let me take this opportunity of making the following corrective statement. The other day when the rule was brought in under which this social-security bill is being considered, I voted in opposition to the rule, not because, as the papers carried the item, that I am for the Townsend pension plan, but because I felt that any plan or bill or idea of legislation that any Member of the House thought was worthy of deliberation by the House, is entitled to consideration. Those who favored the Lundeen bill and those who favored the Townsend plan seemed to fear—and their fears were to some extent grounded in good reason—that under House Resolution 197, their measures would not get a day in court. Being an advocate of free and open debate on all questions of relatively important public interest, I voted as I did on the rule in order to show my disposition toward the subject of consideration of the measures, and not necessarily because I favor either the Lundeen or the Townsend plan. The issue on the resolution was entirely distinct from the issue of approval or disapproval of the proposals contained in the bills to which I have referred. My position on those bills will be evident when they are before the House.

It seems to me that we are now debating a bill that is not fundamental legislation. It was disappointing to me when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER], a distinguished member of the committee which reported this bill to the House, stated in the course of his very eloquent and able address this morning, that this social-security bill is not temporary legislation and is not emergency legislation. It is unfortunate that it is not that sort of legislation.

In some respects this bill may be thought of as being the beginning of the end of everything in national enactments. As drawn, the age requirement is 65 years, or until 1940, a permissible requirement of 70 years. The amount granted by the Federal Government to each State is to be an amount equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended by the State as old-age assistance under the State plan, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $30, and 5 percent of such amount for administering the State plan.

Already, Mr. Chairman, we have a number of other Federal Government pension plans introduced in the session which intend going far beyond the $30 limit. One large and important and comparatively rich State has a delegation in this House commonly reported to be a unit, with the exception of one member, on a proposition to grant a much larger monthly assistance, with the age requirement at 60 years, which is 5 years under the stipulation in this bill.

There are many things attractive and alluring in such propositions as this, and public support is given them willingly, thoughtlessly, and hopefully. The next session of Congress will see us confronted by endeavors to make the age requirement not 65 years, not 60 years, but 55 years. The next political campaign will see a demand for an increased amount of assistance. As the years go by, the age requirement will be reduced and the amount of the pension will be increased. The candidate who proposes the lowest age requirement and the highest amount of monthly assistance money will, by the very nature of things, receive the largest vote. He will enter the legislative halls of State and Nation committed on those issues, and the end will be not yet, not any amount, not any limit, but birth and blue sky.

Legislation of this character is fundamentally unsound except as an emergency and temporary measure. The idea is wrong. It recognizes a serious condition and attempts to deal with it as fixed and permanent part of our modern life. What should be done is that the condition which seems to justify this proposition as an emergency should be removed as speedily as possible from our existence.

How shall this be done? The remedy itself is plain enough, but the way to achieve it is not so apparent. The way to take adequate care of the aged is to provide a proper return to the man who labors by bone or brain his period of productive years. It will be necessary to change the industrial and economic set-up of this country and to give the laboring man and worker by skill or brawn a living wage, something they have never had except perhaps during a brief period of the late war and shortly thereafter.

If a man be given a living wage during his productive years, he can provide against the vicissitudes of old age by his own thrift and savings. So long as a man who works is given a mere pittance, so long as he has always the wolf at the door, and has always an empty cupboard, it is impossible for him to store up a surplus account upon which he can draw when age creeps upon him and his infirmities reduce and restrict his earning power.

Without a living wage it is and will forever remain impossible for the toiler in office or field or mine or store or factory to take unto himself a wife and family, to raise and feed and clothe and house and educate his children, to pay the necessary medical and hospital bills, to live as he, his wife, and his children should live in his producing term. All odds how thrifty and industrious he may be, without a decent living wage, his living will not be decent and properly livable, and he cannot store up an abundance nor even a comfort for his declining years.

The Government wholesale pensioning plan, except when limited to various degrees of misfortune and the results thereof, is fundamentally unsound, is destructive of initiative, of the habits of thrift and prudence, of courage and persistence, robs the human race of the urge of that necessity which mothers invention, and tends to evaporate the spirit.

It is only an emergence and a temporary measure, and because I so regard it, that I shall support this bill. The enactment of this bill will by no means solve our difficulties, it may for the time alleviate some of our ills.

When we readjust our industrial, business, and commercial life as we should, and give the man who toils and the woman also a proper return for the hours they spend and the muscular force and nervous energy which they exert in their occupation we will be able to reach a proper solution of our problems, but not until then.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy that the matter of providing social security has been brought to the Congress. I think it is the most important and far-reaching modern problem of government, certainly for this country. Society has become so organized in this industrial and commercial age that old-age security and unemployment insurance have become essential to the very preservation of our civilized system. The thing that has been tearing at the hearts of men and women, that has been destroying their happiness, is the fear of old age, the fear of dependence when their period of usefulness in industry is ended. Two greatest fears that are at present destroying the pleasure of living for most people are, first, the terror that one will be unable to support a family in decency; that he will be unable to retain the respect of his children, all the more terrifying because he is a victim of a system of industrial organization in the control of which he has no part. The very process of civilization has been crushing the aspirations of the individual, because we are living in a corporate organized society. Then there is the twin fear that when the useful period is over—and that period is ever decreasing in the lowering age of the individual because of the terrific strain of the mechanical age—one must go into disgrace in old age; that one will not be able to hold up his head and provide his own security for old age; yet in this highly mechanized and highly competitive organized society it is impossible for the great mass of people to lay aside sufficient to provide their own security in decency in old age. The competition of life is so terrific today that it is not possible. With the blank earning periods of unemployment, what little has been accumulated is usually dissipated in those periods, so that it is clearly as a recognition of the responsibility of society as it is organized today to the individual that the Congress now turns its attention to providing that security which the individual in the great mass of cases can no longer provide.

In the day of individualists, when the average boy finished school or left home to go to work and accumulate enough to establish his own business, he could control his own destinies and thereby have reasonable assurance of raising a family in some comfort and decency. He had some assurance that if he applied his energy and his thrift he could lay aside a little estate with which to retire after he had educated his children. Those days have gone. General opportunity for that no longer exists. We find ourselves today, when we leave school or home, thrown into a great machine in which we are not even a cog; a machine the running of which we understand little of, and over which we have less control. This machine is the product of the age. It is the product of a mechanized civilization. Business has changed from the period when the individual could establish his own little concern and could grow, when he could provide for his family and his own old age, until today industry and commerce are so organized in great corporations, in great chains, that they have absorbed the business opportunities, and the mass of people must look for a livelihood in the employ of these great corporations. The days when business was local and profits remained in the local community and continued to build up that community and continued to pay local taxes is gone. The former local business of the individual has now become a mere branch of great national corporations. Profits are drawn out of those communities and taken into a few financial centers.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. Does the gentleman feel that the States should participate in the way of this pension and be required to pay before the Federal Government would make any contribution?

Mr. MAAS. I am rather inclined to agree with the President in his position on that, although I will admit to the gentleman I am in some doubt myself. It does seem to me that if the States do not participate you will have an uneven situation, because what is necessary in one city or in one State to provide security in old age, bears no relationship to the amount needed in some other part of the country. Standards are different. Climatic conditions, the background, the whole thing is different. I am not sure that it will work that way from a practical standpoint, but I think we ought to try it. I believe we should attempt a system of participation, but I do not think we ought to place a limitation upon the participation that we have. In the first place, the $30, which we assume would be the maximum, $15 by the Federal Government and $15 by the States, is not adequate. It is not sufficient, for instance, for those residing in a city, to provide genuine security for old age. I think this problem involved in this bill is more than a problem. I think it is a number of problems. I think the wiser method of legislation would have been to separate the various problems. Old-age pensions is a problem in itself. I believe we ought first to provide an intelligent old-age system. I do not think we can do that by one definite, broad legislative bill covering a number of subjects. The question of unemployment insurance is one which, of necessity, must follow the operation of the old-age pension. If a device is worked out whereby an adequate old-age pension is provided, so that it takes the older people off of the active rolls of employment, it will vitally affect the question of unemployment. If we take the older people off the active rolls of employment, we may not have any serious unemployment. Certainly we are not going to know what the unemployment problem is until we have had in actual operation the old-age pension.

I do not believe we ought to place any limitation on the contribution of the Federal Government. Certainly, though, if we do it should not be less than $25, which would mean a maximum of $50, unless the State were willing to go beyond the limit contributed by the Federal Government. I am not so sure that the system of contribution by States will work. I would like to see it tried, though. I would like to see the States placed upon their mettle. I am fearful that if we do not do that, we are going to destroy the sovereignty of States; we are going to destroy the sense of local responsibility; we are going to find that in a short time our States will be merely political, artificial subdivisions of an all-powerful central government. I think that is unwise. I think one of the things that led to the great era of prosperity came about through the cooperation of great individualists, but with a local sense of responsibility. The very industrial organization of this country has conspired to destroy local self-government, and I do not think we ought to carry that on any further by legislation that will kill what little local pride and spirit of independence is left.

I think that State participation certainly should be tried to see if it can work, but I think further that we ought to separate some of the questions that are involved in this bill. I believe we should devote our major attention this session to the most important question of old-age pensions.

Much of what is in this bill now is of necessity guesswork. Not sufficient time has been taken in drafting the bill to first study the effect of plans in use in Europe, as they might point a guide to our problem. Insufficient study has been given to our various State old-age systems. Certainly there is no precedent for the system it is hereby proposed to set up. Particularly there is no demonstration by the committee that a proper study has been possible of the relationship between the various items of social security proposed in the bill. No intelligent unemployment plan can be devised until we know more about how the old-age plan will work out. No guide to the working out of old-age annuities can be possible until the other two plans have been put into operation.

This matter is so far-reaching in its consequences that haste must be tempered with experience. This is not emergency legislation, but adoption of a fundamental and basic new principle of both economics and government and of a permanent nature.

Because I believe so heartily and feel so deeply upon the subject of social security I shall vote for this bill to register my desire to have society recognize its social obligations to the individual by providing for old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. This does not mean that I am satisfied with this bill as it is presented to the House. I feel the benefits are grossly inadequate to accomplish the real objective sought for. The maximum old-age benefit under this bill—$30 a month by combining both a State contribution and the maximum Federal allotment—is not sufficient to keep old people in decent comfort, to which they are entitled, after giving a life of service to organized society.

To be effective, the benefits must be sufficient to induce the older people to leave the competitive field of employment to the younger people starting in their active careers of life and to those engaged in raising their families. If the benefits are not enough to do that, the whole plan is a failure and defeats its own purpose. The benefits, on the other hand, must not be so large that they will destroy the individual's ambition and incentive to be thrifty and save for his own security in declining years. If all incentive is destroyed, all ambition for progress will disappear. We would become a stagnant nation. In time there would not be enough national income to provide any social benefits, for old age, unemployment, or any other purpose.

The objective of social-security legislation must not be to supplant all private incentive to the individual to provide his own active and retired security, but to take up the slack for those who are unable to do so.

Since the profits of industry now largely are drained from the local communities to a few financial centers, it is essential that they be redistributed back through the country to keep purchasing power flowing evenly and constantly. Federal revenues are largely from taxes on incomes and, therefore, Federal contributions to old-age pensions is a wise, just, and fair method of taking care of the old people and at the same time preventing unnatural accumulations of great wealth, which inevitably stagnates commerce and destroys employment.

I think the committee has done a fine job in the time it has taken, but on a matter so all-embracing as this, 2 years of study would not be too much. I think the pending bill should not be considered the ultimate word by any means. I think this is the proper time to make the first step and I am very happy to see it being done. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7260, the social-security bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. GINGERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GINGERY. Mr. Speaker, for years as one who has been active in public affairs I have stood on the liberal side of all legislation. I want to take this opportunity to put in this RECORD, that as far back as 1915 as a member of the lower house in Harrisburg, I fought and saw placed on the statute books the compensation law, womans' suffrage, child labor, and so forth. I also voted for the 48-hour law for women in industry against 56 hours.

Four years ago I was a candidate for the office of State senator, and advocated old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. We now have 20 bills before this House on the subject of old-age pensions.

Many men have very decided opinions on this kind of legislation. It seems to me that they are all serious on this question, and see every day that the aged people must be taken out of industry, and given enough to live on in a way that all Americans call living. There are many great ideas in most of these bills before the House, but it seems to be the old story. Men will not sit down at the table and give and take. Again the old story. The friends of the administration must step in and put their bill over. This bill it seems to me does not go far enough but I must admit that I think it only safe and good business to start small and grow. Correct the faults of this legislation from time to time until we have the best law of this kind on earth.

Many Members have opposed parts of all this legislation before us and it is all in the RECORD. I still have an open mind and will listen and suggest up until it is time to vote on this bill for final passage. Old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, pensions for the blind are coming and they must come soon.

I have given a lot of time to all bills before the House. I have signed a petition to bring out of committee the Townsend plan, as I feel there is much good in this legislation, which should be incorporated in the administration bill.

AMERICANISM AND OTHER ISMS

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein an address delivered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] in the city of Minneapolis, in my district, on Tuesday of last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] in the city of Minneapolis on Tuesday of last week:

AMERICANISM AND OTHER ISMS

Mr. Chairman, members of the Citizens' Alliance, and guests, I am reminded by this very generous introduction of a statement made about me by a Member of Congress who disagreed with what I was advocating. He said: "This fellow FISH is all right, he was known as a good football player 25 years ago", said some nice things about my war record, but added, "he is no statesman." My answer to that was that there will be few, if any, Members of Congress remembered 25 years from now for anything at all. [Laughter.] But one of the few things that I learned at Harvard College was the definition of the word "statesman", and that was that he was a dead politician [laughter], and I am not claiming any such honor at the present time.

It is true, I do come from the same congressional district as the President, but whether he is my constituent or I am his has not yet been decided. [Laughter.] But I want you people in Minneapolis and those, as we say in New York, listening in over the rädio [laughter] to understand at the start that I am not here as a spokesman of the President on this occasion [laughter].

By way of further introduction of myself, I come from a somewhat rural district on the banks of the Hudson River. One of my farmer constituents wrote me a letter and asked me if I would have poultry placed on the free list for breeding and exhibition purposes. Being a good protective Republican, I did not care so much about placing anything on the free list, but I carried out the request. I went before the Ways and Means Committee and presented the best arguments I knew how. They were evidently well received, because Mr. Hawley, the chairman of the committee, wrote on a little slip of paper: "Poultry on the free list for breeding and exhibition purposes" and placed my name on it and sent it along to the chairman of the subcommittee on the free list, who was not present at the time. To show you, ladies and gentlemen, the influence and importance of your present speaker in shaping important tariff legislation, it came back and was written into the bill in the House of Representatives: "Poultry and fish on the free list for breeding and exhibition purposes." [Laughter]

At the very outset I want to make my own political position clear so that there can be no misunderstanding. Many of you who know I come from New York may think that I am a sort of an ultraconservative, an ulrareactionary, a Fascist, a representative of Wall Street, or a representative of special privilege. Although I am not permitted—nor would I do so anyhow—to speak on politics this evening, all I care to say is that I am an Abraham Lincoln Republican. [Applause.] I have an abiding faith in the American people, in popular government, and in our free institutions [applause], and I learned all of my politics at the feet of Theodore Roosevelt. [Applause.] I followed him in 1912 on a platform of social and industrial justice. I believe in those principles even more today, but I believe in putting those principles into effect under the Constitution of the United States of America [applause], and not above or beyond or outside of the Constitution, as some people propose at the present time. [Applause.]

I am very much honored this evening that some members of the United Spanish War Veteran camp named after my cousin, Sergeant Hamilton Fish, who was the first soldier killed in the Spanish War, have come to this meeting tonight. I would say to those veterans that there never was a war fought by any country for purer or higher or more idealistic motives. We went to war with Spain to free Cuba and to drive out the militaristic autocracy that was then governing it and the Spanish Army that was murdering and butchering the Cuban people. The American people became resentful and when the Maine was blown up they could not control their anger. They went to war to free Cuba. We did exactly what we said we would do, we drove the Spaniards out; we cleaned up Cuba; eliminated the dread diseases and restored the Government to the Cuban people.

When we said we would do that, all the nations of the world laughed at us. No nation before had ever done such a thing. It had always been a question of seizing and grabbing additional territory. But the record of the Spanish War veterans and of our Government proved that we kept our promises and pledges.

The reason I stress it now is that it is one of the main arguments of all the Communists, Socialists, pink intellectuals, and radicals, wherever they are and wherever they meet, to denounce the United States Government as a great, avaricious, imperialistic Nation, seeking to grab territory throughout Latin America. That is one of their means of propaganda, in colleges and schools, trying to show that the United States is a militaristic and imperialistic Nation, when the truth is—and I can say it with some authority because I have served for 15 years on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I am to some degree the spokesman of my party (at least in the House) on that question—there is not a single Member of Congress, Democrat or Republican, that would take a foot of territory in Latin America if it were given to us on a gold platter. [Applause.] Yet this propaganda goes almost unanswered.

We have freed Cuba; we have withdrawn our troops from Haiti, and the marines from Nicaragua. We won the Philippines in the War with Spain and then paid $20,000,000 to Spain for the Philippines, and now, by an overwhelming vote of the Congress, we have offered independence to them. In spite of all that record, we are pointed out and denounced by all radicals as being a militaristic and imperialistic nation.

We sent our marines down into Nicaragua in accordance with the Monroe Doctrine, to preserve law and order and stop a blood feud, where two opposing parties were killing each other off. We sent them down there at the expense of the American taxpayers and the lives and blood of the marines. We did not do this to exploit Nicaragua; there was nothing to exploit. There is nothing we want there—no gold, silver, or oil. Probably all the Nicaraguans would agree that they would like to have us come down there and spend a billion dollars of American money to build a canal through Nicaragua; but there is nothing that we want in any of those foreign lands, nor have we any aspirations for conquered territory anywhere in the world.

I stress the point because only a short time ago, in speaking in Vassar College, which is in my district, a British Socialist member of Parliament denounced everything in the United States. Of course, he called everything wrong, rotten, and corrupt in America, but in addition he said that because we were a capitalistic nation we were also the greediest and most avaricious imperialistic nation in the world.

I want to say to you that if any of those old countries, such as Great Britain, France, Italy, or Germany, had been located where we are in the United States for the last 100 years, those imperialistic nations would have grabbed up Mexico and Central America and most of South America long before this. That is the difference between the United States, a peace-loving and peaceful Nation, and other nations, but that kind of propaganda still goes on all over our country.

I do not propose to speak on any of the political issues in Congress, with the exception of referring to two of the recent bills, one that passed the other day, and one now pending for the conscription of wealth and industry in time of war. I will just mention this $4,800,000,000 bill, because there is a principle involved. I consider the granting of this money to the President to be a rape of our legislative powers in the Congress and a betrayal of our representative form of government. It makes no difference whether the President is good, bad, or indifferent, whether he is a Republican or a Democrat, it amounts to the destruction of the legislative power, handing over to the President the control of the purse strings, the very reason for the existence of Congress itself. Here, for the first time in all these years of our history, Congress by its own act supinely surrenders and abrogates those powers and turns them over to the Chief Executive, with the result that the Congress is left almost naked and defenseless, as far as its control over appropriations is concerned. It practically has no more power left than Gandhi has clothing. [Laughter.]

If it was not this kind of a meeting I could speak at length on that particular principle, not questioning the need of relief itself, because I am for relief, but questioning the principle involved, the changing of our representative form of government and our constitutional form of government without the consent or approval of the American people. [Applause.]

There is likewise pending in the Congress a bill to take the profit out of war, to conscript wealth and industry, man power, and soldiers alike. We are a great peaceful and peace-loving people. There is absolutely no reason for America to go to war. The only possible way that we can ever get into war again is by insisting on selling and shipping munitions of war and weapons of war to belligerent nations with whom we are at peace to destroy people with whom we are at peace. That is what got us into the World War. We did not seek to enter the World War, and it is well to remember now that we did not start the World War either. We went into the war merely because our ships, flying the American flag, were attacked on the high seas by German submarines, without warning, and our ships were sunk; with the result that we were forced into the war against our own desire and against our own will.

It is also well to remember that when we went into the war we did our part. We sent 2,000,000 soldiers to the other side and turned the tide of defeat into victory. After the armistice was signed and the victory won we brought our troops home. We asked for nothing and we got exactly what we asked for, nothing at all [laughter and applause]; no reparations, no indemnities, no conquered territory, no plunder of any kind. We haven't anything to apologize for. But soon after the war was over our Allies, whom we had saved, even refused to pay the interest on their war debts, and they now refuse to pay back any of the money that we loaned them even after the armistice.

So I say, as far as I am concerned, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if the European nations insist on going mad, insist on arming to the teeth, insist on making war, it is their war and not ours. [Applause.] The policy of the United States should be to keep out of all foreign entanglements and intrigues, to stop passing moral judgments on other nations, to cease trying to police the world, to stop pulling the chestnuts out of the fire for foreign nations, and, above all, to mind our own business, because we have plenty of problems to mind at home. [Applause.]

Although I believe in our profit system and in our industrial system, based upon private initiative and reasonable profits, if it comes to the question of selling munitions and arms to belligerent nations for the sake of profit, I urge the strictest regulation over those munitions of war. And if that does not stop it, I would vote for Government ownership of the munitions factories. [Applause.]

As a veteran, I want to tell you that the time must never come again when the United States of America will be forced into war because of the sale of munitions of war. If we are to have another war, it must be in defense of the United States and not in defense of war profits or the munition makers of America. [Applause.] There is no reason for this country of ours to be the potential slaughterhouse of the world or the symbol for arms or munitions of war backed by the dollar sign. If I had been present in Congress today I would have voted to support the program of the American Legion, to conscript all wealth, all labor, all industry, all man power, and all soldiers in case of any future war. [Applause.]

I used the word "wealth" and by that I am reminded of the distribution of wealth. I do not propose to enter into any argument with HUEY LONG, but I would point out the fact that wealth has been more distributed in the last 5 years, since 1929, than in the entire history of the United States. Rich men have lost from a half to two-thirds of their fortunes, some have lost all, and some former millionaires are now penniless. I am not so concerned about the distribution of wealth as I am about the distribution of poverty. I am not concerned about the distribution of wealth because, if things continue the way they are going for another 2 years, you won't have any wealth to distribute.

I have been asked to speak to you tonight on communism. I do so with some reluctance. Some 5 years ago I was appointed chairman of a House committee to investigate Communist activities and propaganda in the United States. At that time I was attacked from all sides by the radicals, socialists, and Communists naturally, but also by the conservatives, because they thought I was interfering with their God-given right to make an almighty dollar through trade with Soviet Russia. I do not suppose anybody was more attacked or more malinged. In recent years I have not spoken very often on this subject, but I will do so tonight by special request.

I am no alarmist. I do not anticipate any revolution from the Communists tomorrow morning at dawn, or the next day, or the next year, because the Communists are far too intelligent. They know if they started a revolution by armed force, using a Russian word, they would be liquidated in 2 weeks' time by the Regular Army, the National Guard, the American Legion, and other forces for good government in the United States [applause], and that is why we will have no revolution from the Communists.

But it is a very important issue, because the Communists are fanatics. They will do 100 percent more to tear down and destroy our Government than we will to uphold it and defend it.

Furthermore, they are well organized, although few in number. There are probably not more than a million Communists and Communist sympathizers in the United States at the present time.

The reason I abhor Communism, perhaps more than most, is that I am naturally somewhat of a liberal. I believe in the right of the people to govern themselves and in the preservation and extension of democracy, whereas communism is the most despotic form of government in the world, backed by force and terror and the bread ticket in Soviet Russia, where the people have no rights and no liberties of any kind such as we know them in this country of ours. We have no right to pass judgment on foreign nations. We have no right really to question the kind of government that exists in Soviet Russia, only so far as it interferes with our own Government in the United States.

Now, what are the aims and purposes of the Communists? There are some things commendable about the Communists, because we know exactly where they stand and what principles they advocate. It is entirely different, I am ashamed to say, with the Republicans and Democrats, who make their platforms one day and begin to forget about it the next—especially the Democratic Party. [Laughter and applause.]

All Communists, no matter where they are, whether they are in Soviet Russia, Berlin, Paris, New York, Los Angeles, or Pekin, advocate identically the same principles. Therefore, it is very easy to describe what they are, and I believe that merely stating those principles is the best way to combat communism in the United States. They cannot appeal to intelligent free American citizens, whose rights and liberties are guaranteed by the Constitution.

First, Communists seek to destroy all religion and teach hatred of God.

Second, they seek to destroy private property and inheritance.

Third, to use the Communist International at Moscow to spread strikes, riots, sabotage, and industrial unrest in all noncommunistic countries.

Fourth, to promote the bitterest class hatred.

Fifth, to bring about a class or civil war in order to establish a soviet form of government, under the red flag, with the world capital at Moscow.

Those are the principles of communism. None of them can appeal to the free people in this country. Therefore, I say, the way to combat communism is by education, to point out to the American people just what these Communists stand for, and communism will not go very far. The trouble is that these Communists are fanatics, and are well organized. But another reason why they cannot appeal to Americans is that they are not an American party at all. They are a section of the Communist International, taking their orders, glorying in taking their orders, from Moscow, and when it comes to spreading their doctrines and inciting strikes, riots, and sabotage it comes directly under the orders from Moscow. Therefore, American citizens cannot have very much sympathy with alien doctrines of that kind.

There are so many women in this audience that I think I will say just a few words on the religious aspect. There are quite a number of Protestant ministers who seem to like to uphold and commend communism and try to make out that the Communists are merely against the old Greek Orthodox Church. That is not so for a minute. They are against all religions. They teach hatred of God in the public schools of Russia every day. They make it compulsory to such an extent that when the young people of Russia go back home and find that their parents maintain, or have the temerity to maintain, any kind of religious belief, they must hold their parents in contempt and disobey them.

It is not atheism—anyone has the right not to believe; but it is the bitterest kind of militant teaching of the hatred of God and the destruction of all forms of religion, whether it is Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, or the old Greek Orthodox Church. But these Protestant ministers confuse the issue between the communism of the early Christians, a communism of love, based upon the Kingdom of God, and the communism of Soviet Russia, which is the communism of hate and hatred of God and all religions. That kind of doctrine cannot go very far, when understood, in the United States of America. I do not parade my religion. I admit that the different articles of faith, dogmas, and creeds do not mean a great deal to me, but at the same time I believe religion is the greatest moral force in the world [applause], and that if you wipe it out, as the Communists propose, you go back to the paganism and barbarism of thousands of years ago and virtually destroy civilization as we know it.

I took my committee up to visit some Communist camps a few years ago, in my own congressional district, right in Dutchess County, the county that the President comes from himself. When I took my committee up there I was abused, as usual. I suppose they thought I ought to have gone back to Congress, looked up some musty precedents and written up my report from them. I wanted to find out whether such camps existed, what kind of boys and girls went there, and what they did. I found there were three camps, turning out about 10,000 young boys and girls. About 97 percent of them were aliens, who ought to make better citizens than those of us that happen to be born in this country. They came here with their parents to enjoy the equal opportunities under the law and the protection of the Constitution. But what did they teach in those camps? Hatred of all our great men—Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt—hatred of all our free institutions, hatred of our public-school system, urging the overthrow of our republican form of government by force and violence; teaching, lastly, hatred of the American flag; and then sending them back into the city of New York to be good American citizens.

That is what is going on through the length and breadth of this land. There is hardly a large State that has not got these summer camps teaching these Communist doctrines. There are Communist schools right in the hearts of our cities. These doctrines have even honeycombed certain colleges in our country, colleges where young boys and girls are sent by their parents, who have made enough money under our industrial system and free institutions to send them there, and there they are told that everything is wrong and rotten and corrupt in America.

I say to you that if these alien Communists do not like America and our ways of doing things and our institutions, all they have got to do is to go back home. [Applause.] But if they persist in spreading this doctrine of poison and hatred and urging the overthrow of our system of government by force and violence, then it is clearly the duty of the Congress of the United States to enact laws to deport all alien Communists. [Applause.]

They do not fear our police, or our courts, or our jails. The only thing they fear is to be deported back home, to the country they came from, where they would have no freedom of speech and can enjoy the low wage scales and oppressive laws they have been accustomed to in the past. I say to you, the time has come to deport these alien Communists and give their jobs to American citizens who believe in America. [Applause.]

VOICE. Why don't you do it?

Mr. FISH. Well, I haven't the majority myself.

Now, we haven't any right to question what government any other nation may have. However, as far as Russia is concerned, it is somewhat different, because the Soviet government, through the Communist International, insists on spreading riots, strikes, sabotage, and industrial unrest in America and trying to impose upon us their form of government. Therefore, we have at least the right to see what is going on in Soviet Russia at the present time.

Incredible as it may seem, last year, in what was formerly the granary of Europe, 6,000,000 Russians starved to death under the Communist system of government. Why, if a hundred or a dozen Americans should starve to death under our industrial system, known as capitalism, it would be headlined through every paper in America as the doom of capitalism. Yet, over in Soviet Russia, which hitherto has been the "granary of Europe", 6,000,000 people, not through an "act of God", not through drought, or anything of that kind, starved to death. The great mass of the population over there, after 17 years of rule under the Communists, are undernourished and starving.

Some of our foreign diplomats have told me that there is a marked difference in the secessionist states, such as Finland and Latvia. There the peasants have good houses which are in a good state of repair; they are properly clothed and fed, and contented. Crossing the borderland into this "beautiful, prosperous, and peaceful" Soviet Russia you find the houses dilapidated, the people underfed and in rags, and living in a state of terror. Why, if they would let down the emigration barriers in Soviet Russia, half of the terrified population would try to get out in 30 days and come to the United States of America, if we would let them in. [Applause.]

I might say a few words about the recognition of Soviet Russia, how that was brought about. That was one of the greatest hoaxes that has ever been imposed upon the American people. [Applause.] One must give credit where credit is due. These Communists are skilled propagandists and diplomats. They built up this idea of $1,000,000,000 trade with Soviet Russia if we would recognize them, and they dangled that bait before the big capitalists in New York and the cotton growers of the South. In the South all those Baptists and Methodists were against recognition, but when they held out the juicy plum of $200,000,000 worth of cotton annually, they all surrendered and demanded recognition the same as the big capitalists in New York. As Lenin said, "The capitalist will commit suicide for a temporary profit", and unfortunately we have some of those in our country. So we rushed right in after this $1,000,000,000 and recognized Soviet Russia a year and a half ago; and we have done just $3,000,000 worth of cotton trade with them, and we loaned that money to them through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. [Applause and laughter.]

They gave definite pledges that the Communist International would not interfere with our domestic institutions and continue to give orders to the Communists of this country. Just as soon as the treaty was signed this was ignored and it has been ignored in the last year and a half, and will continue to be.

I am very happy to come here this evening and speak to the hard-headed, clear-thinking business men of the West. I am not at all sure that you do not need a great deal of speaking to; I know that the business men of the East do, and I suppose you do, too. There have been far too many defeatists in the ranks of business, and the time has come for the business men of America to change from the defensive to the offensive. [Applause.] These radicals, Communists, Socialists, and pink intellectuals go around this country of ours telling us everything is wrong, rotten, and corrupt, and that labor is exploited and brutalized. What is the answer? The answer is that for 50 years American labor has been the best paid, the best housed, the best clothed, the best fed, the most contented, and the freest in the world.

Fifty years ago, it is true, labor worked 12, 14, and 15 hours a day, with a pitiful wage scale and standard of living, and without any protection in the factories. Step by step, under our form of government, at the request of the sovereign people back home, the State legislatures and the Congress enacted shorter hours for labor, higher wages and standards of living, protection in factories, workmen's compensation laws, and old-age-pension laws.

There is not a single social or economic problem that we cannot solve in America on sound American principles without recourse to socialism and communism on the left or fascism or Hitlerism on the right, and we propose to do it that way. [Applause.] We have the same capacity, the same intelligence, the same common sense, the same patriotism, as our forefathers when they solved their difficult problems, and we can solve them in our day and generation for the best interests of all the American people but only on sound American principles of government. [Applause.]

Our republican form of government is denounced by all these Communists and Socialists, and Stalin, Hitler, and Mussolini tell you, the American people, that democracy has failed and that you are not competent for self-government any longer. Let me say to you that the American people do not propose to surrender any of their rights or their liberties for a government of assassination and bullets or for any despotic, autocratic dictatorship such as exist in Europe at the present time. [Applause.] Our republican form of government is still the hope and aspiration of the struggling masses of mankind, whether they be in Italy, Germany, Soviet Russia, or China.

The time has come for the business men of America to reaffirm their faith in themselves, in our American institutions, political, economical, and industrial. I could talk to you for an hour on the evils and abuses of our economic system, but at the end of the hour I could tell you that it is the fairest and best industrial and economic system in the world today, and that our people are better off than any other nation in the world.

Let us, therefore, rededicate ourselves to the proposition that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from this earth. Let us reaffirm our faith in our republican form of government, because it is the soundest, the fairest, the wisest, the most honorable, and the best form of government yet devised by the mind of man. Let us cherish and defend and uphold the Constitution of the United States [applause], and preserve its rights, liberties, and blessings, not only for ourselves but for generations of free, unborn American citizens. Let us serve notice on all Socialists, Communists, pink intellectuals, Fascists, and Hitlerites, that there is no room in America for their autocratic and dictatorial forms of government or their doctrines; that we have faith in our free institutions and our republican form of government, and that we believe that we have the best form of government in the world today. [Applause.]

UNAUTHORIZED STATEMENTS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, in a spirit of fairness I desire to call to the attention of the House a statement, under an Associated Press headline in this morning's paper, in which A. D. Whiteside, president of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., says the article appearing last week in which his corporation predicted a great boom in industry was inadvertent and unauthorized.

Last week in answering the statement of Mr. GIFFORD, of Massachusetts, that business was dead, I placed the article referred to in the RECORD. While even this denial does not convince me that business is dead, still as it was part of my remarks, I desire now to call attention to Mr. Whiteside's statement.

What puzzles me is how such statements get out without the executives of the organizations knowing about them. Only recently there came to our desks a statement in the form of a circular bearing the name of the New York Chamber of Commerce. This circular was an attack upon the administration and the President personally. In a few days the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] read a telegram on the floor from the president of the New York Chamber of Commerce in which he repudiated the circular and denied that he or the board of directors were responsible.

Now comes a statement by the Associated Press, the outstanding news-gathering organization in the world, quoting Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., as saying that the immediate future is to bring the sharpest rise that has been witnessed in business in a quarter of a century. Almost overnight the president of the corporation corrects this statement, saying no information had come to them that warranted such an expression.

Let me ask what prompts someone connected with such organizations to issue such statements? There must be some reason. Surely the great Associated Press does not take its news out of the air. Surely someone in authority must have given out and sent to each Member of Congress the statement from the chamber of commerce. I think it well that the post-office inspectors make some investigation to determine who issued the chamber of commerce statement, as it came through the mails.

I repeat I do not admit that business is dead, even if Dun & Bradstreet, Inc., deny the statement credited to it was authorized; but as I brought the matter to the attention of the House, I feel I should likewise call attention to the denial.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address by the Reverend Father James R. Cox, pastor of "Old St. Patrick", Pittsburgh, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address of Reverend Father James R. Cox, pastor of old St. Patrick, Pittsburgh, Pa., February 23, 1935:

A few weeks ago, President Roosevelt stood before Congress and asked this body to cooperate in "the task of putting people to work." He outlined a broad and vigorous program for reemployment.

His message rang through the land, and stirred anew the hopes and confidence of the people who in November had given the administration a mandate to go forward.

A few days later, the President asked Congress to appropriate nearly $5,000,000,000 and empower him to carry out his relief employment program.

Meanwhile, millions of jobless still remembering the President's promise shuffle through the streets and wait for action that will place the tools of labor in their hands.

Certain private contracting interests poise their ladles to skim off the cream. They want to tie the Government's hands and take profits from the money which the President intends to use for work wages.

The purpose of the President's program is to reemploy the jobless, bolster up purchasing power, and thereby balance consumption with production. The law he proposes would give him a dipper to use in priming the pump of private industry. Yet there are those who would refuse the President a dipper and use instead their own little eye droppers. It would be better to save the water than let it dribble away and leave the pump unprimed.

The President's program is extensive. He describes it as follows:

"This work will cover a wide field, including clearance of slums, which, for adequate reasons, cannot be undertaken by private capital; in rural housing of several kinds, where, again, private capital is unable to function; in rural electrification; in the reforestation of the great watersheds of the Nation; in an intensified program to prevent soil erosion and to reclaim blighted areas; in improving existing road systems and in constructing national highways designed to handle modern traffic; in the elimination of grade crossings; in the extension and enlargement of the successful work of the Civilian Conservation Corps; in non-Federal work, mostly self-liquidating and highly useful to local divisions of government; and on many others which the Nation needs and cannot afford to neglect."

Speedy action is vital to the President's program, if it is to achieve the mass effect at which it is aimed. We cannot afford delay and red tape.

The President is empowered to spend almost $5,000,000,000. He alone will be directly responsible for the spending of this money. He will be responsible, but we all know that the real spending will be done by agents whom the President chooses. There will be thousands of them.

Five billions of dollars is an enormous sum of money. Enormous potential power. No man in history has ever had more than a small fraction of such a tremendous sum at his personal disposal.

The organization to handle it must necessarily be of such proportions that the President can have only slight acquaintance with the high lights of the program for its distribution.

Some weeks ago we proposed that in order to get action and to be fair to the jobless in all parts of the Nation that a million dollars be allocated to each congressional district, under the direct supervision of the Congressman elected by the people of that section and that it be spent in the building of homes.

This bill is not a panacea for all of our evils but we do know that it will immediately give work to a thousand architects, to ten thousand draughtsmen, to many thousands of contractors, and to more than one and a half million employees in the building trades.

A bill that will immediately put one and a half million men to work is worthy of the serious consideration of the Nation.

Our suggestion received a favorable reaction in every part of the country. It is eminently fair. Where could we find men of higher character, integrity, and intellect, closer to the people than their elected representatives? Certainly they would understand better than a group selected even by the President himself, the needs of the people in every corner of the country.

The trouble with most public-works programs is the fact that they are centered in certain sections of the country and the people of other sections are absolutely forgotten.

One million dollars will build 300 houses and one million dollars in each of the 435 congressional districts will build a total of 130,500 houses. Building 130,500 houses will give 3 months' work in the factory and on construction work to one and a half million men.

It means that with the opening of the building season, every bricklayer, would be employed, every carpenter would be employed, every plasterer, plumber, steam fitter, and other building-trades workmen would be employed. And what is most important they would be employed at good sufficient union wages and would earn enough to keep their families on a good American standard of living.

We have the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Boulder Dam work in Arizona and California, but what about the other 48 States—they cannot move en masse and go to the promised land of Government activity in these out-of-the-way places, they are established in their little homes in the East, in the North, in the South, and must remain there.

The idea behind my suggestion was spread the work out and bring work not only to one section or to a particular group but to the entire United States of America.

Each dollar the building-trade workman receives goes from place to place and is repaid in wages many, many times, so that each million dollars paid in wages may do ten, twenty, or many more millions of dollars' worth of work while the workmen and their families remain at home, sweet home.

You need not take my statement for the impression this proposal of mine has made on the minds of our legislators and the people generally, but turn to page 18 of the magazine Time of this week and you will read the following:

"The first bill introduced by Mr. MORITZ contained the seeds of great good sense.

"Its terms were simple: To appropriate $435,000,000 for the building of homes to rent for $20 a month, the appropriation to be spent by the 435 Representatives, each of whom would have $1,000,000 to spend under his personal direction and supervision in his home district.

"So far as likelihood of passage was concerned his bill deserved no more attention than hundreds of other foredoomed measures introduced by new Congressmen. But the measure made such good sense that Washington gossip, at least, could not ignore its points: It would apportion low-cost housing on an equitable basis, since each Congressman has about the same number of constituents. Every citizen would be able to see and appraise the results of such a spending program, and what is more, could place his finger on the person responsible for such results. Furthermore, in every district Santa Claus would be present not in a vague mythological outline but as a knowable, accountable person."

This opinion from the magazine Time coincides with that of the British Weekly Economist, which voices the opinion that "The revival in dwelling-house construction forms the backbone of British recovery." Says the Economist, "The importance of the revival in dwelling-house construction in Britain's recovery since the beginning of 1933 can hardly be exaggerated."

Great Britain is building houses at the rate of more than 300,000 annually. One thousand every working day of the year and doing it mostly through private enterprise. Nearly 2,500,000 dwellings have been erected since 1919.

Since the war British taxpayers have contributed £167,000,000 or $835,000,000 toward housing subsidies, approximately £140 or $700 for every subsidized house built.

It is estimated that England and Wales need at least 5,000,000 new houses by 1951 to insure that none of the population is housed more densely than three persons to two rooms and that old and out-of-date houses are replaced at a reasonable rate.

My friends, there is at the present time a shortage of homes in the United States estimated at 3,900,000 and no matter how fast we may build homes at least 10,000,000 new homes must be built before we reach a point of saturation.

Most of our good American workingmen and their families are not living in homes—they are living in hovels—in old shacks in the slums.

The Congressman knows more about building houses in his own community than anyone else in the country. He knows the kind which should be built and where it is best to build them.

While officials of the Housing Division of the P. W. A. have drawn their fat salaries for studying, conferring, and attending banquets, the architectural profession is slowly disappearing, the contractors and folding up and the building-trade mechanics and laborers are starving. This slum-clearance organization, which could have been the greatest weapon against the depression, has turned out to be a colossal failure. The sooner this important undertaking is given into other hands the sooner this Nation will get back to prosperity.

These men could have given you men good jobs at union wages, but they did not do it. These men could have kept you contractors busy—but they did not do it. And these men could have saved the architects, the lumber yards, the brick yards, and the thousands of mills and factories, but they did not do it. Do you wonder that I call them colossal failures.

The building of houses by the Government is a self-liquidating public work. It will pay for itself and will not be thrown away like doles and other forms of relief.

Also we create revenue as each new house pays for itself and pays its portion of the expense of the community. When we build hospitals, schools, prisons, and other institutions we do not increase revenue, on the contrary we increase the expenses of government as each such building must be heated, lighted, and maintained by a staff of employees, and the cost of the building with its ever-present bond interest must be borne by the people. But a new home pays for itself, pays its own mortgage, pays its interest, and pays a permanent revenue in better lives, better citizens, better character, and better government.

Now, my friends, Congressman MORITZ has done his part. He has introduced this bill in Congress, it is now up to you and me to blast this bill out of the committee. You know these committees in Washington believe that bills are made to be pigeonholed. Unless they are forced out on the floor to be voted upon the bill dies a natural death in committee. Furthermore, they have established a gag rule, so that any bills not favored by the political bosses are not allowed to be brought on to the floor of Congress for voting.

There is a great social demand for houses.

Low-interest rates have enabled British enterprise to operate so effectively that according to the index of building activity, British building of dwelling houses during the first 7 months of 1934 was 82.6 percent above the 1928 level. In the United States for the same period the index was 78.3 percent below the 1928 level.

You rich men, you men in authority, I ask you to listen to the prayer of the "forgotten man."

"Dear Lord, you got to help me! * * * Don't let the blues get me * * * I'm almost licked! * * * Three years ago, my wife, Annie, and me had $3,000 in the bank—cold cash, Lord! * * * and I was a great carpenter! * * * Everything looked rosy * * * but now our money is all gone, Lord * * * you see, I lost my job * * * I ain't a carpenter any more * * * the depression made me just another down-and-outer * * * when your life savings is gone, it seems as if your life is gone, too * * * Annie says we should store our treasures up in heaven where they can't be lost * * * and I guess she's right! * * * of course, Lord, you know all about us * * * you know how I've been tramping around, day after day, asking for a job * * * and how I always get turned down * * * and how everybody I go to just sends me to somebody else * * * That's what we call 'passing the buck' Lord! * * * Annie says I ought to ask you to help me * * * she says that you don't pass the buck * * * you know Annie goes to mass every morning * * * and she says her beads every night * * * and she says I ain't got enough religion * * * and that's why you're punishing me * * *

"Well, Lord, I know I ain't always been what I ought * * * but I do love you, Lord, you know I do * * * Didn't I build that fine oak sanctuary in the cathedral? * * * and wasn't I plenty happy about it and mighty careful because I knew it was for you? * * * Remember how proud Annie and me were when the bishop praised my work * * * But I ain't proud about anything anymore, Lord, * * * I ain't got no pride left * * * since I lost my job, I've swept floors * * * imagine that! * * * me who was once a first-class carpenter! * * * and I've dug ditches * * * and, Lord, I've even tried to sell shoelaces * * * even Annie laughed at that! * * * Anyhow, as long as I ain't proud anymore, I don't care * * * because Annie says that pride is the devil's own sin! * * * But you know, Lord, I don't mind being a down-and-outer myself, but it's awful hard on Annie and the kids * * * Annie keeps on smiling, Lord, but I hate to see the silver threads creeping into her hair * * * she always had dandy golden hair, you know * * * and there's Joe and Mary! * * * Joe, he wants to go to college next year * * * and, Lord, I wish he could * * * I ain't got much learning myself and was never exposed to a big education, but it's nice to know that somebody in the family knows something! * * *

"And Mary! * * * she wants to be a nun * * * that makes her mother happy * * * it makes me happy, too, because I like nuns * * * 'Black angels' I calls them, because they wear black robes and bring Annie things for us to eat * * * as for me, Lord, I ain't what I used to be, not so strong as I was * * * and so if anything happens to me, promise, Lord, you'll take care of Annie and the kids * * * don't mind me crying like this, Lord! * * * it makes me feel better * * * but I ain't a crier * * * I ain't cried since the day my pal Eddie fell dead at my side on the battlefield in France. * * * Poor Eddie, have mercy on his soul, Lord!

"* * * I wonder if Eddie would be a down-and-outer, too, and looking for a job if he were here now? * * * well, I ain't got much more to say except maybe I ought to say that I'm going to do better by you from now on, Lord. * * * Father Riley says that you said we should seek the Kingdom of God and His justice first! * * * and then other things like food and clothes would be given to us * * * and Annie says that she doesn't care what we lose as long as we don't lose our souls * * *, so, even if the bad breaks make Annie and me lose our home down here, they shouldn't make us lose our home in heaven * * * and with Mary praying in a convent for me and Annie, I guess we ought to make it, all right. * * *

"You know, Lord, I feel better since I came in here and talked to you like this * * * and say, Lord, I just been thinking * * * you were once a carpenter! * * * guess I'll tell Annie that! * * * she says the Blessed Virgin was a good housekeeper * * * and I don't forget that the one who took care of you and your good mother was just a poor old carpenter like me * * * St. Joseph! * * * One more thing, Lord * * * I know that they call you a lot of great names * * * Christ the Savior * * * and Christ the King * * * but I wonder if you'd mind if I, when we're alone here like this * * * if I just called you * * * Christ the Workman! * * * it kind of helps us poor down-and-outers to think of you as a workman, you know * * * I'd better be going now, but I'm coming back every day * * * because I need you bad now * * * and as Annie says you don't pass the buck! * * * Goodby now, Lord!"

Our prayers have been said—let us get together and act.

Come on all you architects, your architects associations, you contractors and contractors associations, you bricklayers, carpenters, and other building-trade unions. You manufacturer's and dealers of building materials, get behind this bill—unite, telegraph or telephone your Congressman. Let's go! Good night folks and God be with you 'til we meet again.

THE LUNDEEN BILL

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a radio address I made on the Lundeen bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert the following radio address which I delivered March 20, 1935:

To the vast unseen audience on this national hook-up, interested in national affairs and in legislation pending in Congress, but more particularly to residents in the city of New York, and to my own constituents directly, I wish to address my remarks with reference to public discussions which will undoubtedly arise in connection with the so-called "Lundeen bill" which was just reported out by the Committee on Labor to the House of Representatives. This bill represents a type of legislation which should never have been allowed to disgrace Congress, and I do not hesitate to express my severest condemnation of its provisions and the manner in which this bill is seeking to deceive the American people and throw out the bait of communism to the masses.

One glance at the provisions of the bill is sickening in the extreme. What does the bill say? It seeks to provide for everything. It covers unemployment, old age, social insurance, and "other purposes", and the whole bill contains only four sections, section 1 merely gives the title of the act. The bill directs the Secretary of Labor to provide unemployment insurance by giving compensation to all workers and farmers over 18 years of age, in amounts not less than $10 per week, with $3 additional for every dependent. This minimum compensation is guaranteed to everybody, and if a worker cannot find employment at $10 per week, then the Government is to take care of him, make him a Government ward, and pay him the difference between the amount he earns and $10 per week. The next section gives the Secretary of Labor authority to provide for disability insurance, so that any worker who, because of sickness, old age, maternity, or industrial injury is unable to work, he is likewise to receive $10 per week; and the following section, section 4 of the act, provides a very simple method of financing this relief. It says all moneys of the United States shall be used for that purpose, but if the moneys in the Treasury are insufficient, then taxes shall be levied on all gifts and all inheritances and all incomes of $5,000 a year or over. The bill is not only violent as to how this taxation is to be collected, but it lays down the principle that these workers must be taken care of, and if the money in the Treasury is insufficient, why, then, let us tax the people.

As you know, HUEY LONG in his wildest dreams did not go so far. He proposes to take from the people of the United States only incomes in excess of $5,000,000, thinking that $5,000,000 is enough for anybody. But the Lundeen bill goes further than that. He thinks that $5,000 is enough for everybody. If necessary to pay $10 per week to every able-bodied man and woman in the United States, his bill would take it from the income of every person receiving $5,000 a year or more.

The Lundeen bill fortunately does not contain an analysis as to how much money will be necessary to provide $10 per week for everybody in the United States, but the most conservative estimate will convince us that if the Government were to embark on this wild program all the money in the Treasury would not be sufficient to carry it out, and that at least $10,000,000,000 would be necessary for that purpose. But the viciousness of the bill does not lie so much in the amount of money which the Government would have to spend, as in the false hopes which are raised in the masses if legislation of this type is to be launched in Congress.

Another very objectionable feature of the Lundeen bill is the fact that it provides that the Federal Government surrender the administration, control, and distribution of appropriated money taken from the Federal Treasury to persons and organizations outside the Federal service and not under primary control of the Government. If this provision is not contrary to the Constitution it certainly is against good public policy, especially at times like the present, when even Government-controlled expenditures for public relief is subject to unusual observation by opponents to the spending of taxpayers' money for such purposes.

Furthermore, the Lundeen bill carries no legislative provision for any penalties to be imposed upon the agents of the workers handling the funds from which the benefits are to be paid. The Government would have no safeguard against loss occasioned by some dishonest person delegated by the workers to handle the money of the Government to be distributed.

The very persons who might be benefited by this bill, if made a law, should be the first ones to object to this bill for this omission from the bill, if for no other reason, as a safeguard to themselves.

Heretofore, whenever the Government was to spend money, Congress saw fit to make a definite appropriation and decide on the source of revenue and the manner in which it is to be financed. Now we have a novel procedure. The Government is to spend money but no definite program is stated as to how the money is to be raised, except that Congress is to tax everybody so as to obtain the necessary funds. And remember, no appropriation of any kind is made for the spending of the money. No sum is specified which the Government is to set aside for that purpose. But every unemployed worker is to be taken care of; virtually every able-bodied man, woman, and child in the United States, and every person who is unable to work, and we are all to become employees of the Government, or, at least, get on the Government pay roll, and let the "rich" pay, "rich" meaning anybody who earns $5,000 a year or more.

Now, contrast this bill with President Roosevelt's constructive program for social security which appears in the Wagner bill introduced in the United States Senate, known as S. 1130. This bill starts with an appropriation of $50,000,000, and an appropriation is to be made annually of $125,000,000, which appropriation must be apportioned among the several States and giving each State the right, within the framework of the bill, to prescribe old-age and unemployment insurance.

This old-age-compensation question is to be administered locally. That is, every State will provide its own method of administration, and those States which have heretofore given such insurance will be able to enlarge their own program, while those States which have not yet granted old-age insurance will establish a system most suitable to their own particular requirements.

When it comes to unemployment insurance the Wagner bill provides for a definite method by which employers and employees, as well as the Government, will pay in a definite amount of money into a fund which will be known as an unemployment trust fund, and out of this fund unemployment payments will be made should any worker lose his job or be unable to find another.

You see, under the Wagner bill we have an intelligent insurance proposition. Both employees and employers will pay for the benefit which the worker will receive when he loses his employment. The Government is not going to make any gifts to unemployed workers and there will not be any incentive to remain unemployed, since the unemployment return will be much less than the amount which a worker can earn if gainfully employed. We are not going to assure any worker of receiving $10 a week or any amount per week. It will be a question of paying every employee on the basis which his earning capacity will entitle him to. No minimum or maximum. An unemployed worker will receive as much as he had paid for and as much as his employer had paid for and no more. There will be no drain on the Federal Treasury by reason of any unemployment, nor will there be any special tax imposed upon anyone to relieve people from unemployment.

This is an intelligent businesslike effort to solve the question and there is nothing of the demigogue in the proposed bill which the administration is sponsoring. It is ridiculous to feed our people with false hopes and impossible promises. It is criminal to dangle before the masses of our people the idea that without work they can live on the bounty of our Government. It is more than dangerous to tell the masses in my community that the Lundeen bill is a sound piece of legislation. No; and a thousand times no. It is quite obvious that the time for futile promises is past. The Communists throughout the city of New York have made the Lundeen bill their own. They look upon this bill as the panacea of all their troubles. They tell the worker that he does not need to work since the Government will take care of him.

Forgetting the lessons of the past, and forgetting the unpleasant and unhappy experience which other nations have had by giving doles to their unemployed, they wish to create a group of people who will never work but who will live on the bounty of the Government.

I was always in the front ranks of those who believe that the "laborer is worthy of his hire"; who believe that labor should be adequately paid for its efforts. I believe that wages should be adequate to enable the worker to enjoy his life and to reap the benefit of his toil for himself and his family. I believe that the worker should be adequately compensated, adequately housed, adequately clothed, and adequately taken care of, but I do not believe that anyone should be supported by the Government, or should become the ward of our Government.

If pernicious legislation of the type of the Lundeen bill is allowed to continue, it will create a drain upon the Treasury which will eventually destroy this Government. We cannot live on bounties and we cannot create money out of nothing. This country has achieved its standing in the world through the labor of its masses, and only by labor can we expect to thrive and succeed.

I have always been a sponsor of the interest of the masses and the interest of labor. While a member of the State legislature and a Member of the American Congress I always sponsored legislation to help, aid, and assist labor, and was always endorsed for election by the American Federation of Labor as a legislator who has the interests of labor at heart and whose work benefits the toiling masses of our people. I belong to the same class to which my constituents belong, the class which works with brain or brawn, and which earns its living by the sweat of its brow. So I am speaking to you as one of yourselves. I am speaking to you as a friend and neighbor. Do not be deceived by communistic promises. They mean nothing, and if you look upon the record which the Communists have made for themselves in Russia where they have been in power for 11 years you will notice how the working masses have been reduced to slavery and how no one is able to call his life his own. It is clear that this country has progressed because the working masses were taken care of by our people; but we do not propose to make idlers out of our toiling masses. Labor will be adequately rewarded, but labor must realize its obligations as well. And so we must not lose sight of the fact that Communism is no solution of our American labor troubles, and only by constructive legislation, of the type of Senator WAGNER'S bill, can labor benefit and our Nation prosper.

I feel that I must protest with all the power I command against this vicious Communist agitation in my district against this continuous feeding of promises to our people which cannot be kept and the suggestion that the Government should take care of us all.

In this way salvation does not lie. Communists who parade in front of my house thinking that they will cause me personal discomfort only hurt themselves. I am sure that a good many of those who manage and organize parades in my district are not even citizens and many more are not even residents of my district, so that I must protest and I must object. I am sure that if my neighbors will heed my warning they will remove themselves from all agitation by Communists, and will realize that ours is an American Government for the benefit of all the people.

By constructive legislation we should achieve freedom and prosperity, while by destructive agitation we shall lose all the benefits which years of effort have brought us.

I thank you.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY AND THE NEW DEAL

Mr. BUCKBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] at a joint meeting of the Republican members of the Illinois Legislature, made at the capitol at Springfield, Ill., on Monday, April 8, 1935.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCKBEE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of Representative HAMILTON FISH, Jr., of New York, before the Republican members of the State Legislature of Illinois, at Springfield, Ill., April 8, 1935:

It is a great honor to be invited to speak to the Republican members of the State Legislature of Illinois, here in the house of representatives in the city of Springfield, where Abraham Lincoln spent a large part of his life. Lincoln had faith in the plain people, in popular government, and in our free institutions. The early history of the Republican Party is synonymous with his political career and immortal achievements in defense of the Union and the preservation of the Constitution.

We should today stand boldly with Lincoln, our first Republican President, for the maintenance of the Federal Constitution, our free institutions, and representative form of government, against State socialism, a socialistic dictatorship, or actual socialism, all of which are destructive of American ideals and principles of government as advocated by him.

The quicker the Republican Party gets back to the early principles of our party as enunciated by Abraham Lincoln the sooner we will regain the confidence of the American people. Lincoln announced the doctrine that human rights were superior to property rights and that labor was prior to capital. We should reaffirm these fundamental principles of our party openly and make them the cornerstone of our present-day republicanism.

I learned all of my political principles and faith from the writings and speeches of Abraham Lincoln and from their application by Theodore Roosevelt. Lincoln was a liberal, compared to Buchanan, and a conservative, compared to John Brown and Wendell Phillips. So, today we Republicans must be liberal as compared to the recent past of our party, but conservative as compared to the Marxists, Socialists, "new dealers", and other radicals.

The time has come to tell the truth and to let the people back home, in spite of the honeyed words and sugar-coated fireside talks of President Roosevelt, know that the new-deal measures, particularly the N. R. A. and A. A. A. are collapsing of their own weight and are being denounced even by Democrats as the greatest economic failures and monstrosities in the history of our country.

The Republicans would have no right to criticize the new-deal measures if they had succeeded in relieving unemployment and putting American men and women back to work, even at the cost of $15,000,000,000. The tragedy of the situation is that there are a million and a half more unemployed, according to the American Federation of Labor, than there were a year ago.

The Republican Party has been shadow-boxing long enough and pulling its punches beyond the necessities of the occasion. There is only one person responsible for the break-down and failure of the new-deal policies which are retarding recovery and prolonging the depression, and that is Franklin D. Roosevelt, who was the author of all these unsound experiments, including the N. R. A. and A. A. A., that are leading the country onto the rocks of bankruptcy, chaos, and disorder. No matter what party American citizens may have belonged to in the past, the time has come for all of those who believe in our industrial system, based on private initiative and reasonable profit, in sound money, in a balanced Budget, and against Government ownership, destructive taxation, continued borrowing and unlimited deficits, and an intolerable and crushing bureaucracy at Washington, to join forces to throw out the "new dealers."

I indict the new-deal administration on its record for the past year as the greatest failure in American history. I charge President Roosevelt with having destroyed business confidence, squandered American resources, and with the impairment of the national credit. I accuse him of having imposed unsound, unworkable, and socialistic measures upon the Nation that have increased the cost of living, impoverished the American people, lost the world market for our cotton and wheat surplus crops, and increased unemployment. I condemn him for demanding control of the purse strings from Congress, turning the Constitution into a scrap of paper and changing our representative form of government without the consent of the governed, into an autocratic and dictatorial form of government. I denounce his administration as having no economic policy except to pile debt upon debt by borrowing billions upon billions without any thought of balancing the Budget or the inevitable day of reckoning and collapse of credit and the bankruptcy of the Government. I hold President Roosevelt responsible for appointing numerous radicals, socialists, and near-communists to important positions in the Government's service, who have done more to cause labor unrest, unprecedented strikes, and to promote more class hatred in 2 years than all other administrations since the birth of the Republic.

All the new-deal measures have clashed with common sense, the experience of the past, and the Constitution of the United States. The blatant General Johnson declared the N. R. A. a holy and sacred institution, above reproach, but today even Democrats join in the swelling chorus repudiating it as a failure that should be wiped out or drastically modified. There was once a time when any critic of the N. R. A. was either a traitor or a partisan bigot. The President's message on the utility holding companies was an amazing example of the extent that the administration has become a propaganda machine. No American, according to the President, had the right to even petition Congress to modify legislation without committing an unethical and disloyal act. Have the liberties of the American people burned so low that they have no rights or no voice left to petition their elected representative in Congress?

The President speaks of a more abundant life for the American people—a very beautiful phrase for fireside talks. But how can it be developed by a program of scarcity and reduction of crops and birth control of pigs and an increase in the cost of living? When the American people wake up and see that the President's program is destroying wealth and impoverishing the people, political sentiment will change overnight.

There has been a tremendous swing in public sentiment away from the new deal in the last 3 months, but that is only the beginning of an avalanche that once the facts are known of the utter collapse and break-down of the new deal, that will sweep everything and everyone responsible for the socialistic experiments and the destruction of business confidence into political oblivion. The people have been mesmerized and hypnotized owing to the consistent and studied attempts to mislead and befog the real issues. Let us tear the veil off and unmask the true situation.

The $4,800,000,000 so-called "relief bill" amounts to a rape of the legislative powers of Congress, and a betrayal of our constitutional and representative form of government. It was forced through Congress by the autocrat in the White House in defiance of the Constitution, delegating to Congress the control over appropriations, and our representative form of government, based on three separate and distinct branches of government.

Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. President Roosevelt is obsessed with the idea of power—no longer emergency or temporary, but permanent, autocratic, and dictatorial. Even four Democratic United States Senators, in spite of the party lash and the patronage of Postmaster General James A. Farley, refused to jump through the hoop like trained animals and vote to betray our constitutional and representative form of government and set up a superman with the control of the purse strings in the White House.

The bill itself is just another slush fund to be used for campaign purposes a year from now. No Republican opposed the $850,000,000 transfer of funds for actual relief purposes. That could have passed Congress by a unanimous vote at any time, but the Democrats refused to separate the two bills in order to confuse the issue and deceive the people back home.

The passage of the alleged relief bill transferring the control of the purse strings to the President upon his own arrogant demand is actually a change in our form of government without the consent of the governed. It gives to the President powers similar to Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin, and is based upon fascism, communism, and other foreign autocratic dictatorships, but not on American principles of government.

Shades of Abraham Lincoln, who believed that the Constitution was the law and the prophets, and of Thomas Jefferson, whose political faith opposed the concentration of power in the hands of the Executive, and whose followers for over 135 years have stood for State's rights and against interference by a centralized Federal Government.

In the next Presidential election the Republicans should build a bridge upon the firm foundations of the Constitution, representative government, and American liberties, and appeal to millions of disappointed, disgusted, and deceived Jeffersonian Democrats to cross over and oust the "new dealers" at Washington before the Democratic Party of Jefferson has been destroyed and buried by those temporarily in command of the fleshpots.

The "new dealers" have shown an utter incapacity to govern within the bounds of reasons and moderation. The "brain trust" and new-deal termites have burrowed, eaten their way, and undermined the very structure of our National Government, and if permitted to continue will bring it down to ruin and disaster.

Recovery under the new deal is a myth and a mirage backed by propaganda over the radio and billions of dollars out of the Treasury of the United States. The failure of the N. R. A. and A. A. A. was inevitable because they were economically unsound, unworkable, and a form of imported socialism that does not thrive in America.

The rapidly vanishing foreign markets for our cotton and wheat surplus is a direct menace to the well-being of economic interests of our country. The situation is far too serious to ignore any longer and is attributable to the socialistic "new deal" policies which bring havoc and ruin wherever these "brain trust" experiments are tried out. What does it profit the Southern or Western States which have temporary artificial increases in the price of cotton or wheat by the manipulations of the A. A. A. and wake up to find that our foreign markets have been lost? Already our cotton exports have fallen off under 2 years of the new-deal experiments by 50 percent. The Lord only knows what will happen in the next 2 years if these mirages are still pursued. Our wheat exports have almost reached a vanishing point. Increased unemployment, more on the relief rolls, and a huge financial and economic loss annually is what the South and the West is facing, as the cotton and wheat export trade steadily decreases.

The tragedy of the situation is that our export markets for wheat and cotton are dwindling away while the "new dealers" fiddle and zig-zag from right to left, but never in any sound or constructive direction. The Wallaces, Tugwells, and the Ezekiels, and the other "brain trusters" are engaged in a dance of death with the cotton and wheat growers to the detriment of the Nation. There is less cotton and wheat being exported than at any time since the Civil War, and as a result of the loss of these exports, hundreds of thousands of Americans engaged in planting, milling, ginning, compressing, warehouse, transportation and shipping have lost their jobs. The A. A. A. program of reduction of cotton and wheat crops and birth control of pigs has seriously affected millions of our wage earners and all consumers. The economy of scarcity and restriction is reaping its own whirlwind of disastrous consequences and evil fruits through importation of shiploads of grain and meat from South America, butter from New Zealand, and cheese from Denmark. Since last July 12,000,000 bushels of corn have been purchased in foreign countries or imported to compete with the corn produced in the United States; 10,000,000 bushels of oats, 8,000,000 bushels of barley, and 6,000,000 bushels of rye. In addition, 16,000,000 bushels of wheat have been imported, whereas we have only exported 3,000,000 bushels and the equivalent of 12,000,000 in flour, leaving the United States, unbelievable as it may sound, a net importer of wheat, with the duty of 42 cents.

The proof of the pudding is the eating, and as a result of the new deal economic program the American farmers have lost the richest world markets for their surplus crops.

I am opposed to the governmental policy of restriction and scarcity, when there are 12,000,000 unemployed Americans and 23,000,000 on relief rolls. If the Government is right, that a policy of producing less makes for wealth and prosperity, then it must follow that producing next to nothing would make us fabulously wealthy. The wand wavers and magic performers at Washington, in addition to undermining and destroying the principles of Jefferson democracy, will, by their costly blunders and crazy-quilt experiments, if continued for 2 more years, ruin and wreck the economic stability of the Nation.

The Republican Party should come out openly and boldly for a square deal for the farmers within the compass of the Constitution, and for an equilibrium of prices between the production of the farms, factories, and mines, which is impossible under the N. R. A. The farmers are entitled to the cost of production plus a reasonable profit, and to the preservation of both the domestic and foreign markets through sound and fair policies, but not by the destruction of crops and increased unemployment.

The processing taxes imposed by the new-deal administration—I will not honor them with the name Democratic—is nothing but a tariff within the United States, hitherto a free-trade country, within its own boundaries on the necessities of life, and a means of increasing the cost of living for the American people. Shades of John C. Calhoun, to think of his party erecting tariff barriers within the United States against its own people on foodstuffs and clothing. The price of meat and pork have doubled under the "new dealers" and has gone beyond the wage earners and American housewives' budget. The 125,000,000 American consumers, instead of obtaining a more abundant life, are rapidly becoming the forgotten men and women of America.

There is no party today to speak for Jeffersonian principles except a liberalized Republican Party that will not pussyfoot and compromise with the unsound socialistic and destructive features of the new deal, which affect the welfare, the interests, and the daily lives of every citizen in the Nation, and will not tolerate the weakening of our constitutional and representative form of government.

Our appeal must be made equally to Jeffersonian Democrats and Abraham Lincoln Republicans to uphold and defend the fundamental American principles of government, advocated by both Jefferson and Lincoln, steering clear of socialism, communism, Government ownership, regimentation, collectivism, destructive taxation, and a huge crushing superbureaucracy at Washington.

For well over a hundred years Jeffersonian Democrats have battled for their principles without fear or favor until the advent of this administration and its socialistic and Santa Claus policies. Jeffersonian Democrats for all these years have boldly proclaimed their political creed which stood for the rights and liberties of the individual citizen under the Constitution, for national economy, for State rights, against the centralization and concentration of power in the hands of the Federal Government and the use of such concentrated powers by the Federal Government to interfere with business or the rights and liberties of the individual. Every principle of Jeffersonian Democrats has been repudiated by the administration at Washington and trampled under foot by the "brain trust", who are not and never have been Democrats.

It is too early to write a party platform, but the Republicans could well afford to take over those main planks in the Democratic platform that have been repudiated and ignored by the "new dealers", such as a reduction of 25 percent in the running expenditures of the Government, a balanced Budget, sound money to be preserved at all hazards, fewer commissions, and to stop borrowing and deficits.

Let us, as followers of Lincoln, rededicate ourselves to the proposition that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from this earth, because it is the fairest, safest, soundest, most honorable, and best form of government ever devised by the mind of man.

UNITED STATES NAVAL HOSPITAL, PHILADELPHIA

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein an eloquent address delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW], upon the occasion of the dedication of the new naval hospital at Philadelphia, on April 12.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

This is a happy day for me. My joy is unrestrained as I have the opportunity to witness and take part in the dedication of this new naval hospital. Can you realize what it means to me to behold the final culmination of a long and tedious task, which had been faced with many obstacles and disappointments over a period of 9 years, since I first sponsored the necessary legislation in Congress to replace the old and dilapidated buildings at the navy yard with such a magnificent and modern hospital? Surely, one of my fondest dreams has come true.

Someone has aptly said: "Life's success is not so much what we accomplish for ourselves as what we accomplish for the general welfare of humanity." Undoubtedly those of us who had part in the success of this great project must have had such an axiom in mind.

When this hospital was originally planned there was no question as to the use to which it was intended to be put. It was, of course, to be strictly a naval hospital, operated and manned by naval personnel, with first consideration to the needed medical and surgical attention for the personnel of the Navy; but, with additional facilities to be made available for continued treatment of our sick and disabled war veterans. It was on this account that construction was based upon a 650-bed hospital, with possibility of extending it to 800 beds in case of emergency by a closer centering of the beds. For purely taking care of naval patients a much smaller building would have answered such a purpose in peace times.

Unforeseen conditions, including later action which restricted hospitalization for veterans, have since cast a gloom on these plans, and for some time there has been considerable doubt as to whether the full facilities of the hospital could be used. I understand that in quite recent periods the old hospital cared for an average of about 200 naval patients and 200 veteran patients.

With the prospect of soon moving into these magnificent quarters, and knowing the great demand for hospitalization of veterans, I recently made it a point to see if arrangements could not be made for the treatment of a greater number of veterans, hoping to have the authorization increased from 200 to 450 beds for this purpose. Conferences I had with Navy officials revealed that they would be glad to approve such an arrangement. It would have many advantages. First, it would reduce the overhead expense of operation; and, secondly, it would afford greater opportunity for training and experience for the personnel of the Navy Medical Corps. Further, in case of war or other national emergency, it would make immediately available a modern and complete hospital.

Of course, the number of veteran patients the Navy may accommodate in this hospital depends entirely upon the request for beds by the Veterans' Administration. My next step, therefore, was to get in touch with General Hines, of the Veterans' Administration. I found him to be most sympathetic with my plea and willing to cooperate to the extent of his ability, in accordance with limitations placed upon him. Assurance was given that a new survey would be made of the entire situation, and I am quite hopeful that when it is completed he will be able to authorize a considerable increase in the number of veterans to be sent to this hospital from eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, and eastern Maryland.

In my opinion, there can be no principle or object of a more worthy nature than for this great and generous Government to provide every possible facility for the adequate medical and surgical care of its disabled war veterans, and I have always been glad to urge the provision of adequate facilities for that purpose.

We are proud to have here what is probably one of the most modern and complete hospitals of this nature in the country, if not the world. Congratulations are properly due to the Navy Department and its officers for approving and providing such a magnificent structure; to the architects, Karcher and Smith, for conceiving such a wonderful plan; to the builder, John McShain, for its fine construction, and to the personnel of the Navy and our war veterans for the excellent opportunities it affords for their care and treatment.

If I may be permitted to do so, I should like to add a personal word or two. For a great many years during my service in Congress I have been a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. This has naturally brought me in close contact with many officials and officers of the Navy Department and the Navy. In all of my experience I have never met a higher class of men; officers of unusual executive and business ability, who are patriotically serving our country. It has been a great pleasure and satisfaction to have had the opportunity to work with them, and I wish to publicly acknowledge and thank all of them for the wonderful cooperation and assistance they gave me and my colleagues in Congress in securing for the Navy, our war veterans, and the city of Philadelphia this great structure which we are dedicating today.

So many of our good people in thinking of our Navy only have a vision of ships and the general impression that it serves as our first line of defense, and that its maintainance at full strength is a guarantee of the Nation's defense against any foreign aggressor. All of this is very true, and I consider a strong Navy as the best form of insurance against war. It is our greatest agency for peace. However, the activities of the Navy are more varied than this, for they include many duties of a governmental, educational, and humanitarian character. Always, nevertheless, there has been one focal point—that is to be prepared for any emergency.

In these days of unsettled conditions in various parts of the world most anything could happen with a startling suddenness; and if strife and turmoil is again to become rampant I, for one, should hate to see our country in the state of unpreparedness in which we found ourselves back in 1917. Therefore, I have joined in a program for a Navy up to the limits set by the London Treaty; and until other nations will agree to a further reduction of armament such a policy should be maintained.

It is gratifying that the Navy is not only to have increased strength in fighting ships, but that provision is being made for an increased air force.

Philadelphia is proud to have been so closely associated with our Navy. The artisans and labor of this city and its vicinity have constructed many of its ships on the banks of the Delaware River and at our navy yard. In our naval aircraft factory at League Island they have carried on experiments in aviation construction which have resulted in the development and construction of the most modern and efficient planes. Now plans are in process for the expansion of this aircraft factory for the construction of additional engines and planes so badly needed for our Navy.

This great edifice, erected for the treatment and care of our naval personnel and those disabled veterans who served our country in time of need, is appropriately constructed in this ancient city where American liberty was born, and from which the first vessels of the infant Nation went forth on missions of the young Republic. It was from the wharves of Philadelphia that the first officers of the United States Navy set sail on the waters of the Delaware River and the Atlantic Ocean in the cause of American liberty. From this city came the brave commanders who not only established American sea power in the Revolution, but who became the teachers of the eminent admirals who preserved American independence in the War of 1812.

Throughout the years since the formation of the first battlefleet of the United States, Philadelphia has been foremost in the building and maintenance of vessels for the protection of the Nation. From our great navy yard, and shipbuilding plants on the Delaware we have set forth those giant monsters of steel which established our Nation in the first rank as a Naval Power.

I mention these brief facts concerning our Navy only to emphasize the worthiness of the work which is today receiving proper acclaim in the building of this great hospital. We are not only thinking in the terms of the brave and broken men who are willing, if necessary, to die that American liberty might live, but also emphasizing our belief in an adequate Navy, properly manned by able personnel, which will once again place America in its proper place among the navies of the earth. We dedicate this building to the cause of liberty and the Nation. We dedicate it to the brave men of the United States Navy, and to the veterans of our wars, and we pray that God who guides the destinies of peoples will keep the light shining upon it until time shall be no more.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, the bill that is now before the Congress of the United States is one of perhaps greater importance than any that we have ever considered, for it goes to the root of much of the economics of our modern-day problems, that of providing security to those of our citizens who have reached an age in life where their opportunities to earn for themselves a livelihood are so limited as to make it impossible for them to do so. In the bill we have titles I, IV, V, and VI granting aid to States for old-age pensions, for the care of dependent children, for maternal and child welfare, and for public health. They carry with them an appropriation that in the aggregate will not be more than $100,000,000 for the first year. I am, of course, in favor of all of these titles. For many years, years before I ever dreamed of coming to this body, I have been an advocate of a social-security program that would offer help to those of our people who would need such help.

I am happy indeed to have the ambition of my own life realized in the enacting of this legislation, and, while it is not all that I have hoped for, I feel that it is the beginning of a contribution we can make to our people and a program that will greatly benefit those of our citizens today, and even greater benefits to our posterity. I believe it to be the first duty of any government to care for its own, just as much a duty as it is the duty of the citizen to be interested in his or her government. In the bill before us today we make contributions to the States, not in excess of $15 per month, to aid States in caring for their aged. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not look upon a pension of $15 per month by the Government and an equal contribution on the part of the State as being an adequate pension, and I do hope that an amendment will be approved to increase this amount to $25 per month, with an equal amount to be paid by the State, so that a monthly income of $50 can be paid to those of our aged folks who are in need.

It seems to me, too, Mr. Speaker, that we should start paying this pension at the age of 60 rather than at 65, for in our modern day of labor-saving as well as labor-displacing machinery men and women are driven out of industry many years before they reach that age, indeed, in many industries in our country employers will not give work to those above 45 years of age, so that in any legislation that we enact here we must, out of necessity, give every consideration to this aspect of our national problem as it relates to the security of our citizens who have reached the age of 60. I appreciate the fine work of our Ways and Means Committee, the many weeks, almost day and night consideration, to write a bill that they believe to be sound, and one that can be financed by our Government without working undue hardships upon the balance of our people, and only because of my deep appreciation and consideration for this hard work on the part of my colleagues can I assent to any legislation that will give less to our people. I represent a fine, intelligent, patriotic district in this House. In my district are men and women who do not want charity, do not want a dole. Force of circumstances, unemployment, the loss of their lifetime savings, have driven many of them to the point of desperation, and for this reason I hope we will enact this legislation and do it with as little delay as possible.

In our program of public works and through the allocation of money authorized by our Public Works Act, I am hopeful that we can put back into the ranks of the employed, those that are now unemployed. I believe that those delegated to administer that act will give first consideration to those who are most deserving, and by this contribution on the part of the Government aid private industry. Unless we give our people a purchasing power, it is sheer folly for us to talk about recovery. I am not one of those who believe that we have so much overproduction, but rather am convinced that we have an underconsumption, and that if we give some purchasing power to our people we can find employment for all who can work, removing from industry the aged, who should be permitted to enjoy the few remaining years of their lives in peace and happiness through an assurance of income to enable them to live comfortably. I say to you therefore, Mr. Speaker, that I hope this House will agree to an increase above the $15 provided in the proposed legislation and starting these payments to those of our people who reach the age of 60. I am not unmindful of the difficulty many of our States will experience in raising money to meet any contribution authorized by the Federal Government and for this reason would prefer to enact a bill that would not bear down so heavily on these States. While it is true that 28 States now have some excuse of an old-age pension, it is also well known that these benefits are not distributed as they should be and many worthy old folks are now denied participation simply because they are fathers and mothers.

I know many cases, Mr. Speaker, in my own district where old folks are denied pensions in our State because they have children. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, these children are unable to care for them, and many of these folks who cannot care for their parents are themselves now receiving relief. For this reason it seems to me that to accept a plan of small taxation on business transactions might produce sufficient revenue to relieve the States of this burden and thus help the States that are now faced with this problem, and who scarcely know where to go to obtain the funds to match the Federal contribution. Of course, no one contends that this legislation is a cure-all, but I do believe that it is the first step in what shall eventually be an adequate pension for those who are aged and unfortunate. Title III of the bill does not give full and complete insurance against unemployment, but it is the beginning of a fund that will be built up that will furnish sufficient funds for the maintenance of those who will find themselves unemployed, for temporary periods, and I think in the writing of any legislation we are wise in making it temporary periods, for unless we do (and throw down the bars) we will find a great host of our people who will not take a job or work when offered. These are the evils we must guard against. We do not want to put into effect a dole system that will further break down the morale of our people, but on the contrary make men and women work when an opportunity is afforded to them. The temporary benefits will tide many of the unemployed over until they can find a job. That, as I understand it, is the purpose of the bill. I understand that another bill is before a committee in the House now that purports to pay or guarantee a wage to every unemployed person in the Nation equal to that of the wage paid in the industry of which he or she may be a part.

I have heard it stated, authoritatively too, that such an act would cost your Government almost ten and one-half billion dollars annually, and would not safeguard the Nation against the lazy and otherwise indifferent person who will not work, even though offered a job. What we want to do here is enact sane laws, laws that can be administered and financed without placing too heavy a burden upon our people, for, after all, every dollar that we give to others must be taken from the taxpayers. I appreciate the fact that this legislation is new and that through the next few years we can, by experience, profit by any mistakes we make. I for one believe that we will make mistakes, but we are aiming in the right direction, the purposes we have in mind are directed in the interest of our citizens and cannot but help to bring happiness to millions of our citizens who have almost given up hope. We are all patriotic enough, progressive enough in our thoughts, to develop ideas that may contribute much to correct some of the mistakes, if they develop, and for this reason I want to vote for this bill, even though it is not all that I had hoped for.

It has been impossible for me to study this bill as fully as I should like to have done, for the demands upon me are so great that time simply was not available, and I do not fully understand every detail of this legislation, and I believe I am safe in saying that this is true with many of my colleagues, and I say this without any reflection on anyone. A program as great as this one, with hundreds of plans and proposals coming to us, from all over the Nation, it is perfectly obvious that we must, out of all of these proposals, write a bill that will embody many of these proposals that are meritorious, and, of course, some of the impossible proposals we must not, nay, we dare not, consider.

The permanency of the Nation must be our first concern. A nation to have permanency must have security for its people. This administration has done so much for its people to bring about recovery, hence I hope and pray that this may be the one missing link, and through the enactment of this bill we shall have made a contribution that will bring about complete recovery. I have heard it stated, in listening to the debate, that this bill will take care of about four million old people, and through this care for a million or more others through increased purchasing power, thereby giving opportunities for another million or more to find employment that are now in the ranks of the unemployed. I wish I had the time, Mr. Speaker, to take up the other features of the proposed legislation, all of which is aimed in the right direction, for we have a host of children and invalids in the Nation that in the past have been neglected, but through this bill, if enacted, will find some security. I am glad that I have lived to this day and am about to have the realization of a dream, a day in which we will instill in the hearts of men and women, now almost on the verge of despair, new hope and courage.

Through the tax feature in the bill, as I understand it, we will build up a large reserve fund that will benefit future generations and that by the year 1970 it is expected that more than $32,000,000,000 will be in that reserve fund. I am sure it requires no great imagination to appreciate the good that we are doing today for those yet unborn, but in that day many will honor and pay tribute to the men of today we have had the courage and great love for others to make life more secure, to bring happiness and contentment to our people.

Recently the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], addressed the House in one of the finest addresses I have ever heard. He spoke about human and property rights in such a clear manner that none could fail to understand him, his deep interest in this problem of social security being inspired because of his own personal experience. Those who have had to toil in the past cannot help but be sympathetic to what we are trying to do in this bill before us. In the day in which you and I live, no question is of more vital importance than that of human and property rights. This subject should take precedence over other questions we consider so mighty important. The greatest contribution we can make today is to give an increased understanding to those human needs and human rights. The greatest gifts do not come in handsomely wrapped packages, but come to us "gradually and are the enduring benefits which have made possible the progress of mankind." Intelligent men and students of economics are taking note of how the concept of human rights are taking root today in the minds of our people. We think differently today from that of yesterday, and even some of our more conservative leaders are slowly grasping the fact that the welfare of his fellow man is fundamental. The doctrine advanced by economists today, even by many industrial leaders, would have horrified the leaders of industry of the past.

Even our men of finance are looking at this subject through different glasses, and they are beginning to recognize the need for more consideration to the man who toils and who must earn his bread by the sweat of his brow.

All of us are thankful for the courageous leadership in the person of the President of the United States, and he is the one outstanding figure in our American life today who is leading the way, showing us the way out.

As a result we have more sympathy today for the underdog, and we shall continue to manifest greater interest in him. I believe the individual who does not manifest this interest fails to read the signs of the times.

I am not opposed to big business. I want them to make a profit.

Capital is entitled to its dividend, but must give more consideration to those who toil and those less fortunate. I predict here and now that unless this consideration is given to them we shall continue to have economic strife.

There are many, however, who are seeing the light in spite of the others.

They realize that liberalism is not merely a philosophy, but is the only practical hope for rebuilding our economic structure.

I believe that many of our business leaders are progressing toward social-mindedness, and, even though that progress may be small, it is an advance in the right direction. "The great spirit of Americans should be translated into practical terms of moving ahead", moving ahead toward a finer concept of our fellow man, his welfare, the social security of all our people, all of which is our only hope for permanency as a Nation. To me nothing is more paradoxial than to find so much want in a land of full and plenty. We must overcome this, my colleagues, and it can be overcome by those who believe in the Master of Men. We must learn to estimate prosperity not in terms of statistics alone, but in terms of liberal solution of the problem of human rights. We must learn to look for good will among men and then act the part ourselves, even though we might be accused of playing Santa Claus. Property rights are the right of a man to use and dispose of his property in the way he may desire, and human rights are the right to life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. I am sure we will all agree that property or things in themselves have no rights, but we cannot say this of the individual, for when an individual begins to assert his property rights in such a way as to effect the human rights of another individual, that is when the trouble begins, and it is then that we begin to realize its importance.

Slavery was legal at one time in the United States, and a man's ownership of human beings constituted a property right, and against his owner the slave had no right that his owner was bound to respect. Not so long ago men languished in prisons for their debts. Even the great patriot Robert Morris experienced this. Can anyone deny the conflict between the property right of the creditor to collect his bill and the human right of the unfortunate debtor who has lost his liberty? I know there are many men in the United States today who think that they can do with their employees as they see fit; pay them the wages they deem fair; do with their individual business as they see fit or as they please, without consideration of their employees; close the plant at their own pleasure; scrap their machinery or equipment; leave for some other place remote and live in ease and luxury through the toil and agony of those who made their fortunes for them, giving little thought to those who have been thrown out of employment. We all know that a man exercising his property rights in such an event is bringing sorrow and suffering to those who have toiled for him in the past, being deprived of making a livelihood for themselves and their families.

For example, suppose that Henry Ford decided to build for himself a large industrial center, as he did at Dearborn, and had thousands of people settle in that community. These people built homes for themselves; they contribute through taxation to all the municipal improvements, contribute toward churches, schools, hospitals, and so forth; and out of this is a modern city. Now, suppose that Mr. Ford, feeling that he has a right to use his own property in any way he sees fit, announces that he will discontinue his business, tear down his plants, scrap the machinery, or, say, he has some labor trouble and in retaliation moves to some other place many miles distant. Here, my colleagues, you have a conflict between property and human rights. An entire city of men, women, and children, dependent upon that industry, with all the human ties binding people together in a civilized community, are to be subjected to misery and despair. This has happened in the past, and it is frequently heard that unless these property rights have precedence over those of humans they will do just this very thing.

Can one imagine the sorrow and trouble that comes into the lives of those humans who have given the best years of their lives in an industry that has given wealth to the owners, and these owners believe their property rights above those of humans. According to law, this might be justified; but before God it is not. While I believe we have a right that we cherish in being able to dispose of our business or property as we want to, but on the other hand we must not, in the disposal of our property, bring misery and suffering to others. My esteemed colleague and dear friend, Mr. LEWIS, has covered this better than I could, but I desire to place my approval on every word he uttered, for we must not forget the objectives of our fathers, in drafting a Constitution, that they had the general welfare of all our people in mind. The conception of rights can only arise when and where men are living together in some sort of society. A man who lives alone on an island need not think of the rights of others. When others join him on that island, he is bound to respect their rights, and his individual and sole rights disappear. It is not many years ago that a man could erect a plant, install machinery as he pleased, employ men at operating these machines, oftimes risking their lives at dangerous machines because of no protection afforded to them.

Today it is different. That employer must safeguard that machine and take away the danger in operating it. Likewise men and women of yesterday worked in all sorts of unsanitary places, eking out a livelihood as best they could.

As a result men and women did not live so long. Today it is different.

Now we have officials who inspect these plants, these machines and houses where people are employed, looking out for the welfare of those who toil.

That was a step in the right direction, and humanity has been blessed through these safeguards brought about through legislation. Surely we can do nothing less in our social-security program under consideration today. To frighten our people with threats will not do. To try to frighten them by bringing up constitutional violations will not do. The people of this Nation want this kind of security for the aged, the unemployed, the unfortunates, and no amount of this "constitutional bogey" is going to deny it to them. As a nation, we are blessed with everything necessary for our happiness, and we are going to have the courage to carry out the program of our President, who has so clearly shown in his few years his deep interest in his fellow man.

We have had men and women exploited upon the occasion of this economic depression. I think it should be classed as criminal, and mark you, in the not distant future it will be so considered, and I believe that our laws will so declare it to be. For a few thousand of our people to have all of our wealth and the balance of the millions dependent upon them is wrong. If it was ever considered to be right, I say to you that today it is not.

Our public-school system is teaching our boys and girls to think. We are educating thousands of young men and women every day and these are going out into fields of endeavor realizing their worth and demanding their fair share of the reward of their efforts. Mr. Speaker, we must rebuild this economic structure upon more equitable foundations. We must insist that wages be paid to our people that will permit them not only to pay for their actual necessities but to enjoy many of the luxuries so dear to our people. All of this can and must be realized if we are to continue as a great nation. I trust that in the enacting of this legislation we will contribute to our Nation's greatness and that it will bring peace, happiness, and prosperity to all our citizens.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN. If a point of no quorum were made and the Members called to the Chamber, in view of what was said by the Speaker on the floor of the House this morning, would we go back into the Committee of the Whole and continue debate on the social-security bill?

The SPEAKER. If a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is made, the Chair will put the question to the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. If we are going to get through with this debate and get the bill passed, those who want to speak on it ought to be here. It is now but 10 minutes after 4. I am always here attending to business, and I am kept in my office late at night as a result. If we mean anything by saying we are going to expedite the debate on this bill and the consideration of the bill, I think the Members should be here and continue the debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had something to say on that subject this morning.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] and members of his committee are in no way to blame for this situation. It is the Members who have requested time and who are not here to speak. They are taking advantage of the kindness of the gentleman from North Carolina. It is a wonder to me that their patience is not exhausted. Sitting for weeks in committee, considering the bill, and now on the floor for days in order to please Members, the chairman has protected them, and they should realize that. I do not desire to criticize anyone, but I do not want it to go to the country that I am not on the floor, attending to business. As Members know, I can always be found here when the House is in session. It is true that we have more mail than usual and more work than usual, but still when the House is in session we belong on the floor, especially those who want to talk on the bill.

MODIFICATION AND CANCELATION OF CERTAIN CONTRACTS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 93, to extend the time within which contracts may be modified or canceled under the provisions of section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, and move its adoption.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, this proposition is something that has been agreed on by the leaders on both sides who are in very close touch with shifts in legislation, and it is necessary that this be taken up at this time. Am I correct?

Mr. BLAND. Not only that, but with the administration; and I am advised that the President desires, in fact, is very anxious to have this passed.

There being no objection the Clerk read the joint resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 5 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1934, is amended by striking out "April 30, 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 31, 1935."

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LESINSKI, for 1 week, on account of important official business.

SOCIAL-SECURITY BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some dissatisfaction and criticism with respect to the way we are handling this bill. As chairman of the committee, I have done everything I know to keep the Members here and I think my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts, has done the same thing. Four hours and 20 minutes' time is left for general debate, and it can be finished tomorrow. I do not have any suggestion to make.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why the men who are asking for time to speak on this bill should not be here; there is no apology to offer for them. We are placed in a very awkward position. Four and a half hours yet remain of general debate. In all probability we can finish general debate on the bill tomorrow and then the bill can be read. The only alternative I see, Mr. Speaker, is to move to adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 17, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

(Wednesday, Apr. 17, 10:30 a. m.)

Subcommittee will hold hearing on bill H. R. 6459, relative to regulation and procedure for the award of contracts by the Post Office Department.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

(Thursday, Apr. 18, 10:30 a. m.)

Subcommittee on the Judiciary will resume hearings on bill H. R. 6510, and other amendments to the liquor-control law, room 345, old House Office Building.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

299. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting draft of proposed bill to authorize an appropriation to pay non-Indian claimants whose claims have been extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, but who have been found entitled to awards under said act as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

300. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated April 13, 1935, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of Albany, Berkeley, and Emeryville Harbors, Calif., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved July 3, 1930, together with accompanying papers; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.
